Selected on the basis on their playing ability on the gridiron and their outstanding scholastic records were: Wade Smith of the University of North Carolina; King Dixon of the University of South Carolina, and Doug Cline and Harvey White of Clemson College.

"These four outstanding Atlantic Coast Conference players once again point out the fact that good athletes are also good — and frequently superior-scholars," Carroll Chouinard, editor-in-chief of the American Peoples Encyclopedia said.

To be named to the All-Scholastic Backfield, each player must have a "B" or better average in his current course of studies, with final selection to the squad based on his playing ability as reported by conference observers.

Editor Chouinard pointed out that the Atlantic Coast's All-Scholastic Backfield included two students in pre-medicine courses and one each in chemical engineering and arts and sciences.

Wade Smith of the University of North Carolina: 5-foot, 10-inches; 170 lbs., a junior majoring in pre-medicine. During the season he scored 5 touchdowns, carried the ball 102 times for 449 net yards. In the Southern California game he set up a touchdown with a 27-yard run.

King Dixon of the University of South Carolina: 5-foot, 8 inches; 170 lbs., a senior majoring in arts and sciences. Active in track at U. S. C. as well as outstanding on the gridiron, Dixon caught 3 touchdown passes against Wake Forest. He was co-captain of the 1958 squad, and makes the All-Scholastic squad for the second year.

Doug Cline of Clemson College: 6-foot, 2-inches; 210 lbs., majoring in chemical engineering, this Clemson fullback played outstanding football in both the Virginia and North Carolina games.

Harvey White of Clemson College: 6-foot, 2-inches, 205 lbs., a junior studying pre-medicine. Making the All-Scholastic squad for the second year, White was particularly outstanding in the Vanderbilt game when he gained 105 yards in 14 carries; completed 8 out of 12 passes for 60 yards and scored both touchdowns.

Similar selections of outstanding scholar-atheletes are being made in the Big Ten, Big Eight, Southern, Southeastern, Southwestern and Ivy League conferences by editors of the American Peoples Encyclopedia.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUETY HAMMOND DTH SPORTS EDITOR

Tomorrow night's game between the Tar Heels of Charolina and the Wolfpack of N. C. State shapes up as mass warfare on the hardwood, a dream game, the irrestible force meeting the immovable object.

If the polls come out as they should, N. C. State will be number 1 and Carolina will be number 2. Irregardless as to what the polls rate the two teams, there is no doubt in anyone's mind that the winner of the battle will be sitting atop the loftiest position in basketball, number 1 in the nation.

The favorite? One has to say State, although they certainly don't want to be in such an unenviable position. The clubs appear evenly matched with the Pack holding the home court advantage.

How big is this home-court advantage? Well, there are games few and far between when a team is fortunate enough to beat Case on his home court. The Carolina students will be grossly outnumbered because they were unable to obtain tickets. The ticket office asked for, and got, about 230 tickets which were sold like hotcakes the moment they went up for sale. The game is, and has been for several days, a complete sell-out in the 12,400 capacity William Neal Reynolds Colliseum.

One thing; in favor of the Tar Heels will be balance, the best they have had in recent years. Stopping one man on the Carolina team does absolutely no good, for there are others of equal ability to take up the slack.

Such, it seems, is not the case at State. It almost boils down to this: Stop Richter, Stop State. True, the Pack has Lou Pucillo and other good shots, but without the big man having a big night they are under par.

Example the fact that in the only State loss, to Kansas State, Richter was under wraps all night. Against Louisville in the Dixie Classic Richter got only 4 points and State had to scrap every inch to win in overtime.

In its last game, against Duke Saturday night, State College was once again pushed almost to the limit by the sophomore laden Blue Devils. The final score was 67-60 and it is more than interesting to note that this was the largest margin of victory the Pack has had over a conference team all season.

It cannot be forgotten, however, that State almost always wins the close ones. State is a pressure team in every sense of the word.

Frank McGuire's young Tar Heels have also stamped themselves as a cool, calm, and collected crew. They solved the Wake Forest freeze with almost ridiculous ease, winning 44-34. They also beat Cincinatti 90-88 in a game in which both teams shot over 50% from the floor.

And speakng of the Wake freeze, what kind of strategy will two of the smartest coaches in basketball throw at each other tomorrow night? Our prediction is that the weather in the Colliseum will be cold as a mother-in-law's heart (yes, the freeze again.) We also believe there'll be more pressing going on than in a Chinese laundry (by State).

It is true that the Tar Heels didn't crack against the Wake popsicle treatment. But admittedly State has a much better team than Wake Forest, and Case may feel that his superior manpower can win such a game.

MURALS

Because of various campus activities and the upcoming final examinations, there will be no intramural activities this week. The full calendar will resume at the beginning of the spring semester.

CORRECTION

The Daily Tar Heel reported in Sunday's paper that the winning streak for the Carolina swimming team is 24. Actually, it is 25 straight for Pat Earey's crew, stretched out over 3 seasons.

Who isn't at exam time? But the dog days will soon be over and (so they tell us) a new era awaits.

When that breathing spell comes, maybe you should take a glance at the future. Have you given much thought to financial planning?

The State-Carolina Game: Basketball At Its Best

RALEIGH — In college athletic circles, fans like to brag about the Army-Navy football games as the king of them all when it comes to color, rivalry and excitement.

Wednesday night the two long-time rivals will meet for the first time this season. A sellout crowd of 12,400 is assured for the contest, and if Reynolds Coliseum were larger there would be more.

There's no national or tournament championship riding on the outcome of the game, but you can't tell that to the players. This is a "must" game for both teams, just as the return engagement at Chapel Hill will be.

Both teams are ranked among the nation's best. In the latest cage poll, State was ranked second by both wire services while the Tar Heels placed third in one and fourth in the other. Now that Kentucky has been knocked from the undefeated list, the State-Carolina winner could well determine the nation's number one team.

Two of college basketball's best coaches will be matching wits in a strategic masterpiece, while talented players from both teams will be matching shots.

State's Lou Pucillo, one of the best little men in the game, will be fighting Carolina guard York Larese for backcourt honors, George Stepnovich of the Wolfpack and Lee Shaffer of the Tar Heels will battle for the rebounds, while State's John Richter and UNC's Dick Kepley will stage a pivot duel which includes both scoring and rebounding.

There will be noise and plenty of it. The only persons oblivious to the stomping feet and clapping hands will be the players. Each will have a definite assignment, and concentrating on that task will close out any sounds.

There will be cheerleaders from both schools matching yells, wholesale booing of officials by the bipartisan throng, and hundreds of reporters, sportscasters and photographers recording every vivid detail of the action.

It's a spectacle . . . a game never to be forgotten . . . a post-season thriller at mid-esason . . . an indoor Mardi Gras. That's the State-Carolina game which comes up Wednesday night at 8:15. It's college basketball at its best.

Tigers Enjoying 1st Division

By KEN ALYTA

CLEMSON, S. C. (AP) — Clemson's basketball Tigers approach the halfway point of the Atlantic Coast Conference season inhaling the heady and unaccustomed air of the first division.

Press Maravich led his forces out of town for the Tuesday night game at Duke the proud but samewhat confused coach of a team that has survived a holiday season slump to come on again.

The Tigers, never higher than sixth in five previous ACC campagins, played their finest game in Maravich's three seasons here in mastering Maryland's defending champions 55-46 Saturday night.

That feat brought the Tigers up to fourth place in the conference with a 3-4 record for league games and boosted their overall totals to 5-8.

In reviewing his team's about face after the earlier slump, Maravich commented, "I wish I knew what makes the boys tick. They played a marvelous game against Maryland."

He was deep in gloom after they had come up with poor performances just two weeks ago in losing Charlotte Carrousel tournament games to George Washington and Pittsburgh.

Carolina Meets State Tonight

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's streaking young Tar Heels tonight face their first final exam when they journey to Raleigh to do battle with brother institution N. C. State, the nation's number 1 basketball team.

This game of games features two of the nations very top teams in the Tar Heels and the Wolfpack. In the last poll, State was 1st while Carolina held 3rd.

The winner of tonight's small war on the hardwood stands a mighty good chance of emerging not only with a victory but with a ranking of number one in the nation.

State thus far this season has had its trouble against ACC foes, although they are yet undefeated. The Pack has been pushed almost to the limit against every league foe they have faced.

In their last contest, State turned the tables on Duke's talented Blue Devils by 67-60 on their home court. That was the biggest margin (7 points) the Wolfpack has had over a conference team all season.

The Tar Heels, rolling along with three straight wins, have had little trouble in disposing of conference teams. Their closest call, if it could be called that, was in their last contest against Wake Forest when they solved the Deacon freeze to triumph 44-34.

The well-balanced Carolinians have all five starters averaging in double figures through the first 10 games. Sophomore flash York Larese currently leads the pack with a 16.1 average, but big Lee Shaffer has been the man in the last four Tar Heel encounters. Shaffer has a 14.9 average, but has had better than 20-point performances in three of his last four games.

Following these two in the scoring come Harvey Salz (12.1), Dick Tepley (11.8), and Doug Moe (10.9). Captain Danny Lots, the team's invaluable sixth man, has a 4.0 average.

The big men to watch for State are the two extremes, John Richter and Lou Pucillo. Richter leads the ACC in both scoring and rebounding while the 5'9" Pucillo, one of the best little men in basketball, is among the top five scorers.

Frank McGuire takes his crew right into the lion's mouth tonight as the game will be played in Reynolds Colliseum, dean of the Wolfpack. It is seldom indeed that Everett Case's charges drop a game in front of the home folks. The last time they did was to this same Carolina team, last year in the ACC tourney.

Gov. Faubus Proposes New Plan

LITTLE ROOCK, Ark.— UP —Gov. Orval E. Faubus, who closed Little Rock's public high schools to block integration, yesterday proposed what he apparently considers a long-range solution to the racial problem.

The governor, in his third-term inaugural address, asked the Arkansas General Assembly to consider a constitutional amendment which would permit school districts at their option to allot each student his pro-rata share of public educational funds or use at any school of his choice.

Such a plan would permit districts where no attempt has been made to integrate to continue segregated public schools while clearing the way for use of public funds in private, segregated schools in districts faced with court orders to integrate, Faubus said.

Senators Get Bills On Rights

WASHINGTON UP—A new set of civil rights bills was pushed forward yesterday. Backers of the legislation said it would show whether a new Senate rule will be effective in curbing filibusters.

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-NT) said the new bills—one of which would give the attorney general broad new powers in civil rights enforcement—furnish "excellent examples of what were the real stakes" in a session-opening battle over changing Senate rules.

Javits was a leader of a bipartisan bloc of north and western senators which tried unsuccessfully to get a stiffer anti-filibuster rule than the Senate accepted Monday night. This bloc contended the new rule—sponsored by Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas—isn't much more effective than the old one.

One of the new measures would empower the attorney general to seek injunctions against any interference with civil rights, including what it defines as the right to attend a nonsegregated public school.

A broad provision similar to this was struck out of the 1957 Civil Rights Act. That measure is limited largely to protection of voting rights.

Another new bill would extend the life of the Civil Rights Commission created by the 1957 act. It is due to expire next Sept. 9. The legislation would continue it to January 1961.

A third measure, already introduced, is aimed at curbing hate bombings of schools and churches.

The rules battle ended with the adoption, 72-22, of Johnson's proposal to permit debate limitation action by two-thirds of the Senators present and voting.

This replaces a rule in effect for 10 years. It required the votes of 66 Senators, or two-thirds of all 98 Senators, to throttle a filibuster.

In referring to the package of civil rights bills, Javits said the measure to arm the attorney general with broad new injunctive powers in particular will put the new rules to an acid test.

He called this "the fundamental civil rights measure which should be considered by this Congress." He said Sens. Kenneth Keating (R-NY), Hugh Scott (R-Pa), and Clifford P .Case (R-NJ) will join him in offering it.

Gerald R. MacCarthy Issues Glacial Study

Prof Gerald R. MacCarthy, UNC geophysicist, has proposed an origin for some unusual glacial boulders along the north shore of Alaska, in recently completed research studies.

An article which appears in the current issue of the Journal of the Artic Institute of North America points out that the last continental glaciers to cover the United States did not extend north of the Brooks Range in Alaska.

Nevertheless, Dr. MacCarthy explains, along the shore near Point Barrow, northern extremity of Alaska, are found boulders showing signs of glacial transportation.

Atfer collecting and studying 56 specimens from near Point Barrow, Dr. MacCarthy concludes that the boulders were rafted to their present position by icebergs which probably came from the Mackenzie River.

Dr. MacCarthy spent a year during 1949-50 in the Point Barrow area doing research as a member of the United States Geological Survey. He has been a member of the UNC faculty since 1921.

Brooks Questions Taste Of Campus Magazine

By NORMAN B. SMITH

Poor taste in Spectrum is evident, Student Party Chairman John Brooks said yesterday.

John Brooks, chairman of the Student Party, attacked the publication in the Monday night party meeting. He said he felt it was unrepresentative of the campus, that a lack of discretion was evident in some of the work, that the articles tended to copy other recent writings.

Dr Bernard Fleischmann of the English Department, an authority on "beat generation" writing, expressed the opinion that the articles of Spectrum were following a common modern trend. He said Spectrum expresses a fascinating attitude.

Dr. Fleischmann said that the writers appeared to be searching perhaps unconsciously for two things that the American college student cannot approach: (1) loneliness and isolation, (2) living under almost unbearable poverty. The contributors, in his opinion, have been brought up in middle class comfort, "feel oppressed by conformity and drive for material success. By removing man's fellows and his means of subsistence these people hope to touch absolute values."

Chairman of the University Department of Art, Kenneth Ness, said that the idea behind Spectrum is good, that it will stimulate student interest. He feels it should remain a publication composed exclusvely of local student writings, and feels that faculty participation will make it become "cut and dried."

The question of the immoral material in Spectrum has received considerable attention. Assistant Postmaster of Chapel Hill, H. D. Stewart, after viewing certain passages said he believes "it would be illegal to mail the magazine "

Spectrum Editor Dennis Parks said that "contemporary writing is less sensitive to the use of an expression that might be defined as obscene if it is properly used. We were not trying for sensationalism."

Dr. Fleishmann said that none of the material was pornographic, although some may be too direct a projection of emotional attitudes without sufficient objectification. He expressed his view of people who are overly anxious to register adverse moral criticisms of contemporary literature: "Apparently they know what the words mean. If they are familiar enough with them to know them they can't very well object."

Several student government leaders are concerned that Spectrum may be considered to represent the student body of the University. Student Legislator Jim Crownover feels that even though the magazine receives no funds from the student government treasury, all the printed matter contained in it should be screened by the Publications Board or some other responsible organization."

John Brooks said he feels that the appearance of the words "University of North Carolina — Chapel Hill" on the cover suggests that Spectrum was published under student government auspices.

Brooks said that Spectrum will "discourage literary talent that could be put in the Carolina Quarterly. Unless the work were worthy of being published there it shouldn't be of a good enough quality to be published at all."

Four of the Spectrum contributors this issue have had their work published in other magazines and books. More than one have had their work

Parks Says New Printing Is Possible

Spectrum will probably go into a second printing, Editor Dennis Parks said yesterday.

Also the Spectrum staff plans to put out a portfolio of prints, reproducing in larger size the art work appearing in Spectrum. They will be sold in many universities Parks said.

The second and final issue of the year is scheduled for late April. Contributors have been invited to submit work any time. A new editor will be chosen soon since Parks will graduate at the end of the fall semester.

Financially Spectrum will better than break even. Jim Houseman, who offered to underwrite the cost of publication after the YM-YWCA withdrew their support last fall, will not be called on for assistance.

A reading of some of the articles in Spectrum is being planned in cooperation with a local merchant. The time and place will be announced later in the week.

Favorable comment on the magazine was received yesterday from the North Carolina Museum in Raleigh accompanied by a request for copies to be sold in the museum book shop.

IFC Weekend Cancelled On Conflicts

By A. PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Inter-Fraternity Council Weekend to be held on the second weekend of March has been called off because it was found that a track meet was to be held in Woollen Gymnasium on the same time.

Phyllis Wall of the Panhellenic Council told the IFC some more about the blood program which the two organizations are going to sponsor after exams.

IFC members were given cards which are to be given to students under 21 years old and, therefore, need their parents' permission to give blood.

The blood will be used in operations on children from three months to five years old who have defective hearts. A special machine will be used to provide extra-corporeal circulation.

Because of the delicacy of this operation, which requires around 15 pints of blood, it is necessary to give the blood only two hours before the operation.

Before giving blood, the donors will have to have their blood typed at the Blood Bank in the hospital during the week between 8:30 a.m. and 4 p.m. Students getting their blood typed should indicate they will be giving blood for this program.

On the day of the operation donors will report to the hospital at 8 a.m. to give the blood.

Work is proceeding on forming a bad debt committee of the IFC Ed Moore, chairman of the project, said he had submitted his proposal to the office of the dean of student affairs. That office has given its tentative approval pending the approval the office of Central Records.

The committee is to assist fraternities in collecting bad debts over $50 after all other possible methods have been exhausted. The committee will be used only at the request of the fraternity.

Under this system the IFC treasurer is to contact all the house managers in February. The house managers will turn in the names of anyone they want the committee to take action against.

The four-man committee will contact each man and can, if necessary, recommend that his registration or diploma be withheld until the account is settled. If the student desires, a hearing will be held.

The office of the dean of student affairs will write the parents of those boys whose registration or diplomas have been recommended to be withheld.

If the students have not settled their accounts, on the first day of exams the Central Records Office will be given a list to withhold their registration or diplomas.

Year's Work Is Reviewed At Student Party Meeting

By STAN BLACK

An appraisal of the past year's accomplishments of the Student Party by Chairman John Brooks was the main topic of the party's meeting Monday night.

Chairman Brooks, after reviewing the history of the party since its founding, went over the planks of the party platform in the last election one by one, citing the achievements of the present SP administration of President Don Furtado.

Among other things Chairman Brooks cited the probable appropriation of funds for a new student union by this year's Legislature, the adoption of a women's visiting agreement by the dorms, and sound-proof phone booths in the men's dorms as strides forward due in greater or lesser part to the efforts of the Student Party.

He further noted the partial solution of the campus parking problem by the Bell Tower lot and the clarification of the duties of the attorney-general's office and the various councils as due in part to the party's efforts.

It was announced that an Interviewing Committee chaired by Jim Crownover will interview any student desiring to run on the SP ticket in the spring elections. The committee will meet the first three weeks of February at times to be announced.

Goettingen Competition Is Announced

Students interested in studying for a year at a German university may fill out Goettingen Scholarship application forms now available from the YMCA, Sam Magill, assistant dean of student affairs, or Larkin Kirkmman, 411 Joyner.

UNC undergradutaes, who plan to spend at least one more year at UNC after returning from Germany, are eligible. Some knowledge of German is desirable.

Applicants will be judged on the basis of the application forms and an interview, which will be held sometime in February.

Application forms are due by Feb. 7 and should be returned to the YMCA, Sam Magill or Larkin Kirkman.

Late Permission

Coeds will be expected to sign out and in on a special sign-out sheet for tonight and to return immediately to their dorms after the game.

DOGS AND BABIES AIN'T FUNNY

Free Lancing In Laughs

By SANDRA WHISNANT

"Humor must be humiliating or painful," free lancer Dave Morrah said Monday night at the UNC Press Club meeting. Morrah spoke on "Free Lancing" in terms of gag cartoons and illustrations.

Morrah's cartoons and illustrations often appear in Saturday Evening Post's "Post Scripts," as well as anecdote in his column in the Greensboro Daily News. He is also public relations director at Guilford College.

"You must know what makes humor," Morrah said. He listed three requirements humor must meet to be funny: be something the reader knows about, be a humiliating or painful situation, but not necessarily a cruel blow, and have a surprise ending.

Mock German distinguishes Morrah's cartoons, although he admits he doesn't know a word of German. Discussing Heinrich Schnibble, his German talking American, Morrah said, "Heinrich humiliated people we'd like to hurt - the overbearing football fan, the banker, the postman." Morrah said he is through with Heinrich for the present but has in mind a clubwoman for his next gag series.

Expanding on his mock German, Morrah gave some examples of the vocabulary. A barkin pantin sniffer is a dog; thus a barkin pantin sniffer snatcher would be a dog catcher. He calls a honeymion a billin cooin spell, and a blitzentinger is an electric fence.

"Humor is poking fun at customs, habits, traits and faults," Morrah said. "Most areas are open for humor," the free lancer said, "but you can't be funny about dogs and babies."

"Cartoons are the most concise kind of humor," Morrah said. Humor requires more rewriting than anything else because it must be condensed. According to Morrah, the important things are to form a concise phrase and get the point across.

Describing the hazards of gag cartoonists, Morrah told Press Club members they must not mind rejection slips and expect to sell only 10 per cent of their finished work. He added that the gag cartoonist must not be one "who is hurt by the fact that the editor doesn't particularly like him."

The markets are dwindling for gag cartoonists, Morrah said. The chief markets left are Look, Saturday Evening Post and the gag magazines, but "You can't expect to be in Post except every four, five or six weeks," Morrah said.

"The Post receives 3,000 contributions a week, of which they buy five," Morrah explained. He said there are 20 people who write 95 per cent of the "Post Scripts" for Saturday Evining Post. Morrah does about 30 a year for them.

"I have more fun drawing than writing," Morrah said. The cartoonist showed the Press Club transparent water color illustrations of his Wizard of Oz and other cartoons he has prepared for the Post.

Morrah's favorite cartoon is Peanuts. He has favorite gag cartoonists, but not gag cartoons "I don't particularly pull for Hazel in the Post," he said.

Boards

It is nice to know that the fight between the Board of Trustees and the Board of Higher Education has been reconciled, but in the process the function of the Higher Board has been altered quite radically.

In 1955, when the Board of Higher Education was established, if one can penetrate through the legal verbiage, it was founded as the ultimate control on all institutions of higher learning in the State of North Carolina, at least those receiving state appropriations.

There is good reason why such an organization should exist. At first, with every institution in the state demanding funds, conceiving for itself a purpose, and maintaining a competitive attitude toward the situation of education in North Carolina, there is need for a group to determine the function, even the heirarchy of institutions and their importance in the state. A second function that can be served to some extent is the overall planning for the future of education in the state.

The revision in structure makes it impossible for the Board to excercise any but advisory authority, and thus radically changes the nature and structure of the Board..

On the other side of the ledger, the trustees within the framework that the Board sets down for them as the purpose of the University, should have a maximum amount of leeway to pursue the broad policies the higher board set down.

A compromise may have been reached, but it isn't at the present known whether the compromise was the right one. The view from here at the present time is that it wasn't.

Student Party

It was striking that the Student Party could get as many people to its meeting as it did Monday night, but the meeting was also striking for the absence of anything like an idea.

In general the meeting was devoted to future plans of the party, but when two members got up and spoke for the need to harmonize the group, the editor felt that the meeting was a waste of time.

The Student Party has often been noted for its courage, its clash of viewpoints, and its difficulty getting harmony on occasions, but any group that pretends to open its doors to be a forum on issues confronting students on the campus is in need of the dividision that currently occurs in the student party. Moreover, there is something fundamentally wrong with the unity philosophy, for it implies that an individual is a party member first and an individual afterwards. Many individuals in the Student Party have come up with creative ideas, but as a party and as a group the Student Party has not been so distinguished.

To insist on unity within the party above the consideration of individuals and above the idea of making the most of the right courageous stand on issues is bad. To attempt to bind members of the party in support of candidates, all of whom they may not be in agreement with is worse.

The Student Party can serve a creative function, but it lies not in its unity, but more importantly on its divergent viewpoints.

A unified party saying nothing, which can be the case with both parties in the Spring, is worth less than a divided party some of whose members say a great deal. Ultimately the voters will have to decide in April.

GMAB

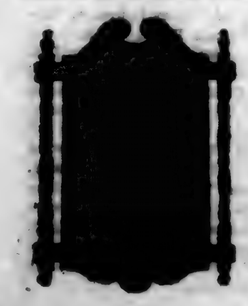
It may be the editor's imagination, but the Graham Memorial Activities Board seems to have done quite a great deal less this year than in previous years.

The Polls Committee has conducted but one poll. As of yet, there has been very little forthcoming from the Current Affairs Committee, and the publicity committee has gotten decorous posters out to the campus, but has forced The Daily Tar Heel to go out and do publicity work, something that is not the primary function of the newspaper.

The Petites Dramatiques has shown nothing, save a dramatic reading that was done earlier someplace else in Chapel Hill. A new semester is about to start, and with it comes the hope that there will be a few production models emerging from the ideas of GMAB, outside of the standard program of bridge tournaments and lessons, dancing Friday nights, dance lessons, free films, and refreshments and decoration for meetings and receptions.

The Daily Tar Heel

The official student publication of the Publication Board of the University of North Carolina, where it is published daily except Monday and examination periods and summer terms. Entered as second class matter in the post office in Chapel Hill, N. C., under the act of March 8, 1870. Subscription rates: $4.50 per semester, $8.50 per year.



Christmas In Germany

Frances Reynolds

I would like to begin a report about Christmas in Germany with a statement that Christmas in Germany is more formally connected with the church and the observance of the Christian message than in the United States. With such a statement, naturally, I have to qualify certain things.

Christmas in any land is founded in the observance of the birth of Christ. But in a land such as Germany where historically and traditionally the Church has been such a driving power and has so often been interwoven with the structure of the state, for example the Holy Roman Empire and the state Church aspects of the German church, the religious holidays tend not to stray so far from their original forms.

Christmas here has its commercialized aspects as well as the U. S., and one can hear the same arguments against it. The streets are decorated with mostly lights and greenery. The bigger the city, the more lights, but still they are not quite as bright as the lights at home. The stores are decorated, and the bakeries are filled with all sorts of goodies: gingerbread houses, Christmas cookies, all sorts of vegetables and animals made out of the German speciality Marzipan. The stores beckon everyone to buy the perfect gift for "his own." In most of the towns and cities there is a special Christmas Market. In Gottingen, as in most of the other places, it is located in the market place before the "Rathaus" (city hall). Here one can find brightly decorated stands with all sorts of bread and wurst to buy. Other stands are filled with Christmas candies, chocolates, fruits, nuts. Still others have things for decoration to sell: Christmas candles, balls for Christmas trees, and advent wreaths. In these aspects one may not find proof of a more formal connection with the Church. Some of these things can be explained as natural consequences in a modern, "capitalistic" society and others by American influences.

Even with these facts the commercialization is not on such a great scale as in the States. The houses are not so outwardly decorated. When a German student talks to me about Christmas in the U. S., his impression is that the main thing in American Christmas is the big business, the Santa Claus, Christmas parties, and Christmas dances; that it is not so much a religious holiday as it is a gayful time. The Germans have not so many "secular" Christmas cards and Christmas songs. They don't know so much about Christmas dances and parties. Of course there are persons in both countries to whom Christmas in the Christian sense means nothing. The average of these in America can observe Christmas, anyway, by a big holiday dance, but the average of these in Germany has to be held down only to the exchanging of gifts.

The German Christmas Observance begins the last Sunday in November with the first Advent Sunday. There are four Sundays in Advent—the four before Christmas. On each respective Sunday a candle is burned. In the shops, churches, and homes one see wreaths or other forms of four candles. Advent is the period of waiting for the long promised Messiah. In the States it, too, is observed but mostly by the more traditional churches, the ones that follow the church calendar, Catholic, Lutheran, Episcopal. But here is reaches the common man: To many of these people, perhaps, the lighting of each candle means nothing more than a necessary act. I'm also quite sure that to others it is really a waiting, expectant period, reliving again the hopes, aspirations, and dreams of the Israelite Nation.

I was fortunate enough to take part in quite a few Advent's celebrations—from church groups to fraternities to private celebrations. They all followed the same general program. Music is always a great part. Many religious Advent's songs were sung, musical selections from "the old masters" were rendered by students on piano, violin, and flute. The Bible and other short narratives centering around the expectant Messiah were read. Naturally wine, coffee, tea, and cake were served.

On the night of December 5 the children polish their shoes so clean and place them outside the doors or in the windows. In the morning they find, if they've been good, little candies, fruits, and small gifts. In the student home where I live, individual students took small gifts around to friends. My roommate decided I should learn by first hand experience everything about Germany, so at 4:30 a.m. we were going around the dark house giving little gifts. At 7:00 p.m. we were again awakened. Buzzers and telephones rang. As each opened his door, he found a burning candle and two apples. It was a gift from the House. The hallways lighted with these candles were really a beautiful sight.

The 24th is the biggest day in German Christmas. In the morning the family begins to decorate the Christmas tree. Good things to eat are cooked. At about 6:00 p.m. the candles on the tree are lighted, and the festivities begin. A special meal is eaten, gifts are exchanged. It is a family evening. As on Advent's celebrations songs are sung, instruments played, the Bible read, and other narratives centering around the birth of Christ. Usually at midnight (in Protestant churches sometimes earlier) the family goes to the church servcie. The churches are always overcrowded on Christmas because there are quite a few who only attend Church the one time in the year. This evening is called "der Heiligabend"—holy evening.

My Christmas Eve was spent in a ski hut in the Austrian Alps with a German student skiing party orignating in Frankfurt. On the 24th the owner of the hut brought in a tree, and we put very simple decorations on it and white candles. After supper each had bought some special cookies, fruits, and nuts. We lighted the candles on the tree and put other candles on the tables with all the food. We sang Christmas songs, and a boy read the Christmas message from Luke. Another American girl and I were the only foreigners, so we were asked to sing a few of our songs. The students told us that one doesn't dance at a Christmas party on Heiligabend. At midnight we went to the village church. "Silent Night" was written by a man in a little Austrian village. As I looked around I felt certain that it was a picture on such a night as this. We had to climb part way up a mountain to the church, but the steeple could be seen in the distance. Soft, deep snow covered all, and the few lights from the village homes gave a soft warm glow. It was such a scene that a poet could not recapture the beauty.

December 25th is called the first Christmas day and the 26th is the second Christmas day. All the stores are closed, and these are the days when most of the families just rest or perhaps visit friends. The remaining goodies are eaten and sometimes there are festivities in different families, but these days aren't as observed as the 24th.

A more formal connection with the church—I use the words connection with the church because if an observer "objectively" compares the ways Christmas is observed in the States and in Germany one would see more relationship to the observance of the birth of Christ in Germany. But I also use the word formal because the gratitude and praise that flows from the heart of a believer as he observes the occasion of the good news in the world, of the climax of the reevlation of God to many of the promise of reconciliation, and of the hope of peace on earth—are not things that can be measured or known by worldly means.

"Anybody Want To Argue About Other Rules?"

At Home And Abroad

Jeffrey Lawrence

(Mr. Lawrence is one member of the UNC debate team currently debating the topic of suspension of nuclear testing. This article is the first in a series in favor of continuation of nuclear testing.)

The primary objectives of American foreign policy are national security and world peace. The nation is united in its desire to reach these goals, but there is often sharp disagreement on how they should be attained.

One of the most bitter controversies is over a policy for nuclear weapons development. There are two principals sues: whether the U. S. should enter into an agreement to ban nuclear weapons testing, and what type of agreement would be acceptable.

Our nuclear capacity is the foundation of the defense of the Free World, and a stand in favor of its continued development cannot be proclaimed too vigorously. The prohibition of further development would be disastrous to the causes of national security and world peace, and moreover, these goals can be obtained only through its continuation.

The essence of the argument over nuclear policy is this: whether security and peace can be secured by international agreements, if any of the parties to such agreements nurture aggressive ambitions. The best way to test the validity of a proposal is to review the results of similar plans in the past. When the test ban proposal is subjected to this historical scrutiny, it will be found unacceptable.

The political situation most similar to that of the present was Europe prior to World War II. The Allies had decided that the First World War was a "war to end all wars." They proposed a system of treaties, providing for armaments limitation and territorial integrity, which would make future wars impossible. The first of these was the Treaty of Versailles which, among other things, limited the German army to 10,000 men. Then followed the League of Nations. This organization was supposed to settle international disputes and punish the trouble-makers of the world community with economic sanctions. Finally there was the Kellogg-Briane Pact which called for the renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy. It was signed by all the important nations of the world, including Germany, Japan, and Italy.

But the results of this reliance on international agreement to preserve the peace were somewhat different from the expectations of the Allied statesmen. In 1933 Germany withdrew from the League of Nations. By 1936 she had 35 divisions, well in excess of the Versailles limitations. In 1935 Italy invaded Ethiopia. In 1937 Japan invaded Manchuria. In 1939 Germany invaded Poland, and thus began the holocaust.

It is imperative to note the lessons taught by the outbreak of the Second World War. The feeble sanctions of the League did nothing to stop Italy in Ethiopia. The Allied statesmen sat idly by while Germany seized the Rhineland, the Polish Corridor, and Czechoslovakia. When they did move, it was to fawningly appease Hitler at Munich. Because there was no system for the effective enforcement of agreements, no means of detecting or punishing their violations, those nations with aggressive ambitions, Germany, Japan, and Italy, were allowed to accumulate an armaments preponderance. This made them feel that war was profitable, and they forced the Allies into six years of slaughter and bloodshed.

The Communists are displaying today the very same aggressive tendencies as the Axis. Indeed, the very existence of the Communist system is predicated on world conquest. This is not a matter of abstract political theory. It is a practical policy which the Communists are pursuing every day, and one which has had concrete manifestations.

First, since World War II they have compiled a long list of military aggressions which can leave no doubt as to their intentions on the Free World. Is it necessary to remind anyone if the fall of Hungary, Poland, China, and Indo-China? Korea should still be fresh in our minds. At the beginning the American forces were almost pushed into the sea, and it was only after two years of bloody fighting that we were able to eke out an uncertain stalemate and a truce which the Communists are now flagrantly violating. When Nikita Krushchev said, "We will bury you," he was not joking.

Second, in the last quarter century the Communists have systematically broken 50 out of 52 of their international agreements with the West. They have coldly refused to accept any disarmament agreement which provided for edequate enforcement. They have rejected the Baruch Plan. They have rejected the Eisenhower Open Skies Plan. And they are now rejecting any sort of feasible proposal for the suspension of nuclear tests made by the West at Geneva.

Peace will not be secured because a few men take it upon themselves to declare that, as of a certain date, a new humanitarian spirit will reign among men and war will cease. To assume that each new Russian propaganda maneuver is an indication of a genuine change in their most basic policy in blindness of the most dnagerous sort. In view of the Soviet Union's past conduct in international diplomacy and its consistent refusal to abide by any enforceable disarmament agreement, there is absolutely no reason to believe that the Russians are sincere in their negotiations at Geneva to ban nuclear weapons testing.

A Letter

My Dear Komrade Nicky:

Enclosed you will find my signed loyalty oath which you have so wisely requested. Our glorious experiment cannot fail under your leadership.

You will recall, I am sure, Hitler's outline in Mein Kampf of his future plans. You will also recall that the Capitalists were so busy protecting their freedoms that they took Hitler as a harmless politician. So I think that it has been wise for you to state our future plans so clearly to the Capitalists; this will make our victory all the more enjoyable. Of course we have the H-bomb and we will not have to repeat the mistakes of Hitler.

Speaking of the H-bomb reminds me that I have not yet praised the fine work of some of our komrades. I realize that our komrade scientists already had all of the information about the A and H-bombs, but it was good that we were able to receive, as a check on our work, all of the detailed formulas and diagrams of the inferior capitalistic scientists. It is very lucky for us that Komrade Klaus Fuchs did not have to take one of these loyalty oaths.

I should also mention the very fine work of Komrades Allan Nunn May, Bruno Pontecoruo, Rosenbergs and Greenglass, to mention only a few. I am sure you agree that the Capitalists cannot last much longer with such fine men working over there under such ideal conditions.

Komrade, I hear that there is a move in at least one capitalistic country for a plan that would prevent men from swearing to tell the truth on the witness stands of their courts. Needless to say, this would help our komrades in the field.

It gives me great joy to realize that we now have a billion people under our glorious system, that we have conquered 15 countries and now control almost half of the earth's land. Obviously, under your able leadership, it is only a matter of time.

Yours for victory,
Ivan

On Commercials

Chuck Flinner

Television commercials have gone a little too far. The other night I watched the tube for a change of pace. Terrible. I was very happy and life seemed great, then suddenly some joker on the screen sneezed all over us. I am not a hygiene fanatic, but this seemed to go across grain. It even gives the product some sort of stigma which would not be conducive to good sales.

I am also beginning to tire of watching the inside of my head in action. I don't believe my head really operates like the commercial would have it. That lightning and the hammer get on my nerves. If any one has a head like that, he should certainly see a doctor; the product found at the nearest drug or hardware store surely could not solve the problem the guy on the screen has.

There is nothing that makes me more angry than to sit down before the electronic picture box and hope to relax and munch on cheese and sip a popular beverage and watch a commercial that shows all of the secrets of my interior. Suddenly the cheese and beverage seem to be going to waste.

Instead of using science as a means of selling their products the commercials should appeal to some other soft spot in the consumer's make up. People may be gullible when it comes to science, but eventually they will tire of it.

Also on this matter of TV commercials is the question of control. Eventually unless adevrtisers work to restrain themselves from running commercials which are misleading and at times just plain dishonest, people will come to distrust the screen. The public, when they catch on, will not tolerate being cheated. Some sort of code or ethics is needed to prevent distrust of the screen. It could be reasoned that if they come to distrust commercials, they could possibly come to distrust the material between commercials. If this were to happen the crowd would become a confused mass of protoplasm unable to believe in anything, unsure of everything. Stability is a necessity to the public. Television must rise to the occasion and present mature advertising. The public is not stupid, they are merely quiet. When the furor breaks, television will have to answer.

Irritating the public or attempting to fool them is no way to gain good will. Some of the ad creators believe if they can irritate people through their ads the name of the offending product will suddenly come to mind when consumers are in the market for the item. That seems to be a negative approach. I would be sure to think of the offending product first in order to avoid buying it. When the company collapses we will know I was right.

I am not attacking advertising in general. I came to miss it in Germany when I listened to radio stations which had none. Advertising breaks up the monotony in a bad show and can add sustense to a good one. It is a good thing and the economy of the country needs it. However, with $10 billion spent for advertising, advertisers should be able to come up with $10 billion worth of material.

Brasilia

Dave Jones

On the CBS Program, YEARS OF DESTINY, the noted commentator, Eric Severied gave his views on the last ten years in South America, and then said that he felt that the future of the continent could best be symbolized by Brasilia. This is true, he explained, because this new city is the means whereby several important trends will be noted in concrete terms.

In the first place, the coasts of South America have long symbolized a reliance upon, or a link with, the old cities of Europe, and a movement inland would be a back turning process that would gratify many nationalists.

There is also the question, can the coast, and the coastal cities, develop the economy of the country, or can any country grow when 92% of its population is crowded into a narrow strip along the coast? Can they develop it while the abundant resources and opportunities that exist in the interior are disregarded?

Presently Rio de Janiero has a desperate water shortage and is hideously congested. It has nowhere to grow but up because the mountains and the sea have it surrounded.

The idea of building a capital in the center of Brazil is not a new one. As far back as 1789 there was agitation among revolutionaries for a new inland caital. The word "Brasilia" itself was first mentioned in 1822 by Jose Bonafacio, patriarch of Brazilian independence.

Today work on the new capitol, under the direction of NOVACAP—Urbanization company for the new Capital of Brazil, is in full swing. The Presidential Residence and the Hotel de Tourismo have been officially inaugurated. Flights are arriving daily at Brasilia's Airport. — Its 10,000 ft. runway is complete, but its terminal is still temporary.

The site for Brasilia was chosen with care. Actually Bonifacio's recommendation was only one degree off the present sight. In 1892 the Cruls Mission delimited a 19,000 Square Mile tract and in 1954 an American, Donald Belcher undertook to choose the exact site.

He used aerial photography and marked the tract off in squares in order to examine it. The area chosen is 2,260 square miles, has grass blue hills, cedar trees and rushing streams. It is 3,00 feet above sea level and has an average summer temperature of 72 degrees and average winter temperature of 66 degrees.

When the completion date, April 21, 1960, comes, there will begin a trek overland of offices and officers that will free Rio De Janeiro of its present population burdens. Rio will then be free to develop commercially as have New York, Melbourne, Istanbul and Calcutta after being superceded by new national capitals.

And Brazil will be free of the coastal strangulation under which it has fermented for centuries.

Tice Criticizes Contents

turned down by the Carolina Quarterly according to Editor Pepper Tice, although he conceded that some of the work in this issue of Spectrum would meet the quality requirements of the Quarterly.

Tice went on to say that "I don't think they should publish another issue unless they can improve the quality of the contents. I think the overall quality was very poor, especially the short stories, but particular pieces showed promise. They couldn't possibly compete with the Quarterly!"

"We are not trying to push out the Quarterly," said Spectum staff member Doris Berry, "just stimulate competition." Art Department Chairman Ness said, "The Quarterly can go to seed without something to jar it out of its complacency."

Reaction toward the art work in Spectrum was almost universally favorable. John Brooks felt that the pictorial art was the best part of the contents, and Pepper Tice admitted that the drawings "showed promise."

Ness declined to comment on the art work, but he did praise the cover design, citing the main weakness as too prominent lines of type giving dateline and price at the bottom of the cover.

Sidelights that drew attention were two advertisements in Spectrum. One, a plea for international pacifism, was placed by Editor Parks on behalf of the Liberal Religious Peace Fellowship. Parks terms himself a conscientious objector, but declared he didn't intend to inject political beliefs into the editorial matter of the publication.

The second non-business advertisement read, "Buy Wine, Compliments 'Six to go'," and was placed by an anonymous group of six girls.

Leaving UNC For Spring Term? Take Correspondence Courses

The University offers more than 100 correspondence courses from which a student may choose to earn degree credit and quality points. Students may enroll at any time, provided they are not attending regular University classes.

Lesson assignments may be sent in at the student's convenience so long as no more than four are submitted in a seven-day period. Although students are allowed 13 months in which to finish a course, they may complete a three semester hour course in a minimum of seven weeks. Two courses may be taken at one time.

The University accepts one full year's work by correspondence for credit toward bachelors' degrees, but requires students to take the last year's work in residence here. If suitable courses are available, a senior may take by correspondence, with the approval of his dean, the last two courses required for his degree.

Those who are interrupting their education to enter the armed services may acquire college credit while they serve their country by taking correspondence courses. As much credit as 30 semester hours may be earned by correspondence.

The Bureau works with about 2,000 students each year, including persons in almost every county in North Carolina, in almost all of the 48 states and in many of the armed forces' installations both here and in foreign countries.

Complete information regarding correspondence courses may be obtained from the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction in Abernathy Hall. Students who will not be attending regular classes this spring may begin enrolling for courses after classes are over Jan. 16, before leaving Chapel Hill.

Classrooms To Be Open For Study

Three classrooms have been opened to the student body for night time study purposes during finals and may be used any time between 6 p.m. and 7 a.m.

They are 110 and 216 Saunders and 101 Alumni. The room in the Alumni Building will be closed on Saturdays.

Smoking will be permitted in the designated classrooms, but students have been warned that they will be closed if the rooms are abused in any way or if the purpose for opening them is violated.

Several fraternities now have study halls in rooms in Peabody Hall.

Use of the rooms was obtained through a special committee appointed by Don Furtado. Members of the committee are Bill Norton, chairman, Julian Sessons and Sarah Adams.

would take nearly two years to adopt, the governor proposed a new state law, putting the plan into effect until the people can pass on the amendment in the 1960 General Election.

Faubus said the student aid approach would avoid the necessity of destroying the entire public school system in the battle against integration.

Faubus also proposed a law qualifying private school teachers for the state teacher retirement program. This would clear the way for teachers to transfer to such private schools as may be created without loss of retirement benefits.

"These measures permit the continuation of segregated schools where there is no federal interference," Faubus said. "But their continued local and state support of main purpose is the make possible education on a segregated basis where the people so choose."

Faubus' new proposals would bolster anti-integration laws passed during an August, 1958, special session of the legislature, which gave him power to close any school threatened with integration.

Dance Committee Hops

A new committee has appeared this year on the GMAB slate of activiites. The Dance Committee, headed by Gay Cowan, has been organized to design and sponsor dances for student entertainment.

This year the committee has co-sponsored dances every Friday night in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial. "Live" music is featured on alternate Fridays.

Plans for next semester include a dance weekend scheduled for March 6, which for lack of a better name has been named the "X Weekend." The committee has tentatively contacted the Dave Brubeck Quartet, The Shadows and The Gladiolas for the weekend. The price of tickets has not yet been determined.

Cuban Government Leader Defends Mass Executions

HAVANA — (AP) — Cuba's revolutionary government yesterday defended mass executions of Batista supporters, terming the death sentences necessary to prevent vengeful Cubans from taking the law into their own hands.

Criticized from aboad of the executions of Batista supporters convicted by military tribunals of war crimes, Foreign Minister Roberto Agramonte declared:

"If the military tribunals did not do what they are doing now, moving quickly to assure fast justice, the families of those who were murdered and tortured would take justice into their own hands and many innocent would fall with the accused."

By unofficial count the executions of the followers of ousted Dictator Fulgencio Batista reached 150.

State Takes AP Poll Lead; Heels Hold Third Position

By The Associated Press

Kentucky's basketball team finally lost a game last week and lost first place in the Associated Press weekly major college ratings as a result.

North Carolina State's Wolfpack, usually a contender for national honors and winner of the Dixie Classic this season, edged out Kentucky's Wildcats in the poll of sports writers and broadcasters.

It was an extremely close vote with Coach Everett Case's Carolinians getting the edge in first and second place ballots. North Carolina State was rated first by 48 of 130 voters and Kentucky on 35, but in the point totals it was 1,087 to 1,035.

Points are tallied on the basis of 10 for each first place vote, 9 for second, 8 for third, etc. Voting is based on results through Jan. 10.

N. C. State followed its Dixie Classic Triumph with rather decisive victories over Virginia and Duke last week to run its season record to 11-1.

Kentucky, after winning 11 straight, stumbled last week and dropped a 75-66 decision to Vanderbilt, a team with an ordinary record, on the latter's court. That was enough to knock some of the glamor off the Wildcats, although they came back to win decisively from LSU on Saturday.

North Carolina (9-1) retained third place with 813 points topping Kansas State by only nine points. Carolina and N. C. State clash tonight at Raleigh in a game which should test the belief of many observers in that area that they should rate one-two in the nation.

Trailing the top four in the rankings this week are Auburn, Cincinnati, Bradley, Michigan State, St. John's, and West Virginia.

Auburn and Cincinnati each moved up one place as Michigan State took its second defeat of the season. Bradley jumped two, from ninth to seventh, despite a one-point, double-overtime loss to Cincinnati—or maybe because of it.

Northwestern, upset by Indiana's defending Big Ten champions, tumbled from eighth place to 11th and West Virginia moved up to fill the vacant spot in the top ten.

The Poll

Top ten teams with first place votes and won-lost records through last Saturday in parentheses (points on 10-9-8 etc. basis):

1.	N. C. State (48) (11-1)	1,087
2.	Kentucky (35) (12-1)	1,035
3.	UNC (4) (9-1)	813
4.	Kansas St. (13 (11-1)	804
5.	Cincinnati (4) (8-2)	685
7.	Bradley (2) (9-1)	382
8.	Michigan State (8-2)	344
9.	St. John's (N.Y.) (10-1)	205
10.	West Va. (2) (12-3)	193

The second team: Northwestern 181; Mississippi State (2) 125; Marquette (1) 87; St. Bonaventure (4) 77; St. Louis (1) 57; Seattle 38; Oklahoma City 7; Portland 34; Indiana 28; California 21.

Slow-Down Showdown Tonight

By REESE HART

RALEIGH (AP)—Both North Carolina State and Carolina, two of the nation's top-ranked basketball powers, may decide to control the ball in their big battle here Wednesday night.

In addition to being a showdown scrap, the meeting could easily develop into another slowdown battle between the once-beaten rivals.

Every ticket for the 12,000-seat Reynolds Coliseum has been sold out since last Friday.

N. C. State Coach Everett Case said, "We could sell 20,000 tickets if we had them. There is more interest in this game than any I've seen since coming to State."

Coach Frank McGuire, whose third-ranked North Carolina Tar Heels are sporting a 9-1 record, said, "We're thinking seriously about using control ball. If we decide the crowd is too much of an advantage for N. C. State and their seniors have too much experience, we might decide to do that."

N. C. State, loser only to Kansas State in overtime in 12 games this season, is always tough to handle on its home court. It's rated No. 1 nationally in this week's Associated Press poll.

"The State team is a veteran ball club," said McGuire, citing the play of big John Richter, Lou Pucillo, Bob MacGillivray and George Stepanovich. "Naturally they're playing at home and that gives them an advantage."

This was supposed to be a rebuilding year for the handsome McGuire, who admits that his Tar Heels "have far exceeded our expectations."

"The trick is keeping our boys loose," McGuire explained. "I approach this game like any other. It's not a life or death struggle and I tell my boys we're not supposed to win them all. If you lose, lose gracefully. This relieves a lot of pressure."

Blond Lee Shaffer has been the dominating factor in the Tar Heels success. Sophomores York Larese and Doug Moe have come through fine.

"I was raised on this contrtrol type ball," McGuire said, pointing out that he employed it at St. John's of Brooklyn. "There is a difference between control and freeze.

Case and McGuire both agreed that they had faster teams than their 1959 editions. Case said, "We're just fair. We've just got one big boy, Richter, and that's it. We've gotten more out of our boys than was in them."

Fencers Whip VMI Squad

By CARL STRINGFELLOW

Under the supervision of coaches Dave Evans and Pebley Barrow, the Carolina fencing team defeated the VMI swordsmen with a score of 15-12 last Saturday at Lexington.

A small crowd of spectators watched the UNC foil team take an early lead in the meet with Carroll Raver and Carl Stringfellow winning all three of their bouts. Guy Ellis, in a series of misfortunes lost his three bouts. The last one was decdied by only one point.

With the score 6-3 the sabre team took over. After losing their first two bouts, the UNC sabre men rallied and won four of the next seven bouts, making the overall score 10-8, UNC. In this weapno, Tex Lopez was the Carolina high man by winning two out of three bouts. Neil Kelley and Jim Proctor each captured one bout.

In epee, old timers Bob Peebles and Clarence Simpson were accompanied by novice Bob Finley. During the first round, Peebles and Finley won their bouts, with Peebles winning again at the beginning of the second round. As Finley came up for his second bout, the score stood 13-10. With the coolness and precision of a seasoned veteran he polished off the VMI man, giving Carolina the winning point in the process. Bob Peebles added icing to the cake winning his third bout and the final score read 15-12 for UNC.

Tar Babies Take 4-1 Mark Into State Game Tonight

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Tar Baby basketballers put their 4-1 record out on the line for better or worse tonight when they meet a strong State frosh five at Reynolds Coliseum in a preliminary contest to the varsity event.

Both the Tar Babies and the Wolflets come into this game fresh from wins over other Big Four opposition. The Carolina frosh whipped Wake Forest 64-60 in a revenge meeting for their latest win while the State team bested Duke 70-63 in their last outing.

Last year the Tar Babies were unable to come out on top of the boys from Raleigh although they came close on a couple of occasions. This year's State team however, is not quite as tall as its predecessor, but it nevertheless boasts more height than the Tar Heels can muster.

Marvel Leads Wolflets

For the Wolflets the big gun of the attack is 6-6 forward Russ Marvel. Against the Blue Devils the Gary, Indiana product led the scorers with 14 points. The center in Coach Lee Terrill's attack is former Durham star John Key. Playing behind Key is another 6-8er Lycurgus Ward.

In the backcourt two boys from New York State see most of the action for the Wolflets. Antor Muehlbauer and George Finnegan usually form this starting guard combination, and between them they dumped in more than 2(points against Duke.

McComb eGts 23

Carolina Coach Dean Smith put together a smooth working unit to beat the Deacons and avenge the 19 point pasting the Deaclets had inflicted earlier in the season. For the first time this year Ken McComb exhibited his scoring potential as he netted 23 markers and led his mates to victory.

Another factor in the recent success of the Tar Babies is that McComb and center Jim Hudock have not been fouling out like they did at the start of the year. When these two leave the ball game it usually means curtains for the frosh since they have no more tall men on the squad.

Once again Smith will probably start a unit composed of Hudock at center, McComb and Bill Hubbard at forwards, with Don Walsh and Yogi Poteet at guards.

Frosh Swimmers Meet Raleigh

Planning Board Considers UNC Greek Locations

Three methods to solve the problem of locations for UNC fraternities and sororities were discussed by the Chapel Hill Planning Board at a Board meeting last week.

These methods included: a rezoning (now in effect), a special district for fraternity and sorority courts and the special use of property by an individual Greek organization, all on the basis of a plan approved by the Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen.

Since the methods are still in the discussion stage, it has been suggested that the UNC Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council and Buildings and Grounds Committee offer their assistance in finding a solution to the problem of locations.

Fraternities and sororities now build or buy houses within an area of zoning, RA-10A, as stipulated in the Chapel Hill Zoning Ordinance passed in 1955.

"RA-10A" means the residential-agricultural area of at leas 10,000 square feet and special conditions under which Greek organizations may build or buy a house.

The current zoning for fraternities and sororities has resulted in higher prices charged when the Greek organizations were making purchases. Also, some Chapel Hill residents complained they didn't want fraternity or sorority houses near their own homes.

The re-zoning (now in effect) involves a petition from a fraternity or sorority, a joint hearing between the Planning Board and Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen, action and recommendation from the Planning Board, and then final action by the Aldermen.

The special district would be something similar to the fraternity court, except that the houses included would "district" lines and not necessarily the individual lot requirements now followed.

Each fraternity in a "court" now must meet lot requirements of so much front yard, backyard and side-yard space and parking spaces. With a special permit, only the lot as a whole would have requirements. The placement of each house would be more flexible.

An individual fraternity or sorority would be able to apply for a special permit to build or buy at any location. Requirements in a consideration of such an application would include: yardage and parking space and, trees to serve as screening from neighboring houses. The application would be reviewed on the basis of the lot and a plan submitted.

This basis is considered to include more objective criteria and selection.

The Planning Board will continue a discussion of the fraternity and sorority location problem at future meetings on the first Tuesday of each month.

Continuous Urban Area On Seaboard

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower called last night for careful planning of the development of America's cities to avoid haphazard growth and unsound financing.

"We must see that this growth is not like that of Topsy," the President said in a speech prepared for a meeting of the Assn. of State Planning and Development Agencies.

Eisenhower said it seems clear that in the not-too-distant future the eastern seaboard from Portlnad, Maine, to Norfolk, Va., will be one continuous urban area.

"A new term—Megalopolis—has already slipped into our vocabulary to describe these giant groupings of central cities and suburbs," the President said.

Eisenhower also said the planning should be based on needs objectively determined, and not just on desirable projects, in order to make the dollars go as far as possible.

With the population increasing rapidly, more first-rate people must be attracted into the planning profession, Eisenhower said.

"We are a nation on the move; from country to city, from central city to suburbs, from metropolitan areas to urbanized regions in the corridors between metropolitan areas," Eisenhower continued.

Registration For Fashion Awards Open

A New York fashion school this week announced the awarding of four Fashion Fellowships in 1959 for senior college women.

Tobe-Coburn School for Fashion Careers in New York City announced that this year's awards, marking the twenty-first an annual nation-wide contest, covers the full tuition of $1350 for the one year course for the year 1959-1960.

If any UNC women apply for and are awarded the fellowships, they will join graduates of the University of Arizona, University of Oklahoma and Texas Woman's University now attending the New York School.

The fellowships are offered yearly to encourage able college women throughout the country to enter fields with unusual advancement opportunities for well-trained young women. Graduates have held jobs in such fields as radio and television, styling, advertising, buying and magazine editorial work.

A placement service is also maintained by Tobe-Coburn to help graduates find jobs nad assists them throughout their careers.

The one year courses is built around lectures by important fashion personalities; visits to manufacturers, department stores, buying offices, fashion shows and museums; and 10 full weeks of working experience, with pay, in New York stores and other fashion organizations.

Senior women may secure Fashion Fellowship registration blanks from the vocational office, or frm the Fashion Fellowship Secretary, Tobe-Coburn School for Fashion Careers, 851 Madison Avenue, New York 21, New York.

Registration closes Jan. 29, 1959.

Tar Heel Suspends For Final Exams

Tomorrow's issue of The Daily Tar Heel will be the last until semester exams are over. Publication of The Daily Tar Heel will resume Jan. 30.

No Free Telephones Insufficient Funds

Free telephones will not be installed in the Wilson Round Library this year, according to J. S. Bennett, director of operations.

There will be no free phones because the Library doesn't have sufficient funds to pay for them, he explained.

Don Furtado said yesterday he was in favor of having one free and one pay phone in the Library.

Originally there was one free telephone in the Library, but it was removed on the pretext that there were too many calls on the line. Two pay phones were installed to take care of all the calls. Since then the phones have been used infrequently.

A student government committee working with Bennett had the understanding that if it could be proved that fewer students were using the pay phones than had previously used the free phone, a free phone would be installed.

Last week student government learned that a pay phone would depend on library finances.

Letter Warns Heads To Stay In Budget

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Eisenhower administration has told government department and agency heads not to ask Congress for more money than is proposed for them in the President's budget.

It was learned yesterday that this admonition is contained in a letter to the officials from Maurice H. Stans, director of the Budget Bureau.

A spokesman for the bureau confirmed there had been a letter from Stans but contended it was not an attempt to gag officials who may be called on by Congressional appropriations committees for their views of Eisenhower's 77-billion-dollar budget.

The budget is to go to Congress Monday, and the House Appropriations Committee plans to begin hearings on it the next day. Chairman Clraence Cannon (D-Mo) said the first witnesses will be Stans and Secretary of the Treasury Anderson.

Since Democrats are already questioning the adequacy of Eisenhower's spending plans, there could be a row if committee members feel that witnesses are not expressing their views frankly.

The Budget Bureau spokesman described Stans' letter as merely calling attention to a 1954 circular, issued at the direction of the President, which spells out the responsibilities of officials in dealing with budget matters.

It is understood that Stans' letter directed witnesses to supply Frank answers to congressional questions. However, it admonished them to point out, if they voiced a view not consistent with the budget, that the budget represented the considered judgment of the President whose view of the situation was broader than their own.

Russian Proposal Denounced By Ike

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower yesterday denounced in strong language Russia's plan to demilitarize and isolate Germany. "An exercise in futility," he called it.

But Eisenhower, speaking at a National Press Club luncheon, offered "any assurance, any material move" to overcome Soviet fears of future German aggression.

The President's sharp words gave backing to an even stronger denunciation of the Russian plan for Germany made Tuesday by Secretary of State Dulles, who called it brutal, stupid and probably unworkable.

Dulles won from the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday support for his insistence that the West be allowed to keep troops in Berlin and have free access to the city. The committee informally approved a resolution expressing its sentiments after a closed-door discussion with Dulles on free world problems.

In his prepared statement for the committee, which was made public, Dulles said America must be prepared to face up to perhaps generations of self-sacrifice and self-discipline to counter the economic and military growth of communism.

The expressions by the U. S. foreign policy leaders added up to a reaffirmation of unity on such questions as Germany as Eisenhower and Dulles prepared to talk here intormally this weekend with Soviet Deputy Premier Anastas I. Mikoyan.

Eisenhower said in his press club talk he has no intention of making any new proposals to Mikoyan because that would transform the informal chat into a kind of negotiating conference.

The President said he wants to find out from Mikoyan, No. 2 Kremlin leader, whether the Soviets "are so sick of the armament burden that they want to find a way out of this dilemma." Eisenhower added that Mikoyan should be trying to find out the same thing from him.

"The most that can be expected from such an informal meeting," he said, "is to try to get behind each other's facial expressions and see what he is really thinking."

Talking of the Russian plan to demilitarize and isolate Germany, Eisenhower said:

"We think it is just an exercise in futility to try to demilitarize, neutralize, isolate a people as strong, as important, as virile as is the German people."

Eisenhower said the West should be ready to give the Russians assurances—"any material moves to show that there is no danger from these people and they shouldn't insist on isolating them."

ECONOMICS OF MENTAL ILLNESS

Project Report Published

More than 80 separate research projects of interest to business and industry are currently being undertaken by the faculty of the UNC School of Business Administration, according to a special report just published by the school.

Covering a broad area of subjects, the research topics range from business policy, international economics and human relations to such specialized subjects as industrial location, state income and the use of electronic computers in education and industry.

The report entitled, "Business and Economic Research at Chapel Hill—Fall 1958," summarizes a period of unusually productive activity at the School of Business.

In addition to the information the research is providing for business, education and government, special emphasis is made in the report on the value of research of this nature to the school's teaching, graduate and continuing education programs.

In releasing the publication, School of Business Administration officials said copies could be obtained upon request by industries and businesses by writing to the School of Business Administration at Chapel Hill.

In commenting on the report, Dr. Maurice W. Lee, dean of the School of Business Administration, explained that in addition to limited state appropriations for research, funds have been received from contributions made by numerous North Carolina businesses and industries to the Business Foundation of North Carolina, a private corporation formed in 1947 for the purpose of supporting the varied activities of the School.

Additional sources of research support from outside of the Foundation are the Ford Foundation, the Institute for Research in Social Science, the Committee for Economic Development, the Haskins and Sells Foundation, Price Waterhouse Foundation, the New York Life Insurance Company, the Urban Studies Program, the Carnegie Corporation, Resources for the Future, the Social Science Research Council, the Joint Commission on Mental Illness and Health and the University Research Council.

Examples of a few of the completed projects are:

Prof. Olin T. Mouzon has completed a book published by Harper and Brothers entitled "International Resources and International Policy." It is a study of resources and production potential through the analysis of problems which required national policy decisions. Mouzon's' study incorporates recommendations dealing with a strategy of security for the United States based on production potential, international resource inter-

Carolina Wins 72-68 In Overtime Contest

By RUSTY HAMOND

RALEIGH — Carolina's fired-up Tar Heels came through here tonight against pressure so thick you could cut it with a knife to beat arch rival N. C. State, the nation's No. 1 team, 72-68 in a thrilling overtime contest.

With the score knotted at 68-68 in the overtime, Doug Moe hit Lee Shaffer with a perfect pass. Shaffer layed it in with 20 seconds left to put the Heels ahead to stay at 70-68. The final margin was provided when Harvey Salz hit a pair of free throws with one second left.

State jumped ahead early at 2-0 and 4-2, but after Larese's jump shot tied it at 4-4, the Tar Heels didn't trail again until late in the first half. The Tar Heels built a 4-point spread and held on until McGillvray's lay-up State within 2 at 25-23. Mac hit two free throws to tie it, then Richter's tap put State ahead 27-25. Doug Moe gave Carolina a brief tie on his jump shot, but McGillvray hit another jump to put the Pack ahead 29-27 at the half.

Carolina came back onto the floor after intermission and ran in seven points before the Wolfpack had scratched. Carolina then led until 6:02 showed on the clock.

Once again it was Bob McGillvary who hit two straight jumps to put his mates ahead 57-55. Carolina got the lead back on Salz's jump, but got it right back again on Pucillo's shot.

The Wolfpack raced to a 63-59 margin which they held with only 1:43 left. Then Ral Stanley came off the bench and pumped in a jump shot and two free throws to tie it at 63-63 with 1:06 left. State played for a single shot, but Pucillo missed the lay-up and time ran out.

Carolina jumped off to a four point lead quickly in the overtime on Moe's lay-up and Salz's jump to go ahead 67-63. After that they never trailed.

Following Richter's two free throws, Stanley hit another to give Carolina a three point pad at 68-65, but Reiner's free toss and two more by Don Gallagher tied it at 68-68 with 1:07 left in the overtime.

Then came Moe's pass to the on-charging Shaffer who drilled the lay-up to put Carolina into the money at 70-68. State shot and missed, Carolina got the rebound and Salz was fouled with just one second left.

He calmly converted both shots of a one-and-one to erase any State hopes and provide the final margin of 72-68.

State, who had been No. 1 in the Associated Press poll, now faces a sharp nosedive. The Tar Heels stand a good chance of vaulting into the top position.

The Heels had four big guns in the victory, led by Salz with 18. Larese followed with 17, while Moe hit 14 and Kepley 12.

State's big man was Bob McGillvary whose clutch shooting almost pulled it out for the Pack. Mac closed with 15 markers, trailed by Pucillo with 14 and Stepanovich with 13.

Two of the State starting five had fouled out midway through the last half. Both George Stepanovich and Dan Englehardt left the game on five personals. York Larese later fouled out for Carolina.

Strategy wise, the experts were all wrong as neither team attempted to hold the ball. Fast breaking accounted for many of both squads' points. State started off played conservatively, but speeded things up when they got behind.

Statistically, State won the game, but that's not what the scoreboard here said when the horn went off at the end.

Program Altered For Student Loans

By ED GOODMAN

Students requiring loans to attend Carolina should be aided by a new alteration and addition to the University's student loan fund program, Dean of Student Affairs Fred H. Weaver announced Wednesday.

Effective Feb. 1, terms for loans will be more favorable and more money will be available to borrowers.

Except where donors' stipulations intercede, under the new term regulations, needy individuals who are good students may borrow up to $1,000 yearly at an annual interest rate of three per cent. No payment of principal or interest is required while a borrowers is a full time student here. Should he enter the military service directly after graduation, upon his request, payments may be waived for a period of up to three years.

The total loaned to one student may be limited by the Loan Fund Committee to an amount less than $5,000.

Under the regulations now in effect, a maximum of $800 a year for medical and dental and $600 yearly for other students are all that could be borrowed. Three per cent annual interest is paid, beginning when the loan is granted. Principal repayments begin after graduation. Two endorsements are required.

The availability of more money for student loans is partially due to the University's Dec. 19 application for participation in the Student Loan Fund Program of the National Defense Education Act, which was passed last year.

The new loan terms will conform to this national program except where the stipulations by donors make this impossible. The only exception is that the government regulations allow the borrowing of "up to $5,000." This rule will apply to the money appropriated by the government, but not to other funds.

The new legislation enables the government to appropriate six million dollars for student loan funds during the coming year. Of this total, the state of North Carolina is currently scheduled to receive $138,216. This amount is to be divided among the 57 North Carolina colleges participating in the program.

How much each school will receive will be determined by the U. S. Commissioner of Education according to a formula.

However, Weaver said, the new Congress is expected to increase the amount appropriated under the act. Thus, the exact amount the state will receive is still unknown.

The most money North Carolina could be awarded this year under the act, is $1,094,000. However, this could be received only if Congress votes the appropriation of 47½ million dollars, the maximum allowed by the legislation.

At present, 1384 students owe the University $509,000 in notes receivable as payments for loans, W. A. Terrill, Faculty Loan Committee chairman said.

Anyone desiring information about student loans should contact Harold Weaver, manager of the Student Loan Funds, 4 Steele Building.

Sorry Guys, Exams Close Sororities

Sorority houses will be closed to visitors during exam week.

Beginning Saturday, all sorority houses will lock their doors to all but members. Any visitor must knock on the door and give the name of the person to be seen.

The closing of sorority houses to visitors was a decision of Panhellenic with the agreement of each sorority.

APO To Run Trading Post To Sell Books

Harold Johnson, president of Carolina's Rho Chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, has announced that the service fraternity will sponsor a nonprofit book trading post between semesters.

Students who want their books sold have been asked to bring them to Y Building from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. from Jan. 28 through Feb 2. They will be priced by the student selling them.

Books will be available to buyers during the same hours on the same days. APO plans to charge five cents for selling a book for less than one dollar. A charge of a dime will be made for selling a book for over a dollar. Money taken in is to cover the costs of operating the trading post.

Students will be able to pick up their money as well as any unsold books in the APO room in the basement of Smith Dormitory after Feb. 2.

Johnson said he hopes students "will take this opportunity to buy books centrally at reasonable prices. It will also provide a central market to sell books and eliminate middle man profit."

Public Health School Gets New Scientist

Dr. James C. Lamb III, now a faculty member of the Newark (N.J.) College of Engineering, will join the faculty of the UNC School of Public Health this summer.

This announcement was made by UNC Chancellor William B. Aycock with the arrival of UNC President William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees.

Dr. Lamb will be an associate professor in the Department of Sanitary Engineering. He holds a bachelor of science degree from the Virginia Military Institute and a master and doctor of science degrees from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

He has previously taught at V. M.I., Washington and Lee University, State Department of Education of Massachusetts and at M. I. T.

Dr. Lamb is a member of the nation's leading scientific and scholarly societies and is the author of numerous articles that have been published in scientific journals.

Collection Agency

There is a proposal currently before the administration and the Central Office of Records to enable the administration to withold his diploma or his grade record if he has not paid his fraternity bill.

It is questionable whether the University has the authority to withold a diploma for non-payment of University bills and obligations, but it is sure that the University has no right to withold a diploma from a student for contracting a private debt. In financial matters, a fraternity must be considered private, since the University or state has no control over the funds except as far as the farternity pays taxes.

Not only is it in opposition to the idea of a University for Carolina and its administration to act as a collection agency for Carolina and its administration to act as a collection agency for fraternity bills, but in plain point of fact, it is none of the University's business to have any say-so in private debts contracted by private individuals, with private organizations. The University action can be detrimental to the individual who must continue his life after college and is counting on a degree to ensure either continuation in education or employment.

Eventually the individual must be put on his own responsibility to do what is necessary in incurring and meeting his responsibilities, and it is not the University's place to meddle.

It is true that the University owes a certain debt to fraternities because they provide housing and meals for a certain portion of the student body, and it is equally true that fraternities often have difficulties in getting their membership to pay bills. However, assistance in the form of writing letters to parents of students who are delinquent in payment of fraternity debts maybe all right if individual members of the administration deem it so, but to give a private financial organization the right to utilize the official state offices is wrong.

Perhaps, the administration may guide the IFC in finding a suitable collection agency to do the collection work for all fraternities. This may help the fraternities, and will definitely keep the administration from treading where its feet do not belong.

Judicial

Not too many weeks ago many student government figures got together to discuss the judicicial system, and out of the comglomeration of opinion and report came two important needs.

The first basic need for the University judicial system is for procedures to carry on trials. As it stands now, only the broadest outlines of procedures have been codified, and until such time as the Student Legislature outlines proceduces, will continue to be conducted in a different manner from Council to Council. Equal protection under the law is still to become a reality at UNC.

The second board need illustrated in that meeting was a need for a student bill of rights, something tangible which no court or administrative authority could trespass. Basic rights guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States such as the right to face one's accuser have been violated on this campus, and until it is put into law, violations can continue to exist. The Student Legislature in February and March may have many things to consider. This ought to be one of them.

Sidney Dakar takes up the lance for Carleton Putnam Like Mr. Putnam I moved to the South some years ago. I have had the pleasure and privilege of knowing a good many born and bred Southerners. I do not consider Carleton Putnam represents intelligent Southerners, and I think the New York Times and other Northern newspapers would have performed a disservice to the South if they had published as anything but a propaganda propelled advertisement the prejudiced and unscientific effusion of Carleton Putnam. My admiration for the New York Times and other papers that threw this exhibition of opinion minus facts into their scrap baskets is greatly increased.

On the morning of Friday January 9, 1959, my husband was in our light blue Bel-Air 1953 Chevrolet, waiting to turn into the parking lot behind the library. Somebody bumped his behind. He thought it was just a little bitty tap, so didn't bother to investigate till later. The boat got a pretty bad dent and the right tail light is knocked out.

Since $100 bills are scarce as hens' teeth around here, we would appreciate it greatly if some rich insurance company would pay for the damage.

Won't whoever did it PLEASE contact Arthur C Herring at Sloan's Trailer Court on the Airport Road, and get your insurance company busy? We're hopefully waiting for your knock.

Editor:

You said, "It is presented in the interest of making sense out of the column below."

Was it that you didn't understand Mr. Dakar's view, or, that you didn't agree with it? Of course, Mr. Dakar only gave an opinion, but I thought he made it quite clear what that opinion was.

As he said, "it seems that it is sometimes difficult to get a view that is different from the one held by the editor presented in an unbased and fair manner.

It seems impossible to me how you could be in opposition to all the views expressed in the Putnam letter.

The DTH is supposed to represent what the students at UNC are thinking. Since NC is a southern state, I think it is time that the DTH began printing articles with some realism, and not repeat ideologies of northern idealists who know little, or nothing, of the problems of the South, and, who close their eyes to the same problem that exists in the North.

I can hear their views almost any night on national news broadcasts.

Do you ever when listening to the subdued, measured intonations of symphony or song wish that somehow you could escape all the order of it and turn yourself to the production of a gigantic lcashing of wildly rhythmical music, reach crescendes of loudness and depth and shrillness never before heard?

Or are you disappointed when the snowfall abates; do you almost curse because it has but sprinkled lightly and given you not even slight demnstration of the extremes of weather that can be sent from the heavenly arsenal, because you want instead an insane lashing of the trees by a howling, vengeful wind bent on immense destruction, accompanied by stinging peltings of innumerable hurtling icy flakes of snow and hail, a wind so cold that each breath inhaled leaves a painful, choking sensation?

Are you sometimes almost driven to extremes in behavior, senseless extremes, when normal actions would be much less effortful to attain and the results much more prudent? We stolid, sedate dwellers of a temperate clime governed by stable institutions and with a heritage of Anglo-Saxon moral, deliberative unimaginativeness seldom abandon ourselves to the enactment of such wanton emotionalism and are usually shocked when we but think of it.

First generation men of Sicily worked the iron mines in our town. They had disembarked from the dark holds of immigrant ships and come across the Midwest in cattle cars.

The North Side was filled with their garlic patches and wine shops. Women went out to the old Antoine spring to wash their clothes on the rocks as they had done in the old country.

Bright, colorful by day was their settlement; gay and happy by night; but in the hours before dawn a calm prevailed. The only sound was the whisper of the pines atop Peuabic hill that floated down to course through the narrow dirt lanes and leave strange dreams of formless words, senseless meanings, mysterious hints.

I fell in love with Rosa, my first love, a lithe Sicilian child who had a healthy blood in her dimpled face and her smile was as full and frank as a rose that had freshly opened its petals from the bud. Her eyes sparkled like the drops of dew on a rose revealed by the dawn. We were both nine years old.

My admiring glances and chivalrous devotion won her heart as thoroughly as she had won mine, or perhaps she just let me think so in her impish, untamed way. I was wildly happy that October.

Rosa missed school one day, and I was sorrowful for I felt that life was incomplete if I didn't see her every day. The next day she did come, but there were tear stains imprinted on cheeks that lacked their usual tint of sun and blossoms.

As I gravely carried her books home that afternoon she finally told me, "Two night ago at Chapin pit. I followed my brother. It was late at night and no one saw us leave."

"But what happened?"

"Now I must go back. I-I must,"

That was all she would say, but after much pleading she agreed that I could come, too. She looked at me sadly and again begged me not to, but I insisted.

I met Rosa late that night after I had tossed and turned and counted minutes endlessly. She was waiting beneath the old concrete foundation that had long ago supported a pipe line running to a mine.. We walked up the worn, but now overgrown path to the top of the bluff.

There ahead was the gaping hole of Chapin Pit. an awsome sight, a mine abandoned when shafts extended too far without support had started a series of collapses along the perimeter of the excavation.

The full moon shone with eerie glow, making bleached skeletons out of the leafless birches on the rim. Shadows filled with blackness the chasms separating caved-in islands from the shores of the rim, and on them numerous maples still grew, making the islands appear as multi-masted ships adrift in a becalmed sea. Looking below we could see the myriad flecks of sparkling hematite flashing up from the mass of iron-bearing rock, giving to the sea monlit speckles of foam.

There were far corners of the pit where the winter winds drove drifts of snow that the melting rays of the sun could never find, corners that stayed snow-covered all year, even now in Indian summer, a month before the new snows would come.

From one of these corners, hidden from the sky by an eave-like overhang, we heard the rhythmical murmer as we fearfully, holding hands, descended the treacherous, winding trail being careful not to dislodge a single rock which would go hurtling down the incline, gathering companions as it went, making our presence known to the ones below.

Down, down, down we went until I could imagine a prickly heat filtering up through crevasses and fissures far below. The noises now came in tumbling tumult, echoed from wall to wall, outcrop to island in that cavernous dungeon.

Rosa dragged me on. Her hand was getting unbearably hot. The reflected glow from the far walls illuminated her dialated, motionless pupils and danced menacingly in the droplets of perspiration on her forehead.

We skirted massive boulders and piles of rock, crossed rusted track, tumbled over shoring timbers, drawing ever closer to that snowdrifted cave where the ghastly shadows of high-leaping flames painted ever-changing murals on the rock above. Louder was the pulsating of the bizarre rhythm. Soul-wrenching tones of wailing, vibrant instrumentation were accompanied by litanies chanted in a language kindred to neither English nor Italian.

One more pile of sharp chunks of ore to clamber over and we would see it. Every hair stood on end; every pore of my body screamed and shivered in goose-pimpled agony; my mouth felt as though I had placed a red hot iron inside it and blistered every surface. Only a few feet more to crawl — we would view those unspeakable rites.

There was silence, utter silence, until from above I heard a shifting groan, then a ripping sound, then a deafening crackle, and boulders, trees, dirt, tons and tons and tons came hurtling down. Nature in her never-ending attempts to smooth out the wrinkled skin of this planet had found the overhang above the cave too haughty a defier of the force of gravity.

When I recovered from the shock and looked up to the eastern sky I saw the stars fading and knew that dawn was coming soon.

On Commercials

Ron Shumate

In a recent column, one of the staffers of The Daily Tar Heel stated that TV commercials have "gone a little too far."

It would seem, after reading the remainder of his soliloquy, that the writer himself has "gone a little too far" with his accusations.

He said that people will eventually tire of science. If they do, and I doubt very seriously that they will, television will be the least affected medium of any in the country. People cannot, and further, WILL not tire of science.

The statement that commercials "are misleading and at times just plain dishonest" is, in itself, a misleading, unqualified and untrue statement.

Leading adevrtising men, though they may be admittedly biased, say that less than one per cent of advertising today is dishonest. One can't condemn the whole television industry because of a mere ONE PER CENT—can one?

Furthermore, the Food and Drug Act, the Federal Trade Commission and other organizations, acts and so forth, do not permit false advertising. And it's no secret, either.

However, I do agree with the statement that the irritation method of advertising is "no way to gain good will." But one must admit that this method is effective to some degree.

Writer Flinner also said that "some joker on the screen sneezed all over us." My dear boy—this is good advertising, whether or not you approve of it. If the "joker on the screen" sneezes all over someone and gives him a cold, the most natural thing in the world to do is to rush right out and buy a product to ease the discomforts of a stuffy head—namely the product which is most prominent in your stuffy mind. And it works too! Believe it or not.

Television commercials, I will agree, are rather tiresome at times. At many times, in fact. One of the most annoying things in the living room is the constant interruptions of some "joker" dressed in a doctor's uniform telling us how to keep away "harmful bacteria." And everyone knows we breathe in scads of the little monsters with each breath.

But the commercials prove useful oftimes, as they afford one a chance to dash to the kitchen for another nip of cheese and a popular beverage (which, itself, is advertised on said picture tube).

So I suppose Mr. Flinner will just have to "grin and bear it."

Politics

James Reston

The new year has opened with Khrushchev barking at the moon and half of Washington struggling for the mind and power of President Eisenhower.

Ever since the election the President has receded into the background. He has had little to say to the country. He has almost abandoned what used to be called his "weekly" press conference. He has carried on the usual winter social schedule, but even here he has seemed bored and remote.

When the members of the diplomatic corps went to the White House recently, he arrived late, hurried them along through the reception line without his usual cheerful little chats, and then abandoned them for a local restaurant owner who came in after dinner.

He had no time to see the historians and scientists of the nation who have been here all week. He did not have his usual conference with the Democratic party leaders before his legislative program was set, and he now confronts the Eighty-sixth Congress with half his Cabinet in opposition to his emphasis on economy and the status quo.

Accordingly, everybody close to the seats of power here is vying for control of policy. The moderate Democratic leaders have come up with their own legislative program. The liberal Deemocrats are trying to push their leaders to the left on civil rights and welfare programs, and the liberal Republicans in the Senate are challenging the conservatives for direction of the G. O. P. minority.

This revolt of the Senate liberals illustrates two points: they feel that the President is tending more and more to identify their party with Taft conservative policies which they believe contributed to the G. O. P. defeats in November, and they feel that he is taking most of his advice on Congressional questions from the conservatives.

The developing conflict here is not merely one between Republicans and Democrats, between the Executive and the Congress, or between the "savers" and the "spenders"—though they are all involved in the battle.

The issue goes deeper than that: it is philosophical as well as political, and it cuts across both branches of the Government, and both parties.

Dr. James R. Killian Jr., special assistant to the President for science and technology, made a speech to the national meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science here this week in which he referred to this deeper issue of the national goal and purpose.

"We have forged ahead," he said, "because we wanted things to change. We have wanted to look forward and not backward. The revolution of modern man—the revolution which has found its fullest expression here in the United States—lies essentially in this: it is the revolt against things as they are when there are ways of doing things better * * * it is a revolution against all the forces which hinder man in building a better life * * *"

Dr. Killian was not referring to the conflict within the Government; he was talking primarily about science; but he did define the philosophy that is in controversy here.

"What we are concerned with basically," he observed, "is the importance which the American people give to the factor of excellence in our society. It is basically important that we achieve a greater respect for learning, a greater pride in intellectual achievement."

One hears this same theme being debated by the arriving Congressmen, by the young liberals in the Cabinet, by the young Foreign Service officers in the State Department. But at the point of transition to policy, it invokes stubborn resistance.

For there is a growing national issue here—only intermittently engaging the President—on whether the nation can afford to translate this faith into policies. It is the ancient conflict, beyond partisan politics, between the pessimists and the optimists, between those who want to concentrate on stopping bad things and those who want to concentrate on positive new programs, between those who still have the zest and audacity to pioneer and those who are weary and find it more comfortable to defend the familiar. — The New York Times.

Home & Abroad

Jeffrey Lawrence

Two lessons have emerged from yesterday's survey of twentieth century disarmament negotiations. First, international agreement have in the past been unable to preserve world peace in the presence of an aggressor nation. Second, the Soviet Union, in spite of its peace overtures, is such an aggressor.

The reason for the dismal failure of past agreements was their total lack of means of effective enforcement. True to pre-World War II form, there has been no practical plan for a test ban even proposed, much less cacepted by the Russians. The plans put forth thus far have no effective means of either administration, inspection, or punishment of violations.

The advocates of international agreement state that their plan will be administered by some mystical "international body." They refer apparently to the United Nations, but the U.N., because of the limitations of its charter, is totally unable to fulfill this purpose. Article 24 of the U.N. Charter gives the Security Council jurisdiction over all matters dealing with peace and security. Article 26 gives the Security Council exclusive control over matters concerning disarmament. We see then that there is absolutely no way to circumvent the Soviet veto.

Furthermore, an inspection body could not be set up as a special agency, because this would be outside the Security Council. And since a special agency is the only U.N. organization to which a non-U.N. member may belong, Red China could not be included in the treaty. The failure to include a nation of the great military power of Communist China would cripple the agreement before it got under way.

If the supporters of international agreement have some other organization in mind, they have not mentioned it. It is difficult to believe that they seriously consider creating a new U.N., one which would have no hope of acceptance by the Communist Bloc.

The second area of inadequacy is that of detection of test ban violations. The most authoritative source on the possibility of effective test detection is the report of the atomic scientists who met last summer at Geneva. The report revealed that there were grave limitations on the ability of scientists to detect nuclear blasts, especially of the low magniture and high altitude variety.

The U.S. has nuclear weapons as low as 100 tons TNT in force, and there is no reason to assume that Russia does not have comparable armaments. But the Geneva Report states that detection of blasts of less than one kiloton in magnitude is extremely unreliable. The American low-yield weapons are one tenth this size. Therefore, the inspection system devised thus far, that of strategically placed detection stations, even with ground inspection teams, is totally inadequate for the detection of low-yield weapons. Since future nuclear development will be concentrated in the field of small tactical weapons, this is a glaring weakness.

The third inadequacy is the total lack of punitive measures in the event of violations. There has not been a single proposal made in this connection. Do the advocates of international agreement hope to cripple a nation with the vast resources of Russia with the same feeble economic sanctions which would not even work against Italy? Certainly military action is out of the question. In view of Russia's massive military might this would engender a holocaust just as devestating as the universally dreaded Third World War.

An international agreement to prohibit the further testing of nuclear weapons is absolutely unenforceable. The adoption of such a policy by the United States can lead only to the acquisition of an armaments preonderance by the Communist Bloc. The Second World War has shown that a nation with an armaments preponderance believes that war is profitable as an instrument of national policy. The road to peace lies not in giving the Russians a golden opportunity to assume this advantage, while the Free World sits idly by napping in its idealistic daydreams. War must be made unprofitable, and the only way to do this is to preserve the balance of military power.

A comparison of Communist and American military strength will show that the further development of nuclear weapons is essential to the preservation of the balance of military power. In divisional strength the Soviet Union outnumbers the U.S. 175 to 15, and this figure does not include either Communist China or the satellites. Moreover, Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald A. Quarles recently admitted that the Soviet Union has a "general superiority in its ground force equipment."

The Communists have an overwhelming superiority in manpower and conventional armaments. The United States must compensate for the Russian preponderance in this field, and the only way to do so is by the maintenance and development of its nuclear capacity. Indeed, this principle is publicly acknowledged as the foundation of American military policy. On 17 Nov. 1958 Secretary of Defense Neil McElroy announced an armed forces cut of 55,000 men and reiterated the U. S. policy of reliance on the tactical use of nuclear weapons and massive retaliation.

Some critics of the present policy have wondered why, if both the U.S. and the Soviet Union possess sufficient nuclear stockpiles to insure mutual annihilation, it is necessary to continue development. This is because it is necessary to increase the applicability of the weapons. No weaopn is of any value if its destructive force is so great that it endangers the people that use it or the civilian population of a friendly nation under attack. The development of "clean" bombs and tactical weapons will serve this purpose.

World peace is maintained only by the preservation of the balance of military power. This balance would be upset by an international agreement to ban the further testing of nuclear weapons, because such an agreement's total lack of means of effective enforcement would permit the Communist Bloc to accumulate an armaments preponderance. Furthermore, because of the Communist manpower and conventional armaments advantage and the urgency of increasing the flexibility of our nuclear warfare capability, the maintenance and development of its nuclear capability is an essential element of the fundamental American policy of preserving the balance of military power.

FOUR CANDLES—The UNC Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures and the Communications Center received gifts of equipment and money this week from the broadcasters of North Carolina. Last week WUNC-TV celebrated its fourth birthday.

State Broadcasters Help UNC Enlarge Radio, TV Program

Broadcasters of North Carolina are assisting the UNC Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures and the Communications Center to undertake an enlarged program of courses for staff members already employed in TV and radio stations of the state, as well as for students in residence.

Harold Essex of WSJS in Winston-Salem, chairman of the N. C. Broadcasting Foundation, presided over the annual meeting of the foundation's board of directors and revealed current accomplishment and goals including equipment and money gifts worth over $20,000.

The Broadcasting Foundation aids financially and otherwise in the teaching and research program in the Communications Center at Chapel Hill and in the technical laboratory at State College in Raleigh.

Among the prospects immediately in sight are summer short courses for training radio and televisio personnel, and new practical short courses for those already presently in communications.

Essex joined Earl Wynn, director of the UNC Communications Center, in announcing a current campaign among the broadcasters of the state to raise funds for a two-camera chain for teaching purposes for students at Chapel Hill. A total of $3,400 has been raised thus far.

The broadcasters also announced their intention to obtain a larger membership in the foundation among all broadcasting stations in the state.. There are 42 charter members. "We are working now on an expansion of our membership," said Essex.

The Communications Center has benefitted substantially from the generosity of the N. C. Broadcasting Foundation. This includes donations of equipment, as well as actual funds. Among the items of equipment donated by member stations to the University's broadcastig-teaching facility are:

1. A ten-kilowatt FM transmitter, given by WBT, Charlotte, worth about $7,500.

2. Two turntables and two consoles given by WSJS in Winston-Salem, worth about $3,000.

3. A complete "Columbia Master Works Library," by WDNC, Durham worth about $4,000.

4. A Sesac Music Library, which was given outright.. The usual charge to stations is $40 a month.

5. The Associated Music Library, given by Associated Music Library, Inc. of New York, N. Y., valued at $3,000.

Viewpoints Are Varied On ABC Vote

By NEIL MURPHY

Eight Chapel Hill merchants have indicated they are in favor of having an ABC store in or near Chapel Hill. Only four out of twelve merchants interviewed this week answered in the negative.

The question of ABC stores in Orange County will be decided in a county-wide election Feb. 3

Ted Danziger said, "If it would be possible to eliminate drink, I would be for it. Since it is not, I don't see why we should not bring a store near Chapel Hill. We should get the money for our schools which need it badly."

Opposed to drink was Clyde Eubank. He said, "I'm absolutely opposed to it. It is public enemy number one. More evil than good has resulted from it."

J. B. Robbins indicated that he was for legal alcohol in Chapel Hill. "I think it would be a good thing from the point of taxation. It might keep Orange County money in the county. Since drinking can't be controlled, let's keep the money here."

"I'm in favor of it myself. Orange County should benefit from money spent for that purpose," said H. S. McGinty of the Carolina Sport Shop.

"I could be nothing but for it," said Joe Augustine at Stevens-Shepherd.

Mrs. Harry Macklin of Harry's said, "It definitely should pass."

"I'm a fundamentalist, a Christian and a teetotaler. It does no one any good. I'll vote against it." This was the comment of druggist Howard Yandale at Sutton's Drug Store.

Milton Julian at Milton's said, "I'd hate to see extra revenue come by that means. We would then be known as the drinkingest as well as the best dressed University in America."

"I'd be definitely for it. Most of my employes would too," said Richmond Sloan of Wentworth-Sloan Jewlers.

The Intimate Book Shop was represented by Paul Smith, who said, "I hope to see it pass."

Egypt Refuses Recognition To Communist East Germany

BONN, Germany — (AP) — President Nasser has refused to recognize the communist regime of East Germany, a spokesman for the West German government said yesterday.

The spokesman said this assurance was given the West German ambassador in Cairo, Walther Becker, by the United Arab Republic president himself last week. This was reported to the cabinet yesterday by Foreign Minister Heinrich Von Brentano.

The West German government was jolted when the East German premier, Otto Grotewohl, claimed after visiting Cario last week that Nasser had agreed to consular relations. Bonn threatens to break off relations with nations recognizing the East German regime.

Becker reported that the East German trade delegation in Cairo would be given consular status but without full diplomatic recognition under international law.

In Damascus there would be no East German consulate, only a trade mission, and in East Berlin there would be no United Arab Consulate, Becker reported.

The cabinet expressed regret that Cairo had decided to accord consular status to the trade mission, but decided this did not constitute recognition.

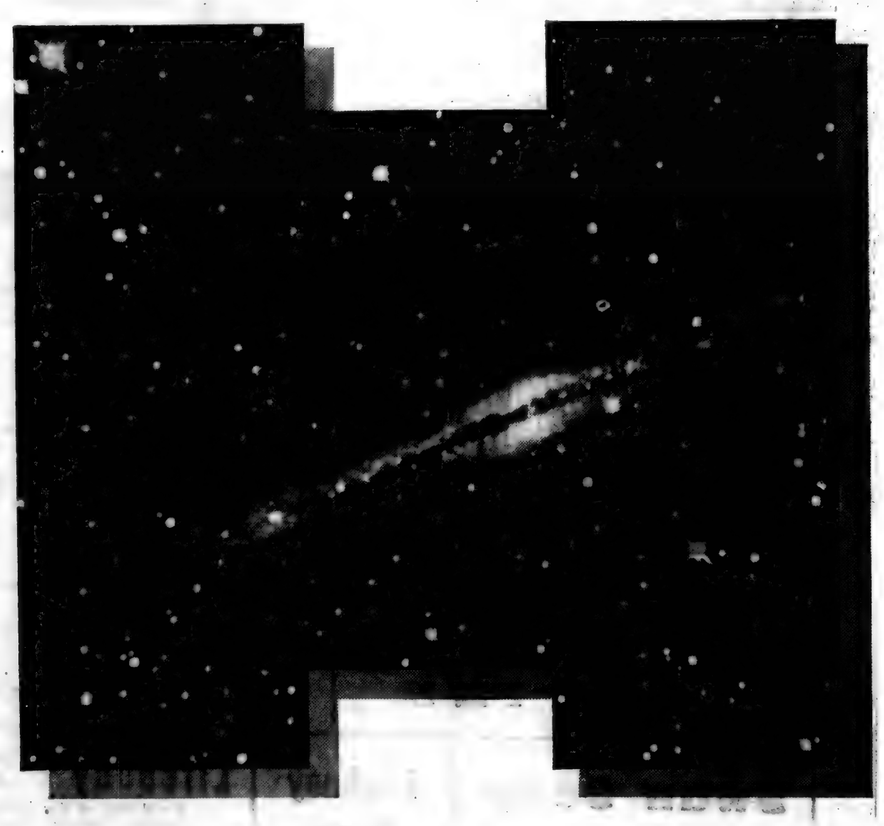
GROOMING ELECTRONICS FOR THE SPACE AGE



Systems in the Air

The march of electronics into the Space Age is being quickened as a result of Hughes work in airborne electronics systems.

One such development is the Hughes Electronic Armament System, which pilots high-speed jet interceptors to enemy targets, launching Hughes air-to-air guided missiles, and flies the plane home. Even more sophisticated Electronic Armament Systems completely outstrip those presently released for publication.

Working on space satellites, Hughes engineers are active in the preliminary design of guidance and control systems, communication and telemetry systems, sensing devices using infrared, optical and radar techniques.

Information resulting from Hughes study in the fields of air-to-air and ballistic guided missiles is presently paying dividends into the fund of space knowledge.

Hughes engineers have developed space hardware using high-reliability wire wrapping to replace soldered connections and miniaturized "cordwood" circuit modules to allow high component density.

The advanced nature of Hughes electronic systems—in the air, on the ground, and for industry—provides an ideal growth environment for the graduating or experienced engineer interested in building rewarding, long-range professional stature.

Data Processors, which monitor hundreds of aircraft and store the information for high-speed assignment of defense weapons, comprise one part of an advanced Hughes ground defense system.

Capacitors which provide for electrical, rather than mechanical tuning of circuits, are being produced by Hughes Products, the commercial activity of Hughes

Listed among "new projects" are the following:

Prof. Harold Q. Langenderfer of the Accounting Department is working on "Evaluation of Legal Principles and Philosophy Underlying Federal Tax Statues."

Prof. Joe S. Floyd Jr. is engaged in a study of "Investment Policies of Life Insurance Companies."

Prof. James H. Blackman is examining bases of investment policy in Russia. The title of his study is "Investment Policies in the Soviet Union."

Prof. Rashi Fein is directing a project to throw light on the problem of teaching superior students in the University. The title is "Development of Economic Materials for Use with Superior Students."

A preface to the listing of individual research topics expands the subject of the value of the research not only because it regards such research as important in its own right but because it is also considered indispensable to the effective discharge of other responsibilities.

"A good teacher must be able to excite and stimulate his students. He must be able to convey to them something of the significance of his field, of its relevance and of the ferment and continual reassessment of what is going on.

N. C. State Freshmen Defeat Tar Babies 74 To 63

Walsh Carolina High Scorer With 26

By ELLIOT COOPER

The Wolfpack freshmen combined their superior height with excellent marksmanship from the foul line to sink the Tar Babies 74-63 last night in Reynolds Coliseum.

Dean Smith's frosh were led by outstanding efforts on the part of guards Don Walsh and Yogi Poteet. Walsh was the high scorer for the game as he got 26 points on 8 field goals and 10 out of 13 from the foul line. Poteet checked in with 17 markers to his credit.

Once again the Tar Babies were forced to play the last part of the game without the services of their big men Jim Hudock and Ken McComb. McComb left the contest first and was followed at the 4:15 mark by Hudock.

From this point on the Carolina frosh were not in the game. The likes of John Key, Roman Gabriel, and Russ Marvel under the boards spelled downfall for the Tar Babies.

Nothing should be taken away from the Wolflets, however, as they took advantage of every opportunity to rack up the win. Center Key led the Pack scorers with 21. He was followed in the State scoring column by George Finnegan who had 15 and Marvel with 10.

Where the Wolflets made their killing was under the basket, as the guards were consistently able to feed Key and Gabriel for easy lay-ups. The Tar Babies, however, were unable to do this against the State man-for-man defense which limited Hudock and McComb to 9 points between them.

The real difference in the score came at the free throw line where the Wolflets sank 28 of 37 attempts while the Tar Babies were collecting 19 for 31. Late in the second half the Heels fouled in an attempt to get possession but this only resulted in State increasing its lead.

The Carolina frosh trailed the entire second half and were never able to get closer than 3 during the final 20 minutes. The last time that the Tar Babies were even with the Wolflets was late in the first half when they tied the game at 21-21. Before the half ended the Pack got 2 more and were never headed from then on.

It takes a lot more than a magnetic personality to get things coming your way.

Swimmers Host East Carolina Here Today

By JACK RUDY

Carolina's unbeaten mermen meet East Carolina's swimmers in Bowman Gray Pool this afternoon at 4:30. At the last meeting of these two teams, at ECC, the contest was close (50-36) and proved to the Carolina team that ECC was not to be taken lightly.

Thus this afternoon a still strong ECC team will be seeking revenge in what they now consider, rumor says, a sure win over an already proven strong Carolina team. Rumors around the pool say that Carolina is not as strong as before the holidays, but wins over VMI and UVA this past weekend may prove them wrong.

Today the powerful Carolina swimming team will be gunning for its 27th consecutive win, a record which stretches across the past three seasons, and from this year's showing is likely to continue indefinitely.

As usual, Harry Bloom, Randy Dodson, Kit Mercer, and Brent Nash will be expected to give 1st place performances. Bob Hunter, Harvey Hamrick, Sam Douglas, Tom Guerrant, and Chuck Wrye will be called on again, as at VMI and UVA, to back up the team with their proven capabilities. Dick Cashwell and Jack Rudy will be on the boards against possibly two of the best divers in the southeast.

The meet will in all probability be decided in the first and last event: the 440 medley relay and the 400 freestyle relay. At ECC, the Carolina swimmers took both of these events, but the ECC Pirates are pointing toward these in hopes of upsetting the Tar Heels.

TICKETS

Tickets are now on sale for the Carolina-Clemson and Carolina South Carolina basketball games which will be played in Charlotte on Jan. 30 and Jan. 31. N. C. State will meet the same opposition on alternate nights to complete the double-header action.

Price of the tickets is $1.50 and $2.50.

Table Tennis

The entries for the table tennis tournament will be due on February 2, with play beginning on February 9. The play will be on a single elimination team basis, with 4 players to a team.

All four of the divisions will be able to participate in the tournament and it is a point system activity. The winning team in each division will receive 100 points.

Russia Wants Talks

By WILLIAM N. OATIS

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., (AP)—Anastas I. Mikoyan, Soviet first deputy premier, said yesterday his country still wants a summit conference on world problems and the West cannot sidestep one forever.

Mikoyan, who will see Secretary of State Dulles a second time in Washington tomorrow, expressed interest in Dulles' statement that free elections were not the only way to reunify Germany.

But he complained that Dulles "did not come up with a constructive alternative" to the Soviet plan for confederation of East and West Germany by mutual agreement, before or after a peace treaty.

Washington speculation had been that Dulles' statement, at a news conference Tuesday, was a hint at a shift in the U.S. line aimed to provoke Mikoyan's interest and a change in the Soviet line.

The short, mustached Soviet leader conceded that the statement was an interesting one. But he added that the Soviet proposal for confederation of East and West Germany was excellent—"No one has so far come up with a better one."

He answered questions for 40 minutes from among 290 representatives of press, radio and television on his first visit to U.N. headquarters.

Earlier, he spent 40 minutes in a private talk with the U.N.'s Swedish Secretary General, Dag Hammarskjold, and then toured Council chambers and the General Assembly hall with Hammarskjold as guide.

He went from there to a hotel luncheon with Mikhail A. Menshikov, Soviet ambassador to Washigton. Mikoyan left New York for Washington by train late last night and he will see President Eisenhower Saturday.

At the news conference, he was asked if he thought an expected Spring meeting of the big powers on the Berlin and German questions would be of foreign ministers or heads of government.

"You know," he replied, "that for a long time we have advocated a conference at the highest level. We stick to this position.

"Our partners sidestep this conference either by raising the issue of the level or by raising the issue of the agenda . . . the years keep running by. "But I do not think

Castro Blasts U. S. Policy

Gives Warning After Heavy U. S. Criticism

HAVANA, — (AP) — Fidel Castro warned the United States sharply yesterday against meddling with Cuba's revolutionary justice. The rebel chieftain declared that if Marines were sent to this island nation "200,000 gringos will die."

Gringo is a term used by some Latin Americans, often in a derogatory terms for U.S. citizens. About 12,000 live in Cuba.

Castro referred to the Marines, without elaboration, at the close a bitter diatribe before 60 to 70 persons who surrounded him in the Havana Hilton Hotel lobby as he headed to a Rotary Club luncheon.

His threat presumably was prompted by statements of some U. S. Congressmen that the State Department should act to halt the executions which have followed the fall of Felgencio Batista's dictatorship.

The reported toll of the firing squads rose today to 195.

"We are trying those who killed 20, 30 or 40 persons," Castro said, "and they ask us to be humane!"

The bearded civil war hero who now commands Cuba's armed forces drew applause with a reiteration of his charges that the United States helped Batista with arms shipments and the assignment of a U. S. military mission here.

"We are more democratic than President Eisenhower," Castro declared. "We are more democratic than John Foster Dulles. There is more liberty here than in the United States. There is no country in the world with more liberty than Cuba."

Discussing tortures under the Batista regime, Castro said there is none in the revolutionary army and that its morale is high.

On the go himself day and night since the new year's day triumph, Castro let it be known he is tried of being crowded. He said 200 or 300 people otherwise unidentified, were constantly crowding him and limiting his effectiveness.

"I have many things to do, to watch out for mistakes here and there, to see that laws are not confused, but I can't do them," he told newsmen." . . . If these people keep it up, because of them the revolution will fail."

Castro's criticisms of the United States were echoed in Santiago by his brother Raul, commandant of revolutionary forces in Oriente province.

"The executions of war criminals are an act of justice and not a bloodbath," Raul Castro told a news conference in Santiago.

He said the revolutionary processes were administered so that, after fair trials, gunmen of tyranny could never again "unmercifully torture men, women and children."

Many times, he said, the victims had been buried alive.

He said the U.S. government helped provide "The war implements that the deposed dictatorship used to decimate the population of Cuba."

The U. S. government denied siding with Batista. The State Department said it had repeatedly objected to what it called the Batista government's misuse of military aid provided for defense of the western hemisphere as a whole. The arms shipments were halted last spring.

As to the executions, the State Department held to a policy of non-intervention. Asst. Secretary of State Roy Bubottom, who is in charge of Latin American affairs, declared "we are not going to intervene in what is essentially Cuba's affairs."

ROGER WAGNER CHORALE
. . . coming second day in spring semester

Planned For Jan. 30

Semester Opens With Chorale

The well known Roger Wagner Chorale will present a concert in Memorial Hall at 8 p.m. Friday, Jan. 30, the second day after the spring semester opens.

The program, sponsored by the Student Entertainment Committee, will be free for students on presentation of Identification Cards at the door.

Directing the chorale will be its founder, Roger Wagner. Piano accompanists will be Stecher and Horowitz.

The program to be presented will include liturgical music and several spirituals. The religious music will be: "Ave Maria" by Vittoria, "Cantate Domino" by Hassler, "Vere Languores" by Vittoria, "Mass in G Minor" by Vaughn Williams, "Magnificat" by Herman Schroeder and "Sacred Service" by Bloch.

Two spirituals, "Mary Had a Baby" and "Soonah Will Be Done," will be presented.

The chorale will also sing "Hear the Murmuring Waters" by Monteverdi, "Echo Song" by Di Lasso, "Trois Chansons" by Ravel and two sea chanties, "Lowlands" and "The Drummer and the Cook."

Duo-pianists Stecher and Horowitz will present Brahms' "Variations on a Theme by Haydn."

In addition to the many concert tours of the Roger Wagner Chorale, the group has recorded several albums for Capitol Records. Background music by the chorale has been recorded for 12 motion pictures, including "The Egyptian," "Desiree" and "Day of Triumph."

Vacant Chairmanships On Two Committees

Two GMAB committee chairmanships are vacant. These are the Drama and Current Affairs committees, according to Bob Carter, president of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Any student interested in applying for either position has been asked to fill out an application blank in the GMAB office.

New chairmen for the two committees will take over immediately.

3 Dormitories Plan To Open Social Rooms

Mangum, Lewis and Aycock dormitories will open their social rooms to coeds this weekend.

The Interdormitory Council in conjunction with the office of the dean of women has announced that these social rooms have passed inspection and faculty sponsors have been obtained by the presidents of the dormitories.

Jim Scott, chairman of the IDC Coed Visiting Agreement Committee, said other dorms would not open social rooms since they do not have sponsors. "We don't feel that the dormitories who have gone ahead and lined up sponsors should be held up by those who haven't," Scott said.

The three dorms' social rooms will open from 7 to 12 p.m. today and from 2 until 12 p.m. on Saturday.

All the men's dormitories have passed the inspection preparatory to opening them. In a few, improvements were recommended. Scott praised the work of Jerry Chichester who, with Building and Grounds Director J. S. Bennett, saw to it that facilities were provided in the dorms. Chichester is the chairman of the IDC dorm improvements committee.

"We hope faculty members and their wives will take this opportunity to join in student activities," said Scott speaking of the difficulty many dorms were having in obtaining sponsors for their social activities. "Faculty sponsors and wives would be responsible only in an advisory capacity for dorm social functions and physical facilities. They need not be present in social rooms at all times. They would be asked to chaperon dances and help with receptions such as Parents Day," Scott said.

Ticket Issue Begins Reaching Settlement

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The controversy arising over the ticket situation for this week's State-Carolina basketball game has been at least partially settled.

The Coliseum Box Office in Raleigh revealed yesterday that 230 tickets were sent to Chapel Hill to be distributed among 7,000 students at the request of the Carolina ticket office.

A source at the State College Coliseum, who refused to give her name or tell exactly where the tickets were sent, said that in addition to the 230 student tickets, about 100 tickets to the big game were sent or use as complimentary tickets.

She also said that usually the box office at State sends as many tickets to Chapel Hill as are requested by the box office here. She said that the Carolina ticket office could probably have gotten up to 500 tickets had the request been made.

The biggest game in the nation, between the number 1 and 3 teams, was won by Carolna 72-68 in an overtime period. The game was a complete sellout.

Woollen Gym earlier announced that one of the reasons no more tickets were asked for is that 230 "good" seats were all that could be obtained. These seats were located in a far corner of the spacious coliseum. There are no really bad seats in the gigantic building, however, so using that as an excuse seems to have little, if any, value.

Carolina Ticket Office Director Vernon Crook stated yesterday that "We later received 100 complimentary tickets in additin to the 230 for the students." He also said that more tickets could have been obtained (probably 500) if they had been asked for.

Crook was unable to recall the date that the State tickets went on sale at the Carolina ticket office, and the Daily Tar Heel was not notified about it.

He explained that the ticket office never knows far in advance how great the demand for tickets to a given game will be, thus it is never known exactly how many tickets to ask for.

Tickets to the South Carolina and Clemson games in the Charlotte Coliseum (Jan. 30 & 31) and the Duke game at Durham (Feb. 6) are now on sale at the ticket office. Crook said that if the students don't soon buy up the tickets for the Charlotte games they will have to be sent back.

Campus Code Discussions Scheduled

Meetings to discuss the Campus Code will be held in all the women's dorms during the week of Feb. 8-14.

The meetings will be sponsored and conducted by members of the Social Values Committee, a newly formed organization on campus.

The purpose of this committee is to have women students on campus re-evaluate objectively the meaning of the Campus Code.

In the opinion of the committee, freshmen particularly could benefit from discussion of this sort, because it is a new topic for them.

The committee is also working on plans to discuss the Campus Code more thoroughly with the incoming second semester women.

Traffic Council Hands Down One Probation

One probation was handed down at a Traffic Council session Tuesday night.

Three students were told if they did not get their cars registered within 48 hours they would have to forfeit use of the cars for the rest of the year.

Three warnings and one official reprimand were also handed down by the council. One case was dismissed.

Morehead Adds Six Schools To Scholarship Eligibility

John Motley Morehead, philanthropist of Rye, N. Y., today added six private preparatory schools to the "eligibility list" for $5,000 Morehead Scholarships at UNC, his alma mater. The Morehead Scholarships are for undergraduates among the most lucrative in America.

Groton School, Phillips Academy and Deerfield Academy in Massachusetts are included along with Phillips Exeter Academy in New Hampshire, St. Albans School in Washington, D. C., and Westminster School in Atlanta, Ga.

Each school will nominate two candidates by Jan. 30.

Other private schools already among the eligibles for nominating Morehead Scholars are Woodberry Forest, Episcopal High School and Virginia Episcopal School in Virginia; Baylor School and McCallie School in Tennessee; and Asheville School and Christ School in North Carolina.

A total of 26 scholars from 13 private schools will join 42 scholars from public schools of North Carolina in final screenings here.

The 68 finalists will appear before the Central Morehead Committee and the trustees of the Foundation in Chapel Hill the last week in February for the selections.

Morehead, native Tar Heel whose father was once governor of North Carolina, was for years an executive of Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation. Now 88 years old, he is a scientist, former diplomat, industrialist and benefactor to education.

The Morehead Scholarships were established in 1951. Based on principles similar to the Rhodes Scholarship selections, high school seniors are chosen for qualities of scholarship and leadership, and without regard to financial need. Morehead has declared his intention to seek the "tall timber" among scholars, in the hope of contributing further to high standards of scholarship at the University and to superior achievement of students after graduation.

Each student selected has all expenses paid at the University for a period of four years. The annual stipend of $1,250 covers all tuition, fees and living expenses plus extra spending money.

An increased number of students has been selected each year by the Morehead trustees. Last year 35 of 56 finalists were chosen as meeting the qualifications set by Morehead.

Roy Armstrong, executive secretary of the Morehead Foundation, pointed out today that the 68 finalists this year are not "competitors" in the final interviews, but that all who qualify will be named Morehead scholars. Morehead hopes eventually to select 100 Morehead Scholars each year, with 400 being in school at one time.

Armstrong was joined by John L. Morehead of Charlote, N. C., a cousin of John M. Morehead, in visits to the New England schools in arranging for nominations by and St. Albans and Westminster the headmaster of those schools of two of their best students for the Morehead Scholarships.

The representatives of Groton, Phillips, Phillips Exeter, Deerfield, St. Albans and Westminster also paid visits to Chapel Hill to examine the Morehead program and meet members of the faculty and administration at Chapel Hill and members of the Morehead Foundation.

The headmasters who will nominate the Morehead Scholars are William L. Presly of Westminster School, Atlanta; Canon Charles Martin of St. Albans, Washington, D. C. Frank L. Boyden of Deerfield Academy, Deerfield, Mass.; John Crocker of Groton School, Groton, Mass.; John K. Kemper of Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.; William G. Saltonstall of Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H.

The private preparatory schools which have been in the program heretofore and continue to nominate candidates are headmasters David R. Fall, of Asheville Schol; David P. Harris of Christ School, Arden, N. C.; Herbert B. Barks of Baylor School, Chattanooga, Tenn.; J. Spencer McCallie of McCallie School, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Richard P. Thomsen of Episcopal High School, Alexandria, Va.; Roger A. Walke, Jr., of Virginia Episcopal School, Lynchburg, Va.; and Joseph M. Mercer of Woodberry Forest School, Woodberry Forest, Va.

Function

It has long been a misconception on the part of many in the University and currently being rectified to some extent, that the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill is a state university and as such should open its doors to all students in the state who wish to attend.

The introduction of entrance examinations has done something to change the situation, but the situation may have been dealt a setback by the change in structure of the Board of Higher Education.

The University must stand at the apex of the state system. Indeed it needs to reassert itself as the leading educational institution in the south. It should then possess standards which will enable it to become the leading educational institution in the south, and competitive with the fine institutions in the north. This it obviously cannot do if it takes every student in the state that wants to come. Indeed the justification of a state institution with many different schools lies in the hierarchy of quality that may be presented.

Student Body President Don Furtado is currently working on better foreign student programming, and indeed Chapel Hill should not only have better foreign student programming but a larger share of foreign students. Their presence here is of educational value both for themselves and the domestics.

Moreover, encouragement should be given to out-of-state students of high caliber to come to North Carolina. The way should be paved for students who wish to come and are qualified to get into the University, and part of paving the way would be equalize out-of-state tuition. The students, the faculty, and the library go into making a top-notch University, and encouragement of the top level students — the one's in the top five per cent should be the goal.

This does not mean that the University should necessarily be an intellectual elite, but it means that standards for both admissions and retention should be higher than they are at the present time.

It was pointed out in a recent meeting of the Committee on State Affairs that the University has a 13.2 — 1 student-faculty ratio, a figure that is somewhat indicative of a lack of faculty members on the University campus compared to some of the good institutions of higher learning in the north. When the General Assembly considers the budget of the University of North Carolina, it may think in terms of restoring some of the salary money cut by the Board of Higher education in hopes of bringing to the University and adding to the University's capable staff a number of qualified professors to better the student-faculty ration and prepare for the population increase that threatens to double the size of the University.

The University's library used to be a leader in the south, but now it is third. In appropriations for acquisitions in the last biennium it was tenth in the south, so if the present rate of improvement of libraries on the part of both other Universities in the South and the University of North Carolina continues, the UNC library will be tenth in the south. And other institutions show no signs of stopping their drive for self-betterment.

There are on the University picture hopeful signs. The repeal of loyalty oaths in a courageous move by the local administration promises more in the way of academic freedom and points hopefully toward bringing more professors here that might have balked previously. The proposed bond issue that will be before the General Assembly this year and which the local administration is fighting for promises to bring needed facilities to all state institutions, and a greater awareness is being shown for student needs as evidenced by the requests for several student unions.

The University has done betterment within its ranks by tightening up on grading which saw the number of A and B grades almost double in twenty years with no commensurate increase in student intelligence.

There was never before a greater need for education than at the present time of crisis in the state, the nation, and the world. Indeed the future of democracy depends on the development of informed thinking people. It is up to the University administration, the state legislators, and the students to meet this challenge.

Exams

The editor and staff of The Daily Tar Heel would like to wish the student body the best of luck on their exams, for it is the conviction of the editor that many students including the editor are going to need it.

The Daily Tar Heel will resume publication on January 30, and it is the hope of the editor that the student mortality rate will not be high. Somber news stories are disturbing.

On Prestige

Sidney Dakar

I always downgrade anyone's intelligence to the level of a ten-year old when I hear him talking like one. Such is the case when I hear people talking about cars. "My Ford will 'take' any Chevrolet." "Mine will go from zero to sixty in six seconds." We have heard people talk in this vein for hours.

Such talk reminds me of one kid telling another that his dad can whip the other boy's dad. "So what?" we smilingly ask the little boys. We then explain in a very superior manner that the relative abilities of the fathers have no real relation to the abilities of the boys.

Many college boys don't seem to realize this verity. They brag about a commerical product that was bought not with their money but often with dad's. Suppose their cars will "take" another one? They talk as if they had made the cars with their own little lily-white hands. Any simpleton with one minute of instruction can press down the accelerator at the sound of a gun. That is all that is necessary; Detroit has taken care of the rest. It all boils down to a question of economics rather than skill. The man with the most money can get a car that will leave all the rest; it is as simple as that.

This false sense of superiority seems fairly common in many phases of our life in the U. S. We have always put a great deal of stress on how much money a person has when we determine his prestige. Of course this is not done simply by looking at a person's bank statements; our consciences would never allow this. Instead we look at the things money can give a person, such as fine clothes, palatial homes and membership in the right clubs. To put it bluntly, a person without money has very little prestige amoung the vast number of people in America today.

In our hurried world we overlook the inner values of a person, the only real values. Inner values are hard to judge by the masses. A coral-pink "Caddy" convertible is concrete; there is no question as to whether a person has one of these. It is not so easy to determine if a person is intelligent, kind or generous.

The poor farm boy trying to struggle through college may, and often does, have a sterling charter that will make his future wife very happy. Unfortunately these sterling qualities are not recognized by the girl that he likes most and might wish to marry. You see, she is too busy dating the boy with the "Caddy" convertible.

Spectrum

Having perused the new literary magazine Spectrum, one wonders what the furor was about. Although it was probably not John Brooks' intention, the Student Party leader was no doubt responsible for selling more copies of the magazine than any other single factor.

In itself Spectrum, to be reviewed in a later Daily Tar Heel, is a pretty innocous product. It contains very little good writing, but nothing that could be considered immoral. It is a pity that the United States Post Office would be so narrow minded as to see it in any light other than a literary publication, and brings out even more strongly the question of what is morality. The answer to this lies with the individual.

As far as the lettering on the front of the publication reading The University Of North Carolina, it would be more honest to point out that Spectrum is published by some students at the University, and that it is neither an official student or official University publication. Again if it can gain the finances, it has a right to publish, but not using the name of the University to misrepresent the issue.

As far as the relationship between Spectrum and the Carolina Quarterly, the latter is an obviously superior publication, but this is not to say that students should be discouraged from writing to Spectrum. An all-campus literary magazine may be a good thing, but selecting only from those campus manuscripts submitted, standards will of necessity be lower. If it were up to the editor to submit a story, he would go to the Quarterly first, and if unsuccessful go to Spectrum. If he wants to enter competition, he might start at the top.

Spectrum has started. Maybe the second issue will be worth 35 cents.

Letters On Spectrum And Others

Editor:

After looking over the recent issue of the new campus magazine, SPECTRUM, I believe that it at least deserves some comment. After all, it did cost thirty-five cents.

As to Dennis Parks' work ALWAYS on page 9, it is quite thought provoking. This is not only my own opinion but also the opinion of several other people with whom I have discussed his work. They are all curious as to who E. C. is. They would also like to take a bath with her and see if she would show enough romantic attachment to scratch their names in the ring in their dirty tub. Unfortunately, some of these people only have access to a shower but they will be glad to try anyway. She must have been a wild date.

The work by R. B. Bell on page 10 indicates that he is evidently a well traveled young man and also quite precocious. The work is a cheap attempt to imitate HOWL which was written by Ginsburg. Even the title is similar. ULULATE. I had to use a dictionary to find its meaning. Did you, Mr. Bell, have to use a Thesaurus to find the world? Apparently Mr. Bell's odd writing style is a result of his childhood. It must have been a very trying childhood from Mr. Bell's reference to, "good old mom selling herself to lazy sailors in from the big ships." Or could it be that he is writing about subjects and places of which he has no experience nor knowledge, but wishes to appear to have lived a full life.

i thought it very interesting that miss tiger gammon does not use capitals. ee cummings thought is was a nice trick too. i will, however, question her "sincerity" in her mission of the upper case letters. her story might have been good had the printer, probably in his confusion of using no capitals, not left out several of the important parts of the story. the inclusion of a beginning, middle, end and a plot would have made miss gammon's story much more accectable as a work of journalism. to tiger, GROWL.

For the art work only one comment need be made. The style and idea in the sketch entitled WOMAN LEAVING SHOWER is too similar to anther work of art done by Karen Schultz which she calls NUDE COMMING INDOORS OUT OF THE RAIN. Karen is at present studying art in the second grade as Chapel Hill Elemenatary School.

There are two works, which save the magazine from being a substitite for a camus humor magazine. These are done by Ann Higgins and Gail Godwin. Both are simple stories with emphasis on relatnig a person rather than showing off an odd style of writing. They both are excellent character studies of very dissimilar persons. My only question is, what are these stories doing in this magazine? They are certainly above the rest of the magazine's content in quality.

Of the other parts of the magazine, I found one of the advertisements most interesting. As to the "SIX TO GO," where are they going, or do they know themselves? Or, possibly, is the word "GO" used in the slang sense as in the expression, "go like a mink?"

The Carolina Quarterly need not close its shop yet. It will take considerably more than this generally childish attempt to shake its position as the campus literary magazine.

Doug Carter

Editor:

I realize you will receive many letters on the subject I write about, but perhaps you will be able to squeeze in this letter.

I just wish to thank John Brooks, Jim Crownover and Pepper Tice for their immediate and outspoken defense of traditions which we, the students of the University of North Carolina, hold dear.

Early this week there appeared on campus a "literary" magazine containing stories and poetry of the most obsecene, childish and obscure type; this magazine was published, apparently, by a group of radicals, pacifists, pseudo-Bohemians and others of such Communistic tendencies who apparently could not get their work into our own Carolina Quarterly. It is altogether fitting and proper that the above named student leaders should censure this magazine; they have pointed out its faults far better than I could ever hope to do, but I would like to re-emphasize some of their remarks because I feel that such people represent a clear and present danger to the traditions which we, the students of the University of North Carolina, hold dear.

Now we, as adults, realize that profanity is a fact in this world; many of us use it occasionally. But there are words in that magazine that I wouldn't even repeat in a sorority house, much less in front of my fraternity brothers.

I am quite sure that few, if any, of their poems or stories could get into the Quarterly—they simply lack the traditional qualities that constitute the standards of the Quarterly, and I feel that Editor Tice is quite right when he says that the quality of this magazine will have to improve greatly before the students will become interested in it and buy copies.

To be generous, of course, the magazine does have something of value. The writers are young, and filled with the spirit and idealism of youth. But they do not have the technical experience necessary to come up to the stylistic standards which a good magazine should have. Consequently they must get by on bizarre experimentation instead of the established literary forms, and have a tendency toward the sensationalistic use of vulgar obscenity.

Limiting itself as it does to on-campus writing, it can never have the consistant level of quality seen in the Quarterly. The Carolina Quarterly speaks well for the University. It has traditionally maintained high standards. Although it may not have the freshness of inexperienced writing, its contributors have attained, through years and years of practice, a maturity of style. How much better it is as a representative of our campus than a magazine which will limit itself to the necessarily youthful and untried experiments of college undergraduates.

This is probably why these students write as they do; or perhaps, as a professor said, they are trying to epater le bourgeoize. But the traditions of our great state and nation are firmly established, and cannot nor will not yield to the childish threats represented by magazines of this type.

R. J. Hodgeson

Editor:

Having recently spent some four days in the infirmary I would like very much to see placed in the infirmary some portable television sets for the use of the patients.

I believe that the students who have also spent some time in the infirmary will agree with me that it would a good thing to have in the infirmary.

I would personally like to see some immediate action taken to have several such portable televisin sets placed in the infirmary for the use of the students.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

The cheerful combination of contralto Claramae Turner's singing spirit, conductor Wilton Mason's solid musicianship, and the honest cooperation of a great many singers and musicians made the Tuesday evening, Mr. Mason held together the University Symphony Orchestra (whose regular conductor, Earl Slocum, is one of the concert performance of Bizet's opera Carmen a pleasant affair last most versatile musicians on campus and was to be found, in this performance, among the string bass players), the University Chorus comprising some eighty singers, and the following soloists: Brian Klitz, Martha Fouse, Miss Turner, Gene Strassler, Rebecca Carnes, Marilyn Zschau, Professor Joel Carter, and James Pruett.

The music started to move when Miss Turner made her rather striking entrance with the famous Habanera which, for once, did not sound tedious. She sang it with a very full and large voice whose main strength lies in the expression of that feminine spirit that is both excitement and mystery. And her consequent portrayal of Carmen remained consistent with this expression. She was more than able to bring out the sensuality and temperament of Carmen with her control over the range and tone of her voice.

The other soloists, on the whole, did quite well. Martha Fouse has a clear-focused soprano which, though limited in volume, has an artistic subtlety that made her well-suited for the part of Micaela the village girl. Don Jose sang a bit too stiff for my taste and seemed to have some trouble in the higher register of his tenor voice, but there was a good grain to his singing which made his performance even and in good taste. Brian Klitz who appeared every other minute in another part was hurt in his performance by a poor pronunciation of the French. Rebecca Carnes and Marilyn Zschau sang well as the gypsy girls. Professor Joel Carter doubled as the narrator and Escamillo, faring much better in the second, primarily because the words he had to speak in the narrative part were archaic and just plain silly. His voice came colse in expressing the same excitement that Miss Turner generated with hers.

The chorus sang especially well, considering the difficulty of singing in French all evening and the fairly involved musical part writing of this score. The orchestra is to be commended for carrying perhaps the heaviest burden of this performance, playing continually for almost two and a half hours music with many key changes, time changes and tricky rhythms. Both the wind and string sections supported the voices with solid accompaniment.

But the man who held all this together and led the performance with admirable control and musicianship was Professor Mason. There were very few lapses between voice and instruments, and in general the music proceded with a very sure and certain continuity that instead of holding back the excitement of the spirit of the opera, provided rather a solid musical basis from which the expression could derive its musical heritage.

The time and cooperation of all involved plus the leadership of conductor Mason resulted in a successful evening of opera music.

UP Floorleader

Talking of how he was undecided on the Smith Bill for a single annual spring legislative election (introduced three months ago), Mr. Gray said that if experienced legislators such as himself were undecided about the bill, how could they expect the voters to consider the bill intelligently. Apparently Mr. Gray does not give much credit to the other legislators who passed the bill unanimously or to you who voted him into office. It may be that the electorate will not prove quite as stupid as Mr. Gray would lead one to believe in the Spring elections.

Mr. Gray's other mistake came earlier in the year. In voting against a resolution aimed at expressing the Student Legislature's disapproval of discriminatory clauses in fraternity charters, Mr. Gray pointed out that he was voting against the bill as a representative of his fraternity. The only thing wrong with this was that at the time he was represening Cobb Dormitory, the district from which he was elected and was allowed to keep his seat despite moving to a fraternity because of suspension of the election law. The residents of Cobb Dorm should in the future not be confused with the residents of one house in fraternity court. The results could be politically disastrous.

Mikoyan

that a conference can be eschewed. One can sidestep it for a while, but it is bound to take place eventually—when, it is difficult for me to guess.'"

The Kremlin's No. 2 man said the Russians "do not want two powers to solve issues that affect other powers, nor do we want to divide the Americans from their allies . . . However, this does not exclude the leaders of two states or of three states from discussing questions of interest."

He declared the great need was to liquidate the Cold War and restore international confidence and "We cannot, after all, ignore the fact that the Cold War is being fostered from the United States."

But he also said the Soviet Union did not want to interfere in other countries' affairs. He remarked that capitalism has had "substantial successes in America." He went on:

"The Americans today have a higher standard of living than ours. We also want a high standard of living. We would like to overtake the Americans, but this is surely no threat to you. You are living well . . . like it or not, we are going to live well . . . therefore, let us compete with and emulate each other."

Mikoyan made these other points.

1. The Soviet Union "has attained tremendous success" in outer-space exploration and wants to cooperate with the U.N. in this field. But it cannot sit on the U.N.'s new 18-nation outer-space committee because the makeup "would place the Soviet Union and the socialist countries in a perpetual minority."

2. The Americans are trying to dictate in current East-West Geneva talks toward an agreement to stop nuclear tests but cannot stop the negotiations "because world public opinion will condemn them."

3. The Soviet Union is not holding any of the American fliers who crash-landed on its territory several months ago. It has turned over the bodies of all those involved.

Nursing School Development Discussed

The second in a series of institutes sponsored by the UNC School of Nursing was held at the school this week.

Dr. Elizabeth L. Kemble, dean of the School of Nursing, was in charge of the progarm, "Directors and Deans Discuss Administrative Activities." Attention was centered around the development of a curriculum for schools of nursing with emphasis on the three-year diploma programs.

Ruth Dalrymple, professor and of the undergraduate curriculum; f the undergraduate curriculum; and various other members of the Nuring School faculty participated on the institute program.

The School of Nursing, as part of its Continuation Education Program, will sponsor three other institutes in the spring. They are: "Cerebral Plasy - A Preventable Disease?" Feb. 19; "Teaching Students in the Clinical Area," March 13; and "Team Relationships in a Psychiatric Unit," My 7-8. Facing the Facts about "Legal Control"

More and more North Carolinians are facing up to the facts about "legal sale" of beer and ale.

More people realize that in the long run "legal sale" works in favor of temperance and moderation, whereas prohibition works primarily in favor of the bootlegger to become a demoralizing influence on law and order and to enrich himself at the expense of local citizens and taxpayers.

Rev. Mr. Hauss Sees Light

"It is pleasing to those who have been strong supporters of the present method of handling alcoholic beverages in North Carolina, to read reports that the Rev. R. M. Hauss of Shelby, has found some merit in the system.

"The Rev. Mr. Hauss, executive director of the Allied Church League, is reported as telling a group of Methodist Ministers at a regional conference at Lake Junaluska, that Controls can be effective, and that North Carolina is forty-fourth in the nation in the per capita consumption of alcoholic beverages.

"He declared that any State can properly control alcoholic beverages if the people are determined and aggressive; and he urged the conferees to work for control legislation in their own communities."

Considerably more than half the population of North Carolina live in counties where "legal sale" is working and has proven an effective system. Not a single county where prohibition is still trying to be effective can deny our claim — There is no such thing as a dry county. This is one of the facts that leaders in every community, regardless of their personal opinions, are facing today. Is it not better to have "legal control" than no control at all?

Swimmers Edge ECC 44-42

Carolina's crack varsity swimming team had all they could handle here yesterday as they barely escaped with a 44-42 win over little East Carolina College. The Pirates were up for it and their efforts almost succeeded in stopping the long Carolina win streak.

The victory marks the 27th in a row for Coach Pat Earey's crew, a skein that spreads over three seasons.

The sophomore-studded Tar Heels wrapped things up in the 440 freestyle as Harry Bloom stroked to his second win of the day and newly returned Jeff Zwicker grabbed second.

The Dolphins grabbed off six of a possible ten first places and also scored by placing second and third in most events.

They were soundly beaten in the diving, breaststroke, and 400-medley relay as ECC got first and second place.

The last time the two schools met, Carolina needed a win in the 400-medley relay in order to prevent a tie. Today they lost the same event, but didn't need it as they did last time around.

Carolina Topples State

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina Wednesday night stamped themselves as not only the team to beat in the ACC but perhaps in the entire nation.

A great team performance, which saw four Tar Heels hit in double figures, pushed the boys in blue past State College 72-68 in an exciting overtime game.

It was a tense game from the opening jump to the final horn, typical of State-Carolina clashes through the years. The intense rivalry between the two schools had reached a peak by gametime as both teams wanted that game badly.

The State fans, not widely renowned for outstanding sportsmanship, outdid themselves Wednesday night with booing and yelling. The State cheerleaders and band made it their business to start something every time the Carolina cheerleaders tried a cheer.

Salz Paces Tar Heels

Harvey Salz, the stone-faced little guard who drilled in 19 points to lead both teams, paced the Tar Heels in his finest performance. Salz was everywhere at the same time, stealing, shooting, passing, and setting up the plays.

State's George Stepanovich endeared himself forever to Carolina fans by his clean performance. Stepanovich once grabbed Lee Shaffer and literally threw him into the State band. He disputed every call and almost started a riot when he fouled out. Our nomination for Sportsman of the Year goes to George Stepanovich.

There can be no doubt that McGuire's Tar Heels deserved to win that game. They fought the Wolfpack in its own den and came back with an all important victory. But the fact can't be overlooked that State College was off. The Pack only hit 30 per cent of its shots from the floor (compared to Carolina's 49 per cent). State's double-barreled shotgun, John Richter and Lou Pucillo, was held to a combined total of only 24 points, most of them in the second half.

Stanley Shows Well

Ray Stanley exhibited well what kind of reserves Frank McGuire has on the bench. Stanley came into the game with about 2 minutes to go and Carolina 4 points behind. He hit a jump shot and 2 free throws to tie the count at 63-63.

The lay-up that Lou Pucillo missed with 8 seconds 'left in the regulation time was a heart-stopper. Pucillo dribbled all the way under the basket and flipped the ball up backhanded. The shot climbed up the backboard, jumped around the rim, rolled in and out. Things like that shot make coaches get grey.

The lay-up that Lee Shaffer didn't miss was the ballgame. A perfect pass from Doug Moe, a leaping stab at the basket, a shot that flicked off his fingertips, and the game was all over except the shouting. Harvey Salz'stwo free throws with 1 second left came after the Tar Heels had already celebrated the victory at mid-court just added insult tn injury and padded the final margin to 4.

Victory Celebration

A victory celebration in Chapel Hill, complete with bonfire, was staged after the contest. Throngs of Carolina fans who were usable to attend the game because of the ticket situation greeted the triumphant Tar Heels on their return to the Hill.

Carolina almost lost the big one on their inability to cash in on the free throws. The Tar Heels only hit 22 of 45 free tosses. State's inability to hit from the floor made up for the difference.

State, who had been ranked number 1 in the Associated Press poll, now faces a sharp drop. Folks around North Carolina figure the Tar Heels deserve that top ranking. They do. They have beaten two of the teams that have been number 1 (Cincinatti and State). But the prediction for next week's AP poll is 1-Kentucky, 2-Carolina, 3-Kansas State, 4-Cincinatti, 5-N. C. State.

Bishop And Scurlock To Run In Boston

Wayne Bishop and Dave Scurlock, Carolina's two top track performers, will participate in the Knights of Columbus Meet at Boston, Mass. Saturday. The annual event will bring together the top collegiate runners in the nation.

Bishop, Atlantic Coast Conference two-mile champion and record holder, will be making his first appearance in the Hub City area. For Scurlock, however, it will mark the second visit, as he captured the 1,000-yard race in the Boston A. A. meet last season.

In addition to th Boston victory, Scurlock has won several other major indoor races including the Millrose 800 in New York and the Chicago Daily News 1,000-yarder. In Saturday's event, he will go in the Bishop Chevrus 1,000.

Among Dave's outstanding achievements is a fine 1:48.2 time for the 880. He is the indoor 600 and 800 champion of the conference as well as outdoor 440 and 880 title holder. This, his senior year at Carolina, is expected to be his finest as he should reach his full potential.

Bishop will enter the Leo Lavarie 2-mile run, a distance in which he has been extremely successful. He should be in top form after suffering a leg injury during a fall cross-country race. He recovered in time to nail down the conference crown with a superb performance over the four-mile course.

In addition to being Captain of this year's track squad, Bishop is the President of the North Carolina University Athletic Association and is a member of both the University Athletic Council and the Golden Fleece.

Norfolk Schools Will Integrate

NORFOLK, Va — (AP) — The Norfolk School Board announced yesterday that the city's six closed schools will open Monday on an integrated basis.

Three high and three junior high schools have been closed since September to avoid integration. However, the state laws under which their doors were locked have been nullified by state and federal court decisions.

The reopening will bring the first Negro children in Virginia history—17 in all—into white public school classrooms.

The school board's announcement came immediately after the city council assured it of operating funds. An earlier council resolution to cut off school monies, fell before federal court orders.

The schools affected are Maury, Granby, and Norview High Schools and Norview, Blair and Northside Junior Highs. A total of 10,000 white children are affected. However, only about 75 per cent of that number are expected to return to school Monday since many are attending school elsewhere or have drppped it altogether.

Charlottesville City Schools To Be Separate

CHARLOTTESVILLE CITY —j
BALTIMORE — (AP) — A federal circuit court judge yesterday postponed mandatory integration at two Charlottesville, Va. public schools. A spokesma for the school board said the schools probably would open next week on a segregated basis.

Affected are 1,700 students at Venable Elementary and Lane High Schools. The schools were closed by the state of Virginia after a federal court judge ordered the admission of 12 Negro students last September.

The decision by Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the 4th U. S Circuit Court of Appeals was disclosed by John S. Battle Jr. counsel for the Charlottesville School Board.

Battle and attorneys Spottswood Robinson III and Oliver W. Hill, who represent the 12 children, had met behind closed doors with Judge Sobeloff for about four

Gazette Editor Harry Ashmore To Speak Here

Newspaper editor Harry Ashmore of Little Rock, Ark., will visit the University this weekend to address the advanced management training program of the School of Business Administration.

Ashmore, author and executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette, will discuss "Equality of Opportunity" on Saturday with members of The Executive Program, which includes 40 top officials from business and industry.

The program's director, Prof Willard Graham, said that Ashmore's talk will be part of the "Great Ideas" series offered to the executives in addition to their intensive study of business topics.

Intellectual growth through study of philosophy, politics, religion and sociology has been stressed in the Executive Program, which covers a six-months' period. The participants spend alternate weekends during the winter in Chapel Hill, and have a week's stay also during October and April, prior to their "graduation weekend."

In addition to Ashmore's talks Saturday, the group will have a second "Great Ideas" study on Feb. 14. "Freedom and Progress" will be discussed by Prof. Friedrich A. Hayek of the University of Chicago, professor of social and moral science and author of "The Road to Serfdom."

Elections Chairman Resigns

Elections Board Chairman Bob Furtado has announced his resignation from that post.

"Because of an increased academic load I will find it necessary to devote my full efforts to my studies, and for this reason I regretfully submit my resignation as chairman of the Elections Board."

All students who are interested in assuming the chairmanship of the Elections Board have been requested to leave their names with Miss Staples at the Student Government Office.

JOB IS DEMANDING

Student Body President Don Furtado said the job of Elections Board "is a demanding one, for it requires long hours of carefully coordinated effort on the part of members of the Elections Board in order to prepare for a campus-wide election.

Its importance is obvious when we consider the fact that improper election procedures and preparations may destroy the entire elections process."

FURTADO COMMENDS FURTADO

Don Furtado also commended Bob Furtado for his "capable job, both under the administration of Sonny Evans and of myself."

No date for Spring Elections has been officially announced.

Leaders Admit Investigation Is Underway

By CHUCK FLINNER

Dick Robinson, the Attorney General, said no charges have been brought against anyone but the staff is investigating the matter. "There have been no trials or convictions yet, and we can't give any information." He refused to say when the trials would be held.

The men's honor council has reportedly scheduled a series of meetings on the matter. Hugh Patterson, chairman, was not available for comment.

Student Body President Don Furtado refused to comment on the stolen exams. Referring to a story in a recent Durham paper Furtado said, "The Durham Morning Herald story has done enough damage already. We don't want any further information released. There is nothing definite and the matter is still under investigation."

Reporter Bill King and the city editor of the Durham Morning Herald did not remember the story referred to by Furtado. King said, "We have done a series of cheating stories in the past but I can't remember any thing recently."

Paul Woodard, a member of the attorney general's staff, when asked about the investigation reported that he had been asked if he would be available as council for the defense for honor council trials. "There is nothing definite and I don't know any names or particulars about the case," he added.

Tom Rand of the attorney general's staff told The Daily Tar Heel, "We were asked not to tell anything about it."

Another member of the staff reported, "I haven't been contacted at all. I don't know anything about it."

Several other student officials could not be reached for comment.

OBITUARY

The Chapel Hill News Leader published its final edition yesterday.

The decision to cease publication followed a successful law suit filed in Orange County Superior Court by Phillips Russell and L. M. Pollander against two other stockholders, Edwin J. Hamlin, the newspaper's business manager, and Roland Giduz, editor.

71 Students Registered For Referendum

Last Saturday approximately 71 students were registered to vote in the Feb. 3 ABC referendum. Eleven students were refused registration.

Reports from students attempting to register indicated that there were wide variances of interpretation of election laws by the five local registrars. Concerning the differences in interpretation, Clyde C. Carter, secretary of the Orange County Board of Elections said, "I wouldn't care to comment at all."

Paul Woodard, UNC student who announced in a Daily Tar Heel special edition his intention to appeal after being refused registration on Jan. 18 was promptly registered when he re-applied last Saturday Carter said," I don't know anything about that case."

Mr. and Mrs. Richard McKiernan were the only two students attempting to register at the Estes Hills precinct. They were denied registration by registrar Mrs. Raymond H Andrews, who quoted a section from her elections manual that "teachers, students, government employes and servicemen who were only part-time or temporary residents of a community could not be registered to vote."

Later Mrs. Andrews was asked whether these groups of people could vote anywhere. She replied, "I don't know about that."

Mrs. Andrews continued to refuse the McKiernan's registration when they showed evidence of payment of city and county property taxes as well as poll taxes.

Mr. and Mrs. McKiernan picked up Larry Fisher, a married student, and took him to the registrar at Woollen Gym, Harold Walters. Here Fisher was registered with no questions, not even being asked whether or not he were a student.

The McKiernan's then called the registrar at the Town Hall who opined that they were eligible to register, they picked up a photographer at The Daily Tar Heel, and returned to the Estes Hills registration desk where they were again refused by Mrs. Andrews.

Finally Mrs. Andrews called Carter, who spoke briefly with McKiernan and instructed Mrs. Andrews to register the couple.

One student Ed Rowland, turned in an appeal form to the registrar after being refused, but he failed to appear at the hearing of the County Elections Board in Hillsboro last Tuesday. There were no other appeals made.

INTERNATIONAL STUDENT RELATIONS

Big UNC Expansion Forecast

The Chapel Hill News Leader

The brightness of Chapel Hill's future was illuminated last night at a meeting in Morehead Planetarium.

(1)—The University expects almost 16,000 students by 1975 and plans to meet the terrific demand by building — with necessary approval, of course—$35,000,000 in new and renovated campus structures.

(2)—The Carrboro Mills' two buildings are being sold to an unidentified firm, with the announcement due within the week.

(3)—The Research Triangle area will probably employ about 25,000 persons in the next 10-15 years.

The meeting was sponsored by the Community Council.

Following reports from J. Arthur Branch, UNC business manager George Watts Hill, of the Research Triangle, Collier Cobb Jr., of the local industrial search group, and Frank Umstead, chairman of the District Planning Board, the gathering—composed of Chapel Hillians from all walks of life—fired a steady stream of probing questions. The chain of rosy forecasts left no doubt that the community will be booming for years to come.

UNC WILL BOOM

Possibly the most staggering of the pronouncements came from Branch, who outlined the University's projected expansion over the next 10 years. Building needs, based on a forecast of around 16,000 regularly-enrolled students by 1970, included:

Projects already approved: addition to Phillips Hall, addition to Peabody Hall, a 32-unit married student project containing 238 one-and two-room apartments; addition to the student nursing school, and a multi-story dorm for men located back of Kenan Stadium to house 700 students.

Other projected construction, by years:

1959-61: construction of new Public Health, Geology, Geography, Botany, and Student Union buildings and another 700-student dormitory.

1961-63: renovation of New East and Davie Hall; construction of new buildings for Swain Hall, Health Affairs, Hill Hall, a foreign language building, an undergraduate library, and a third dormitory for 700 students.

1963-65 renovation of Murphy and Caldwell halls, maintenance shops and storeroom, and a fourth dormitory for 700.

1965-67: renovation of the Medical building, Nursing Building and the main library; another Phillips Hall addition, additions to the School of Dentistry and Manning Hall, and a multi-purpose building for an armory and maybe basketball.

Student enrollment should hit minimums of 8,012 by 1959; 9,466 by 1962; 11,151 by 1965; and 13,523 by 1970. The maximum figure for 1970 was 16,319. The current enrollment is 7,500.

Mr. Hill told of the future of the Triangle project, noting that the area itself would provide no housing facilities and that Raleigh, Durham, and Chapel Hill would have to absorb the expected influx.

In this regard, Mr. Hill said:

"I hope our residents won't hike prices and rents when the people do arrive, but make them feel at home." He said that a good environment was the main selling factor for new firms.

He said that firms are now "coming to us" showing interest in the research idea. He said that some 300 firms have been visited.

PLANNING FROM 1928

Mr. Umstead traced the history of Chapel Hill zoning provisions from the first local ordinance in 1928 to the present.

He illustrated a plight of the planning board by saying that "much of our time has been spent in undoing past things and too little on future planning." In regard to special hearings, he urged persons involved in rezoning matters to "help us by limiting your expression of feeling to affected areas and by not 'cluttering up' these hearings."

Mr. Umstead said that the board has an area in mind for a 8-10 unit fraternity court and is working on a zoning law to govern frat-sorority locations "we hope on a court basis."

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Sarah Barnes Keating, Hamilton Tatum Sparger, Nyal Zeno Williams, William Earl Post, Stephen Carlton Lowder, James Richard Hokanson, James Oliver Baity, Judith Ann Rader, James Louis Taylor, Vincent Joseph Olenick and William Arthur Neustadt.

Harpsicord Music Program Is Set Sunday At Gerrard

A program of music for the harpsichord will be presented Sunday, Feb. 1, at 8 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

Sponsored by Petites Musicales the program is open to the public at no charge. Guest performer will be Dr. Francis Hopper, professor of music and head of the organ department at the University of Louisville.

He will perform a group of solo pieces for the harpsichord. Assisting him will be Dr. Wilton Mason, UNC professor of music and director of the University Chorus, and Efrim Fruchtman, UNC graduate student from Gainesville, Fla.

Dr. Hopper and Fruchtman will present a sonata by George Abel for harpsichord and viola da gamba. A Handel trio for recorder, harpsichord and viola da gamba will be performed on the program by Dr. Hopper, Dr. Mason and Fruchtman.

Last year Dr. Hopper appeared in two programs sponsored by Petites Musicales, one for harpsichord and one for organ.

Dr. Hopper has studied at the Union Theological Seminary in New York City where he earned both bachelor's and a master's degrees in music, and at the School of English Church Music in Chislehurst, England.

While studying in New York, he was organist for Sunday morning services at Carnegie Hall, and during Dr. Hopper's stay in England he gave frequent recitals at both Oxford and Cambridge. He has also given many performances throughout the mid-west.

Frat Reports Theft Of Sofa

Members of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity, 106 Fraternity Court, will have to watch their television from the floor for awhile.

Someone stole into the TV room at the fraternity Tuesday night between 1 and 9 a.m. and carted off a two-seater sofa. Fraternity officers valued the sofa at about $200.

Nothing To Do?

The newspaper needs new staff members to write news, columns, sports and do art work. Most of the work done on the paper is completed between 2 and 5 p.m. daily. This time is usually convenient for students who have classes in the morning hours.

Students interested in work on The Daily Tar may come to the newspaper office in Graham Memorial any afternoon.

A staff meeting will be announced soon.

Cheating

There appears to have been more than a little foul play in connection with the examinations of last week. The possibility of a wholesale cheating ring on campus, for the second time in the past few year, is a truly unfortunate occurence.

It is unfortunate that those given the freedom they have at Carolina do not use this freedom to their advantage. In a cheating case, they must of necessity end out to be the losers in the drama, for no matter what letter grade they receive, they will not have received the same amount of knowledge as other students. Those who are caught are subject to even worse penalties, but basically they are cheating themselves out of an education that will be valuable to them in the future.

Characteristically there will be an outcry for stiff measures and tighter supervision, but this is not the answer and indeed it hampers the problem's solution. Surely, the students who were caught should be punished, but part of the problem, the greatest part, does not lie in the values of these students who seem to live in a valueless void.

What is basically wrong is the system, a system that gives incentive to cheating. What is wrong is the bell shaped curve method of grading which renders certain students harmed by the cheating. What is wrong is the intense inter-personal competition that is stimulated in the schools.

Grades to start off with should not be relative to other students work. Indeed, each instructor should set a standard of achievement that he considers passing and so on up the ladder. In this way a student who cheats may get the same high grade as another student, but the other student will not suffer, and by the time the cheater is fired from his first job for lack of knowledge, he will have learned that he has cheated only himself.

Competition should be stimulated in college, but it should be intra-personal in nature. Each student should be competing against his own ability, and falling short of that ability should be the crime.

Above all the emphasis on grades, which mean one thing in one course, and another in another course should be lessened so that the incentive to cheat will not be there. Unfortunately with the type of educational system that exists in America, this will be a hard job. But perhaps the evil lies in the system, and if so that system must go.

It is unfortunate that Carolina has had to be the one to have two large cheating rings recently, but perhaps it will act as a spur for action.

Who's Not Talking?

An impressive list of student leaders seem noncommittal about letting the public know the facts of the cheating ring. They are not averse to letting rumors go through the campus, unsubstantiated, and at the same time undenied, but they are unwilling to let the public know the truth, so that the judgments passed down next week by the Honor Council will have some basis in fact.

They seem willing to release information only after a conviction has been attained, and upon this basis the public will ever know whether the conviction was fair or unfair. They will not be told whether a case was built up or whether actual evidence was at hand. Indeed, they expect to see a headline after the fact saying that a certain number of students have been suspended. Yet, the public has a right to know, and these leaders seem to think that the public cannot handle the information. But these leaders ought to remember that it was the same public that elected them, and that if they want to protect the individuals involved by not releasing their names, it is one thing, but if they want to hold trials resembling inquisitions, it is another.

One of these days the student leaders on the campus will realize that their primary function is informing the public. When they do, they might assume their rightful stature. Until then, they are a group of people trying to act "responsible".

Got A Stopwatch?

A recent development on the East Carolina campus makes the UNC Women's Residence Council look like saints. According to Associated Press reports, students are allowed to give their dates an "instantaneous" good night kiss, but long kisses are forbidden for fear of losing social priveleges.

It looks as if before too much time passes the "responsible" students and administrators on college campuses will try to legislate fun out of existence, for this is a second in a series of developments on the ECC campus that saw 51 students suspended for having participated in a wild party. It seems as if this whole aura of puritanism will certainly drive students to the parked car, the secluded bush, or the motel room, but of course, President John D. Messick of East Carolina will not have either the reputation of the school besmirched nor will he not be able to say that, he has taken every possible step to see that "evil" did not happen.

The editor would hate to have a mind like Dr. Messick who seems to see evil in the most natural of things, who would like to further the inhibitions that American people are under because of their absurd system of morality, and who does not seem to realize that a college situation can breed permanent associations in which sex and affection are an integral part.

But, if Dr. Messick thinks that a kiss, a long and mutually enjoyed one, is ipso facto proof of more lewd and lascivious activities, then the students of East Carolina will have to bear through this narrowminded attitude at least until the end of the semester when they can transfer.

UNC Grading System

Sidney Dakar

Man, "them exams almost got me!" I suppose professors are the same the world over. My foreign student roommate was telling me about the professors at his home university, where the grades run from 7 (the best) to 1 (the worst).

He says a certain chemistry professor always told his students on he first day how he was going to grade. 7? That is for God. 6? That is for Archimedes.5? That is for professors. 4 and below is for students. Does that line have a familiar ring to any of you after last week's fiascos?

Grading systems are of course necessary if we are to keep some semblance of order. But, the grading system here at Carolina is, I think, rather ridiculous. The "official system," which very few professors actually follow, says that everything below 90 is a C or lower. This method of unequally dividing the grade intervals violates several rather basic rules of statistics. This system seems to be designed with the specific purpose of preventing even the normal number from making A's. It is all right to set the standards high, but if we want a "normal distribution" the grade intervals should be equal.

The very idea of a professor giving a student a 96 (A) or a 94 (B), based upon how the student interpreted some of Shakespeare's lines, is ludicrous. Some teachers give several A's and some give none, regardless of the numerical grades made by the students. Realizing that there is really no way of grading a person's intelligence, as one would grade say oranges, there should at least be a uniform system for all.

Stanford University has a system that is fair to all students and professors. They have the "10:40:40:10" system. Regardless of the particular class, the top 10% get A's, the next 40% get B's and etc. If some of you are wondering where the F's fall in the above 100%, Stanford says that all of their students are picked and they all have the ability to pass. Besides, if any student consistently falls in the last 10% D class, he will be forced to leave school because of his low overall average. If Carolina initiated a similar system, I am sure they could include an "F interval" in the distribution.

To see the absurdness of our grading system, consider the following example. Suppose a student makes an 89 on every subject, except one, while he is at Carolina. Suppose further that all of his professors followed the "official system" and forwarded all C's to Central Records for Joe. But, low and behold, on Joe's last exam, Collective Bargaining, the professor cannot possibly see that he could give Joe more than a 79 on the course. But to ease Joe's pain he sticks a "plus" on the D that he forwards to Central Records. Of course a D is a D, plus or minus, to Central Records.

You guessed it, poor Joe cannot graduate — he doesn't have a C average. Fifty C's and one D, and a D plus, do not make a C average. And so Joe, who actually had almost a B average, stands aside as his friend who made an 81 on every course at Carolina walks by him with his C average and degree in hand.

A Letter

Editor:

In the ABC Referendum issue of The Daily Tar Heel, you printed a letter written by Ira M. Hardy, a University Party legislator. I think that comments on that letter are at this time very much in order, especially on behalf of the Student Party.

For fear of plummeting myself into a barrage of name-calling and petty political bickering, I will make this very brief and to the point. However, I feel, as Student Party floor leader, that I have been challenged to defend my party and what I think it stands for, and defend it I will.

First of all, the Smith Bill which Mr. Hardy mentioned, is a bill calling for a single spring election of the legislature. What Mr. Hardy has against the bill I have not been able to discern from his letter, even though he visciously attacked it and challenged the student body to "rise up" and defeat it. At the same time, he attributes the introduction of the bill to the Student Party despite the fact that the bill was authored completly and debated chiefly by a very capable Independent, Norman B. Smith. I wonder why, Mr. Hardy, you and some of your counterparts didn't vote against the bill when you had he opportunity? (The bill passed without one single dissenting vote).

Secondly, I refuse to attempt to ascertain what campus group U.P. floor leader Charlie Gray represents because only he is a judge of that. I do say, at the same time, that Mr. Gray has proven himself to be conscientious and a hardworker, and I sincerely feel that he votes according to what he thinks is right. A little fortitude of Mr. Gray's caliber on the part of other legislators, both S. P. and U. P., would be very commendable. All too often we blindly follow our leaders without taking into consideration in our own minds what is best for the campus.

Last and most important, I would like to explain the structure of the Student Party. We are a party, which from our founding in 1938, has fostered the idea that any student on this campus who has something to say or ask can come to an S. P. meeting and there he will be given an opportunity to say or ask it. It is into this classification, in my judgment, that the DTH editor and his cliche' fall. They attend all of our meetings and, though I disagree with them on many issues, they are welcome. A political party without freely open and candid discussion can not exist. Quite frankly, I would refuse to belong to a party that held meetings when less than a dozen were present, that elected to party positions people who were not even present at the meetings in whcih they were elected, and that would allow the "block vote" of six or eight larger fraternities to control every move it makes.

The editor of this paper is not chairman of S. P., either official or unofficial; his group of cohorts do not control the party; Student Party is, always has been, and always will be the party of the students—all the students.

I would suggest that Mr. Hardy and other people of University Party lineage should cease trying to convince the student body that the Student Party exists in any form other than it actually does.

Literature: No Defense Needed

John Ciardi

Ours must be a literary age, because the instant a person mentions literature everyone in sight begins to defend it. Helen of Troy had fewer heroes between her and the Greeks than literature has between it and whatever besiegers are at the gates.

It may be that some sort of attacking force does, in fact, exist. If it does, I am not worried by it. It is the defenders I am wary of, and foremost among them are those apologists who begin by asserting that "Literature Is Useful," and who thereupon proceed to praise the study of literature in the name of communication skills. Reduced to its basic absurdity, their argument is that the study of literature is important because it prepares a man to write a better business letter and thus to become more employable within the corporate structure of American society. One may as well argue that surgical training is important because it prepares a man to do a better job of carving his Christmas goose. It does, but who cares?

It is a debasement to make the study of literature a substitute for the minimum course in literacy. The fact that a certain amount of what goes on in educational theory argues for just such a substitution is no justification, but a cause for concern. The study of literature is self-justifying. No apology is required. None is in order.

Literature is one of the central continuing experiences of the race. It is ni cultural ornadent. It is as discreet a method of knowledge as is science, and the kind of knowledge literature makes available is nto approachable by scientific method. Through literature, the voices of mankind's most searching imaginations remain alive to all time. No man is half-civilized until those voices have sounded within him. A savage, after all, is simply a human organism that has not received enough news from the human race. Literature is one most fundamental part of that news. One needs to hear Job lift his question into the wind; it is, after all, every man's question at some time. One needs to stand by Oedipus and to hold the knife of his own most terrible resolution. One needs to come out of his own Hell with Dante and to hear that voice of joy hailing the sight of his own stars returned-to. One needs to run with Falstaff, roaring in his own appetites and weeping into his own pathos. What one learns from those voices is his own humanity. He learns what it is to carry about within mortal meat a bulb of brain wired to a bush of dendrites. Until he has heard those voices deeply within himself, what man can have any sizable idea of himself?

Literature, however, is never about ideas, but always and only about the experience of ideas. Scientists and philosophers discuss ideas. The reader of a good poem does not discuss ideas with the poet; he becomes the poet and relives the experience of the poet's imagination.

That experience is a subtle and far-reaching thing. In the act of a good poem or of a play or novel or short story, the good reader lives a life, or a part of a life, which otherwise could not have occurred to him. And he is detached from that experience at the same time that he knows his own life is very much involved. That experience, moreover, is heightened by being shaped into form; the accidental is eliminated. If the form is good, everything works toward perception. There are no distractions. And because form is indestructible, the experience is always there to be returned to. Should life distract him, the reader can always return to the purity of experience within firm, to find once more, and ever green, the center of value uncluttered by peripheral confusions.

The experience of great literature, above all, is inseparable from the experience of great language, and language is forever one of the profoundest activities of the human race. Language greatly used has all the sanction of a sacrament; the race is as incapable of forgetting a great poem as it is of losing its last wish under the stars. The resonance of great language taking place within the forms of great imagination, is the civilizing force. To dismiss that resonance as merely useful, is to strip society of its culture and to offer it only a technology in return. That resonance is to the life of man what breath is to his body. Art is the way the mind breathes.

As a practicing pessimist, I can locate most of my fears for the future of the United States in the disappearance of that fundamental resonance from the language of official pronouncement. Certainly a nation so lacking in resonance that it can accept federal prose as a language capable of legislating human destinies, is a nation part way to the door of darkness. Does any man seriously believe he can hope to discover who we are by reading the day's prose from Washington?

Let him try it, and then let him return to the Declaration of Independence to hear again the resonance of what we were in the beginning. "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the pursuit of Happiness."

Who can imagine a statement of such force and resonance except as the product of minds shaped and informed by a life-giving contact with all that continuity of experience we call the humanities? There is no education and there is no civilization except as it keeps alive and transmits that resonance. There is no society worth preserving except as that resonance echoes in the voices of its laws, its legislators, and its citizens. There is no question of defending literature. It defends us. Without its voices in us, we are all indefensible —The Saturday Review

Harper's Bizarre

We thing it's time to start our "Back to the Barn" movement.

This calls for explanation.

The other day we mentioned to a friend that an occasional square dance on campus would be nice.

"What!" he cried. His tone questioned either his hearing or our integrity.

Talking our cue from him, we did a bit of quiet research about campus and discovered that no topic is spoken of in more hushed tones than is you know what. Something is lacking here .

Now where we come from, on Saturday night everyone puts on shoes and goes to the square dance. The whole of society turns out; it is the highlight of the social week, with fun ad frolic for all; everybody and his brother comes and brings a friend.

Oddly enough, though distance from the Atlantic Ocean is measured in terms of both high and low tides, the musical groups presiding range in name from the Alleghenies to west of the Pecos. There are always two or three ensembles in the County called the "Red River somethings."

But if the names are imported, the music is domestic. And remarkably good, too. Some of the best fiddlin' we've heard was patted out by feet that wore hip boots six days a week. No hillbilly rock and roll here, the music is set to a tempo that only the feet can appreciate.

Strange sights appear in the whirl and twist of bodies and patterns blurred on the floor. One favorite invariably brings an old straight-back chair with him and spends most of the eveing dancing it about. Occasionally he climbs upon his partner and calls a figure. A newcomer is dumbfouded when he first exchanges his lady-fair for the old wicker-bottom, but he soon gets her back with a shout and a slap on the back.

Spinning in the melee on the floor you sometimes glimpse an especially pretty face — round and round you go, then she's gone. Only one recourse here: dance the next figure, and there she'll be again.

No better place for wild exitement, giddy laughter than at a square dance. Winter Germans are irretrievably lots, but we understand that Clam Hewett and his Rio Grande Four are open for bookings in the Spring. —J. Harper

Information Lacking

Gerald W. Johnson

The American with no inside information who must judge by the superficial aspect of things now has to choose one of two theories, both unpalatable. He must believe either (a) that the Administration really had no inkling that Uunik was going up and that Batista was coming down, or (b) that, possessing the information, it deemed it unimportant to give the American public the slightest warning of these impending events.

Since there is evidence to support either belief, it is admissible to confess a preference, and I prefer (a). If the government really didn't know what was happening, that is evidence merely of an incompetent spy system. But if it considered it inadvisable to inform the people of highly significant events simply because the information might be somewhat alarming, that is evidence of incompetent government; and it is obviously easier to reform the spy system than to reform the government from top to bottom.

The principle evidence supporting the more dismal theory (b) is, in fact, merely the prevalence of the Madison Avenue mentality in government circles. That mentality holds as an article of faith that what the customer does not know will not hurt the advertiser. This principle seems to be the only logical basis for Mr. Dulles' persistent refusal to permit American newspaper men to find out at their own risk what Red China is actually like and is actually doing.

On the other hand, the swift resignation of the American ambassador to Cuba supports the other theory. It is clear enough that Washington is not filled with love and admiration of Mr. Smith; and it is easy to understand why if he let Washington get caught in an embarrassing position when the Batista government fell. The event occurred between two editions of the Baltimore Sun. The morning paper carried dispatches from Havana asserting that the revolt was practically crushed; the Evening Sun, of the same day, announced Batista's flight. Editorially, the paper has remained grimly silent on the subject, but it can hardly be pleased at having been made to look foolish. No more can the Associated Press and other news services, when the merest hint from the State Department would have enabled them to cover themselves with a paragraph explaining that the earlier dispatches were only what the Batista government said.

The prompt disappearance of the ambassador suggests that remedial steps are being taken, but it is not proof that they are sufficient. If the gentleman is, as various commentators have been cruel enough to suggest, merely a fat cat who owed his appointment to heavy campaign contributions, still that doesn't account for the embassy staff, the lads that used to be derisively called the cookie-pushers. In the old days, if a revolution had been boiling under his feet, even a second-rate cookie-pusher would have discovered it and would have tipped off Washington long before the bullets began to smash the embassy windows.

One is bound to suspect that here is a delayed reaction to the disastrous pilgrimage of Cohn and Schine, those fantastic stooges of Senator McCarthy, who trailed through Europe half a dozen years ago, shattering the morale of the Foreign Service. It was discovered then that any cookie-pusher who reported to Washington an opinion, however well-founded, that displeased a Senator was liable to be kicked out of his job and blasted as a Communist sympathizer; so, not being imbeciles, they quite reporting such opinions. But important news quite commonly comes in first as a rumor without confirmation, and if the State Department isn't informed of those rumors it may be caught flat-footed.

In any event, whatever the reason, it is evident that the American public is not being given early and accurate information of what is going on beyond the boundaries of the country. As regards the Russian satellite program there is some excuse, for gathering accurate information about that is extremely difficult. But when we are completely misled about the course of a civil war raging in an island 90 miles from Key West, our system of information is definitely breaking down badly.

Perhaps it is impossible for a man who served his time in newspaper work in the editorial, not the advertising, end to form a just appreciation of the Madison Avenue mentality; but I am persuaded that one of the chief failures of this Administration is due to its inability to grasp the enormous difference between selling soap and gathering early and accurate information. Both, to be sure, are phases of public relations, but their methods are widely dissimilar. Roosevelt and Truman understood this, and FDR was the great master of the art of making a hostile press serve his own ends. The cookie-pushers may have their comic aspect, but as a class they are more intelligent than a couple of young squirts picked up by some Senator; and to a man they know that in ordinary affairs half a dozen first-rate American newspaper correspondents can get them more information than a platoon of hired spies and can get it sooner.—The New Republic

ECC Shortens Smooches

GREENVILLE, N. C.—(AP)—President John D. Mesick of East Carolina College told a mass meeting of students Wednesday night it's okay to peck your sweetheart goodnight, but those long, passionate kisses have got to go.

Messick called the meeting to explain college rules and regulations governing campus life. It came as the aftermath of a lively student party Jan. 10 which was raided by college officials and campus and town police and which resulted in the disciplining of 51 students.

Messick told the students that if they must kiss they should do it on an "instantaneous" basis.

As far as those long smooches go, however, the president said:

"This close association, the clinging kiss of such a long nature will cause people to begin talking."

Press Club Will Hear Co-Publisher

"The Small City Daily as a Career" will be discussed by David J. Whichard III, co-publisher of the Greenville Daily Reflector, at the regular meeting of the Press Club Monday at 7:30 p.m. The meeting will be at the home of Dean Norval Neil Luxon.

Whichard is a 1948 graduate of the School of Journalism and was Greenville's Young Man of the Year in 1951.

Two Weeks' Bridge Results Announced

Results of the monthly master point tournament held two Mondays ago in Graham Memorial are as follows: NORTH SOUTH: Chuck Hoskins and Miriam Perry were in a three-way tie for third place. EAST WEST: Dan Duke and Malcolm Clark, first place; Bill Caison and Bruce Cathey, tied for third place.

Last Monday's results are as follows: NORTH SOUTH: Mrs. Mildred Alexander (townsperson) and Mike Alexander, first place; Mrs. J. M. Pinney and Dan Duke, second place; EAST WEST: Dr. Robert Melton and Robley Light of Duke University, first place; N. D. O'Briant and Jim Drautman of Duke, second place; and Bob Schreiber and Frank Elfland, third place.

Malcolm Clark, undergraduate math-education major, was awarded a ten-inch trophy as the student with the highest series average for the Fall semester. Clark's average for his five best games was 60.78 percent. This average surpassed both student and non-student competition.

Dr. John C. Brauer, dean of the University of North Carolina School of Dentistry, will attend a meeting of the Deans of the American Association of Dental Schools in Chicago, Feb. 6. The following day he will participate in a meeting of the 15th Congress on Dental Education and Licensure. This conference is sponsored each year by the Council on Dental Education and is planned and designed specifically to discuss problems of particular interest to examiners and educators.

Summer Seminar Scheduled

Carolina students are eligible to be delegates to the seventh annual International Student Relations Seminar July 29 through Aug. 31 at Harvard University and the University of Illinois.

Students (including graduates) who are accepted as delegates will receive a scholarship covering travel, room, board and fee expenses.

The seminar is designed to provide student leaders with the necessary background of skill to deal with the contemporary problems of international relations as they exist among national and international student organizations in all parts of the world.

"The seminar provides an almost unequal opportunity for American students to hear opinions and justifications for various situations from qualified students and educators," said Student Body President Don Furtado.

Particapants in the seminar are prepared for service as officers, delegates, researchers, commissioners and developers in national and international student organizations.

The seminar uses case-study methods, combined with guest speakers and discussion groups. The first seven weeks are spent at Harvard University and the final two weeks are spent at the Twelfth National Student Congress at the University of Illinois.

Each year about 35 students attend the seminar. About half of these are United States students. The others are student leaders from various other countries throughout the world. The seminar is very informal.

Application blanks may be obtained from the Student Government office in Graham Memorial. The applications must be submitted to Don Furtado by Feb. 28. Applicants are urged to pick up their blanks soon because transcript of records and recommendations are required.

Battle added that Judge Sobeloff seemed convinced the board was "anxious to move forward in compliance with the law and needed time to carry out its program."

Battle said he was to present to U. S. District Judge Paul within 20 days a formal program defining desegregation plans to become effective next September.

Immediately after reaching the decision, Sobeloff went into another hearing on a request to postpone segregation at Arlington, Va., public schools.

Carolina Lays 10-1 Record On Line Against Tigers

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's nationally second ranked basketball Tar Heels resume cage activities tonight when they take on Clemson College's Tigers in the night-cap of a hardwood double-header in Charlotte Coliseum.

The Tar Heels, who sport a fine 10-1 record thus far in overall games, own sole position of first place in the torrid ACC flag chase. Carolina is unbeaten at 5-0 in the league.

The Heels return from the mid-season exam break with fond memories of their last outing. Just before the exam grind got underway, Carolina whipped then first-ranked State 72-68 in overtime on the State home floor.

Lost Only One

The Chapel Hillians have dropped but one decision, that being 83-75 to Michigan State (currently leading the Big Ten) in the semi-finals of the Dixie Classic.

Clemson, already beaten once by Carolina, will be out for revenge tonight. The Tigers dropped an 83-67 verdict in Woollen Gym in the season opener. Since then the Tigers have compiled a 3-4 conference mark and a 6-10 overall record.

Clemson's best game came early in the year when they defeated the talented Duke Blue Devils 56-55. They forced N. C. State to the limit at Clemson before bowing be the scant margin of 56-54.

Five in Double Figures

With all five starters averaging in double figures, the Tar Heels figure as one of the most potent offensive clubs in the nation. Soph flash York Larese leads the pack with a 16.2 scoring average, good for second place in the ACC. Larese has hit exactly 50 percent of his shots from thef loor. Not far behind is fast-coming Lee Shaffer, who has clicked for a 14.0 average.

Harvey Salz (12.7), Dick Kepley (11.5) and Doug Moe (11.2) complete the Carolina starting line-up.

Clemson's leading point man is guard Don Carver with an 11.7 mark. The latest Tiger "find" is towering Walt Gibbons who had a 30-point night recently.

Lead In Offense

As a team, the Tar Heels have a 74.5 scoring average pre game and have limited opponents to 64.7. The Heels lead the ACC in team offense.

Tonight's game is scheduled to get underway at 9:15 following the State-South Carolina game at 7:30. Tomorrow night the teams reverse themselves with another double header on tap. Tomorrow night Carolina meets South Carolina in the opener with the State-Clemson match to follow.

The ticket office has announced that priorities for students and faculty for the Carolina-Maryland basketball game here Wednesday, February 4, are presently being offered.

Heels Have Perfect Mark In Charlotte

North Carolina's basketball Tar Heels move into some happy hunting grounds of the past when they collide with Clemson and South Carolina Friday and Saturday, respectively, in Charlotte's Coliseum.

Earlier this season the Tar Heels toppled Notre Dame in Charlotte. Last season they turned back Furman in that ultra sports palace. The year they won the national championship, they defeated Clemson there, and the year before that they gave Charlotte a college basketball debut in the Coliseum with a win over Georgia Tech.

Like Charlotte

"We like Charlotte and like to play there," says Coach Frank McGuire, "but our luck may have run out. With earlier wins over Clemson and South Carolina this year, we know they will be laying for us, and we don't know how our team has adjusted after the long layoff."

The Tar Heels have not played since Jan. 14. That was the night the travelling Tar Heels invaded the Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh and turned back N. C. State in overtime 72-68.

Moe Starred There

Doug Moe was one of the most glittering stars in that last win, although all hands played well. The number two nationally ranked Tar Heels have depended on balance all season and most nights one operative has played about as good as the other, with occasionally an individual having a "big" night.

All starting Tar Heels are shooting in double figures, with York Larese at the head of the parade with 178 points in the 11 games played. Lee Shaffer is just behind with a 14.0 average. In field goal accuracy the two are also close together, Larese batting .500 and Shaffer .492.

Shaffer's 26 points against Cincinnati is the highest any Tar Heel has scored this season. Shaffer had 24 in Carolina's first win over Notre Dame, at Lousville. And Larese collected 24 against Northwestern.

Practice Sessions

Coach Frank McGuire has announced that all students are welcome to come down and watch the Tar Heels practice for the Maryland game.

Practice sessions will be held Monday at 5 p.m. and Tuesday at 3:30 p.m.

RESEARCH TRIANGLE — This photograph shows the location of the Research Triangle which will be located inside the triangle formed by Chapel Hill, Durham, and Raleigh. The project will employ and estimated 25,00 persons within the next 10-15 years. The research area itself will provide no housing for employees and the three nearby cities are expected to absorb the influx of workers. The effects of the Research Triangle and growth of the University were discussed Wednesday night at a meeting of the Chapel Hill Community Council. The meeting was attended by more than 100 persons.

Next Decade Will Cover UNC Expansion

Plans for a multi-million dollar construction program over the next decade are being drafted to meet skyrocketing enrollments at UNC.

Projections for growth which have been remarkably accurate to the present time predict an enrollment of nearly 14,500 students in 1970. To house, feed, and educate this onslaught of new students six major construction projects are now in various stages of operation and 11 more major units are scheduled before 1970. Also 12 existing buildings will be extensively renovated.

These plans were revealed by J. Arthur Branch, UNC business manager, at a public meeting sponsored by the Chapel Hill Community Council in the Morehead Building Wednesday night.

Projects already under way include the addition to Phillips Hall to be completed next spring, addition to Peabody Hall which will get under way next week. A 32-building married student housing development to contain 208 one and two room apartments will be at least partially completed by next fall Bids will soon be taken on an annex to the nurses dorm which will house 82 student nurses. A building to house the School of Pharmacy is now under construction.

Branch explained that all the other proposed construction hinged on a maze of budgetary process, subject to final approval by the North Carolina General Assembly. Since considerable construction would be necessary, however, to the continuation of the University in meeting needs of rising enrollments, Branch listed a schedule of construction probably to be undertaken before 1970.

New buildings will include a $2 million student center to be located on Emerson (baseball) field. Three

Furtado Expresses Regret On Statement About Durham Paper

'Rush' Story Is Real, But Of Brief Run

By RON SHUMATE

The age-old movie story of the rush, rush, rush in the life of an actor played a brief run in Chapel Hill Friday night.

But the story wasn't on a screen.

The epic took place in the short space between the Carolina Theatre and the parking lot behind Sloan's Drugstore.

Starring in the role was the well-known veteran of the "rush" wars, James Whitmore. He was in Chapel Hill viewing "The Old Man and the Sea."

Whitemore came roaring out of the theatre like the place was on fire. He was slightly hunched over, his coat collar was turned up and his hat was pulled down partly over his face.

After a short chase (as far as the sidewalk) he was apprehended and questioned. He explained his great rush: "I'm late for an appointment in Durham. I was supposed to be there at 7:30." The time was then 7:51. So in the short walk to his shiny black and white '59 automobile, the questions and answers flew.

Still Refuses Comment On Reported Cheating

Student Body President Don Furtado yesterday expressed regret at having made any statement "which might reflect upon the editorial integrity of the Durham Morning Herald."

Furtado referred to his statement in Friday's Daily Tar Heel concerning the alleged stolen exams, in which he refused to comment on the situation. Furtado was quoted as saying "The Durham Morning Herald has done enough damage already."

"This comment was made as a result of the questions of several students who had asked me about such a supposed article by the Herald. Obviously, I was misinformed by these students, for there has been no story by the Herald on this subject as far as I can learn," said Furtado.

Student leaders still refused to comment on whether or not a cheating ring existed.

Hugh Patterson, chairman of the Men's Honor Council, said he knew nothing of any trial, supposedly to be held Monday night. However, Howard Holderness, a member of the Honor Council, said he had been told to "call a meeting for Monday night. There will be a trial."

Holderness declined to comment on the nature of the trials. He said the official notification of the nature of the trials would have to come from the Attorney General's office.

Holderness also declined to state where the trials would be held. "I do not think it would be the nature of the Council to reveal the place of the trials." This is standard procedure for the Council not to reveal their meeting places.

Prof. Wallace E. Caldwell, of the UNC History Department, said he received a telephone call Friday night, "from the president of the Honor Council," warning him that some students planned to "leave the room to receive help on the final exam." Prof. Caldwell said the caller asked him to keep all the students in the classroom.

Prof. Caldwell said he kept his students in his classroom during both of the exams he gave Saturday.

Sam Magill, Assistant Dean of Student Affairs, said he could not give out any information, concerning this cheating matter, which Student Government does not wish to release itself. "That has always been my policy," Magill said, "though I do know something about the matter."

Five Coeds To Describe UNC Scene

The Carolina scene will be described to Mademoiselle magazine by five newly selected UNC College Board members who are Virginia Aldige, Dee Dee DeVere, Ann Harvey, Susan McCotter and Jane Reah White.

Advocating the UNC type government, Ann Harvey a senior of Sheffield, Ala., submitted "Self-government is better than good government" to place on the College Board. The ADPi sorority member intends to do fashion work in magazine publications.

UNC art winner, Jane Reah White, also an ADPi, satirically depicted a formal dance. The Roanoke Rapids native plans to teach art upon her graduation this year.

An essay on student culture placed YWCA President Dee Dee DeVere of Morganton on the board. The Chi O sorority member plans to do advertising promotions next year.

Working in an embassy in France is junior 'Ginny' Aldige's ambition. She is a Stray Greek from Durham.

Nearness of the deadline for the first of two assignments which will determine the 20 girls selected as Guest Editors provoked apprehension among some College Board members who said they had hardly begun. The 20 Guest Editors will help to write, edit and illustrate Mademoiselle's 1959 August College issue.

S. Berman To Close Dept. Store

A Chapel Hill merchant is going out of business after 47 years, within 60 days. S. Berman will soon close the doors of his establishment, Berman's Department Store.

Berman is selling his stock because of bad health. He will retain ownership of the building, however, and lease it to the Intimate Book Shop.

Paul Smith, Intimate owner, said yesterday the book shop would be moved into Berman's as soon as the building is remodeled. More space is needed for sorting books and placing stock, he said.

Berman's will be closed Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week in preparation for a store wide sale, which will start Thursday. The entire stock will be marked down.

State Affairs Committee Shows Headway Signs

Carolina students who have been talking to their legislators in almost all of North Carolina's 100 counties may be making some headway.

Norman S. Smith, chairman of the Committee on State Affairs, said Thursday that in light of the more favorable financial position of the state many items of the budget may be fulfilled.

Smith also said there is growing interest in a bond issue for capital construction which will include many millions of dollars for the University.

Many reports have been received from these legislators, and most of the reports have been favorable.

The legislators were impressed that the students are interested enough to try to become better informed on the financial needs of the University—on their own time and at their own expense, Smith said.

One legislator said that the student who recently visited him was the first to do so in 20 years. Another sent a personal letter. Still others have promised to introduce members of the committee to see various key personnel.

"So consequently members of the committee will be going to Raleigh on various days during Legislature to make contacts," said Smith.

The project was initiated by students, is operated by students and is financed by students. Many students have made phone calls at their own expense.

The students' efforts have been publicized across the state. The director of the University News Bureau, Pete Ivey, has done a series of articles on the project which have appeared in various newspapers in North Carolina.

'Job Huntin' Time Arrives For Seniors

It's job hunting time for seniors.

And the University Placement Service is ready to arrange interviews with employers for seniors and other student seeking jobs this spring or summer or after military service.

Students wanting work have been asked to register now with the Placement Service.

Placement Director J. M. Galloway said yesterday the calendar for February is heavily scheduled with company representatives seeking potential employes. Of the more than 200 company representatives who come to UNC during the year, more than half come in February or March.

Last year the Placement Service arranged 3,467 interviews between students and employers. Of this number 762 interviews were in February.

Housing Area In Planning For Greeks

Plans were revealed Wednesday night for the development of a fraternity-sorority area away from the residential districts of Chapel Hill.

Frank G. Umstead, chairman of the Chapel Hill Planning Board, announced that an area already has been chosen to take care of eight to 10 fraternity houses. This and future developments will be in the form of courts, around which several fraternity or sorority houses will be constructed.

"We intend to eliminate the influence of fraternity and sorority houses in residential areas," Mr. Umstead said. He noted that the houses were unpopular among the other residents in the areas where they are presently located, that "everyone feels they are needed but no one wants to live near one."

The date that the initial project will be undertaken and the specific location were not revealed.

Furtado announced yesterday that interviews will be held Feb. 11 beginning at 2:30 p.m.

'Scuttlebutt' To Serve Men In New Dormitories Is Open

A "Scuttlebutt" for men living in the three new dormitories in the Kenan woods area is now open from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. in the basement of Avery Dorm.

The "temporary" campus store was opened Wednesday and will continue to serve students living in Avery, Parker and Teague until a building housing a cafeteria and campus store is constructed in 1961. The new building will be constructed at the same time an eight-story dormitory is built.

Until 1961 the campus store in Avery will sell such things as: donuts, coffee, hot chocolate, ice cream, cigarettes, sandwiches, candy, crackers and bottle drinks. No fountain drinks will be served.

The campus store was set up after the Interdormitory Council and Campus Stores Committee acted on an apparent need of the 700 students in the three new dormitories who are so far removed from the main campus.

Students living in rooms on the basement floor of Avery were polled in December and gave no objections to the establishment of a campus store on their floor.

Ashmore Here For Lectures

Harry Ashmore, editor of the "Arkansas Gazette" arrived in Chapel Hill last night to act as a visiting lecturer in the UNC School of Business "Great Ideas Weekend."

Ashmore, who rode his newspaper through the Little Rock integration tide, will talk to the Executive program at 8:30 a.m. The meeting is closed to the public because of the small size of the room used.

A press conference is planned today at 1:30 p.m. in the faculty seminar room on the third floor of Carroll Hall.

Germanics Specialist Gets Assignment In Publications

UNC Germanics specialist W. P. Friederich, co-president of the International Comparative Literature Congress, has received another professional assignment in the publications field.

DR. W. P. FRIEDERICH

Friederich is one of three Americans who have been invited to participate in the editorial work of the French" Review of Comparative Literature." Named with the UNC professor were H. Hatzfeld of Catholic University and Henri Peyre of Yale.

With this selection Professor Friederich is now connected with three of the world's four periodicals in comparative literature: the American Journal, "Comparative Literature," which he founded in 1949; "Yearbook of Comparative Literature," published in Chapel Hill since 1952; and the French Journal, founded in Paris in 1921.

A member of the UNC faculty since 1935, Dr. Friederich taught formerly at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Yale University. Originally from Switzerland, he was educated at Bern, the Sorbonne in Paris and at Harvard.

Student Party To Hear Furtado

A major policy address by Student Body President Don Furtado will highlight a Student Party meeting to be held at 7:30 Monday night in the Rendezvous Room in Graham Memorial.

Furtado's speech will outline his proposed legislative and executive program for the coming months. "This meeting will be the official kick-off of the Student Party's spring campaign to furnish student government with the best possible leadership for the coming year," Student Party Chairman John Brooks said.

All SP members are requested to attend and be prepared to pay party dues of $1.00 which will be collected at the door. Brooks said that other interested visitors and prospective SP members are invited to attend.

Punch and cookies will be served.

Nothing To Do?

The newspaper needs new staff members to write news, columns, sports and do art work. Most of the work done on the paper is completed between 2 and 5 p.m. daily. This time is usually convenient for students who have classes in the morning hours.

Students interested in work on The Daily Tar may come to the newspaper office in Graham Memorial any afternoon.

A staff meeting will be announced soon.

Virginia & Law

Despite the continued bellow of some Virginia legislators, it appears definite that massive resistance has been dealt a death blow in the Supreme Court of that state.

Even Gov. Lindsay Almond, architect of of the massive appears resigned to bringing about limited integration, if not overjoyed at the prospect, Gov. Almond seems to be doing his share to make the new situation work as well as possible. It is somewhat unfortunate that he cannot withdraw his proposal for private schools so that other citizens would be unable to capitalize on mass reaction to stall integration, but at least the open defiance is no longer there, and the statement that Almond made immediately following the court's decision has borne no fruit.

It was an extremely lucky thing that the state court took the action rather than the federal court, for if a federal court had handed down the decision it is more than probable that massive resistance would have had a rebirth of strength despite the adverse decision. Indeed, the court's action was one of the few southern displays of responsibility in the handling of the segregation problem.

The segregation problem is basically a southern problem, for only in the south is segregation legally constructed. It is, a problem that requires leadership and not demagoguery, and leadership is hard to find, while demagoguery is in every nook and cranny of the area. As a result, it has been largely northern pressure that has been bringing about integration and compliance, and yet slowly barriers are being broken down and certain individuals have arisen to champion the cause of right when they would have been trampled not many years ago.

The Virginia decision brings with it an aura of hope for a complicated problem that will take yeasr to solve. The hope lies in an awakened south, cognizant of its responsibilities and working, if only grudgingly, to the goal of a more perfect democracy in which all people whether black, white, red, or yellow have equality of opportunity.

Examination Books

To illustrate high scholarship in this University, every examination period the University, through the Book Exchange, has published an official examination book which most students use for their term examinations.

So high is the demand for honor and scholarship that they include a small portion of the honor code, and a statement on how to take examinations and to deal with the problems that come up.

A prime example of the type of scholarship demanded of students is a sentence on the examination book which reads, "if you have a question about the exam, CONSULT the instructor.' Anyone for Spelling!?

Student Registration

The disinterest on the part of the people of the United States in general and students on the UNC campus in particular is a matter of consistent wonder and concern.

It must be wonderful to be in such a state of rapture that the right to vote means very little if anything to the individual student. However, it seems more than evident that if this much concern is exerted by the people of the United States, whatever remnants of democracy that exist today will vanish.

In all approximately 150 students availed themselves of the opportunity to register, and a great majority of these were registered. Only a small percentage were turned down, and of those, only one took the opportunity to appeal. The individual who took the opportunity to appeal did not go to his appeal hearing, and consequently did not get the opportunity to register. In short, the students have no kick coming from registration officials in Chapel Hill, for they did not try to register, and those that did try were denied were unwilling to challenge their denial.

Thus, the only complaint may be a complaint in retrospect. It is a complaint about the treatment of students at the first two weeks of registration. It is a complaint of why it was necessary in some instances to have a Daily Tar Heel photographer around to insure student rights. It is a complaint of why a special issue of the newspaper must be published in order to insure students of their rights. Yet, these complaints are minor, and the real complaint is an old one — student apathy.

Variations

Gail Godwin

That old axiom that goes: "You can't see the forest for the trees" is very applicable to the situation of a student at this university — or at any other university for that matter.

It is too easy to get lost in a maze of registration forms, drop-add lines, searches for old quizzes for the new courses, merciless first -hour judgments of this semester's professors, and so on.

And once lost, the student has a hard time returning to the firm ground of his convictions. In fact, he has such a hard time that most of the time he does not even bother to return.

Oh, some rainy day as he shuffles meaninglessly to some class or other he may look up from his mud-spatered loafers to the dreary sky and ask "What am I here for? Why am I at the university?" And the answer may be one of many at that particular moment. The answer may be: "To get a diploma and the job that says one must have a diploma."

The answer may be: "To learn more . . . about something . . . so that I can understand things better." And on he goes through the trees which seperate only wide enough to make a path to the various classrooms.

It is timely, perhaps even coincidental, that — on the very day new classes began — the Saturday Review should come out with Archibald MacLeish's perceptive and denuding article entitled "What is a True University?"

This article appears on page 11 of the January 31 issue of SR and should be read by the deans in their book-lined offices, the administratory in the South Building hierarchy, the select few that reside in the brick building across the street from Morehead Planetarium, by the professors, assistant professors, instructors, and assistant instructors — AND BY THE STUDENTS.

MacLeish has cut down all the trees and chartered an airplane to fly his reader over the forest. The view is broad, far-reaching, and disturbing.

He brings to memory the 1902 inaugural address of Woodrow Wilson as president of Princeton. The message of the address was that The American University must have a Purpose and that the Purpose should be the training of the young for American life, for the nation's service.

At that time, MacLeish points out such statements took courage. "Today the difficulty would be to hold an audience together to hear them."

The reason that Wilson's words have lost value and meaning to Americans, says the author, lies in the change of certain basic concepts; for instance, "American life" in 1902 meant life in a natio which was a society of men; today that same life has come to mean the life of a vast social machine which demands of citizens that they be efficient arts of itself.

"The result is that Mr. Wilson's great educational objective, preparation for the service of the nation, has a different sound in our ears than it had in the ears of his listeners in that happy far-off time before the first World War. Whe Mr. Wilson used that phrase he was thinking, and his listeners with him of the duty of the colleges and universities TO TURN OUT PEOPLE LIKE ELIHU ROOT AND HENRY L. STIMSON — MEN CAPABLE OF TAKING THEIR PLACES IN THAT SOCIETY OF MEN WHICH THE NATION THEN WAS. AND SERVING IT BY LEADING IT.

"When we read the phrase today we think of somethnig very different: the alleged duty of the colleges and universities to turn out people with certain specialized skills — in physics, or in chemistry, or in engineering — which the nation as Nation finds it needs; not to lead it but to work for it."

Is it any wonder that today's student has a hard time orientating himself to his place in the university as related to his place in the nation? It is very unpleasant ot think that one is going to grow up just to become a art of something instead of a whole being, "the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God are supposed to entitle one.

Life Different At Gottingen

Bob Nobles

(Bob Nobles and Frances Reynolds are the two UNC exchange scholars currently studying at Gottingen University.)

Student life is a bit different here than back at UNC. Gottingen University, as in most German Universities, has no campus. The buildings are scattered all over the city. There are a few student homes, but most of the students live privately in rented rooms. Frances Reynolds lives in a student home, the Nansen Haus, where she is able to meet students from the world over. Half the students there are foreigners and the other half Germans.

I live privately. My room, I believe, is typical of many of the German students' rooms here. It is cheap for Gottingen, $12.50 per month, but it lacks the luxuries of our dorms such as telephone, running water, bath, and central heat. The electricity and heat is paid for according to use. However, there is a telephone at the Post Office, and hot showers can be had at the gym. In the adjoining room lives my roommate from Hamburg, Kay Lump.

The sun gets up around here at 8:30 a.m. and proceeds just as lazily to turn in at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. So if you are going to get it done in the daytime, you really have to work fast. Direct sunlight is rarely seen. I have begun to suspect that the state of Lower Saxony has commissioned a cloud to hang over us for the semester. Honestly speaking, there has been a total of ten days of sunshine since November.

The students here eat breakfast in their rooms. Mine usually consists of rolls, honey, butter, an orange, and one-half liter milk and costs about twenty cents. After breakfast we all scatter to hear the lectures wheih don't start on the hour but at quarter past. This extra fifteen minutes is called "the academic quarter" and is given by most professors here. When the professor enters the room, the students rap their knuckles on the desk or pound their feet on the floor. This is the traditional gesture of respect. The students also hiss when the professor says something which doesn't appeal to them. The lectures are always begun with "Meine Damen and Herrn."

Some lectures start as early as 7 a.m. and some as late as 8 p.m. One of the latter is Professor Percy Schramm's lecture on the Second World War. Professor Schramm was the official historian for the Nazi government during the closing years of World War II, and his two hour lecture is undoubtedly one of the most popular in Gottingen. It is the hardest to get a place in because it is open to the general public. Every Thursday night we arrive one hour early to stand in the crowd before the door which is opened at 7:30. When it does open, there is always a united surge to get through and practically a free-for-all to get a good seat. Nevertheless, the lecture is always worth the trouble.

The Germans are not known for their good cooking, and the student cafeteria or "Mensa" bears this out. However, there is always enough. Usually there is a soup and a plate with meat, vegetable, and potatoes, always potatoes, stacks of big white potatoes. I like potatoes. The meal costs twenty-five cents, and milk has been reduced to two and one-half cents per half pint. Recently the student government had the quality of food improved, but it still lacks variety.

On Degrees

Sidney Dakar

We all, on occasion, resort to rationalization to compromise the vast difference between our beliefs and reality. The other day a friend told me that he was not going to even bother to take one of his final exams; he did not have time. I asked him if he did not want to get credit for the course. He said that he really was not too interested in the credit, that he mainly wanted to learn.

This attitude is good, but not very practical. If I was only interested in learning as such, I would leave school tomorrow and start in earnest to read the many great books that I have been collecting. School duties do not give me time to read the books of the great masters of politics and literature, the books I enjoy reading most. Most of these will have to wait until I finish my formal requirements for a degree.

There are others who share this view. I laughingly recall a friend who studied at George Washington. We were in a Washington cocktail lounge one night several years ago celebrating his finishing of "the requirements" for his degree. "By the way, Bill," I asked, "how did you come out on that psychology course that you hated so much?" "Oh, my God!" moaned Bill, "I haven't been to that class in so long that I have forgotten about the final exam!" The exam happened to be given on the last day for exams, the next day. Bill quickly gulped the rest of his martini, ate the olive and left to study the rest of the night for the exam. He made a D on the course.

Today, Bill is the project manager of a multi-million dollar project which is linking all the NATO countries with a complex communications network. He hires and fires engineers daily.

I, like Bill, have a dislike for at least half of my courses and a positive hate for some of them. I have made B's on more than a few courses that I hated and rarely did any serious studying—excuse me—memorizing, until the night before the final examination. Attending most classes does not increase one's knowledge; it is merely a formality that must be observed if one wants to remain a student of the university and do some serious studying on his own time.

Yes, the student was right in wanting to learn rather than to merely work for a grade. This attitude, however, will not remain long when this student goes out into the world of reality. Can you imagine the impression that a self-educated person would make upon a busy personnel manager who had granted him an interview? "In what field is your degree?" "Well, ahhh, you see, I don't actually have a degree, but I have been studying on my own for the last ten years." The personnel manager would smile and tell the naive man that his application would be put on file and that he would be called "If there are any opening that can be filled with your qualifications."

It is too bad that society does not pick people who have the most knowledge for the responsible positions. Many of our most learned people have become so by studying on their own. The sad truth of the matter is that in applying for most jobs a degree is necessary, knowledge is not.

Radicleer

Cortland Edwards II

In this age of internationalism, space travel, and moon rockets we have witnessed the formation of an amazing amount of organizations.

But the most amazing organization of all, was formed right here on this campus last semester. Its first meeting of the new semester will be announced shortly in the Daily Tar Heel.

The group, composed of girls who came over on the Mayflower, calls itself the "What's A Lady Club" or "I Don't Care If You Are Looking for Pine Cones, Just Get the Hell Out of the Bushes."

This admirable group of stout-hearted females have picked the "White Rose" as their club flower and by an unanimous decision they have chosen as their song "I Don't Want to Set the World On Fire."

Organized under the pressure of a very favorable ratio and an unfavorable reputation these studious girls who have loads of personality have banded together in unison as a "Standards Committee" and have decided that the first thing they must do is to define what a LADY is.

Now that is admirable, isn't it? Truly admirable! They want to define what a Lady is! Can you amagine? I can't define it. Webster can't define it. Not even Anthony Wolfe could define it!

But with moral stamina and all kinds of intestinal fortitude these pioneers are going out into the world and without any protection from the Indians, they are going to define a "Lady"!

But they are not going to stop with just a mere definition. Oh no not these girls. Like I said, they have lots of personality. They are going to draw up a set of rules giving empirical evidence as to what a Lady does and what a Lady doesn't do.

Now that's logical isn't it? I mean if you find out what one "does" then you automatically kow what one "doesn't"!

Since this formidable task the club has purposed themselves into doing is so magnanimous, perhaps it would be gentlemanly to offer some suggestions.

If we look the word LADY up in a synonym dictionary perhaps we can find out what this thing is. let's see—lacuscular, lading, ladle, lady.

Ah, here we are! Lady. "* Female!" Hm-m-m-m. An asterisk female! That's interesting, at least we know that it is a vegetable. But what does the asterisk mean. "An asterisk indicates place of treatment of each group!"

Gosh, it sounds like a disease. It says that a Lady's a female who's asterisk needs to be treated in a group. Oh no! That couldn't be right. Maybe it means to look up "Female"!

"Female (the correlative of male) emphasizes the idea of sex; it applies not only to human beings but also to animals and plants. Its employment as a synonym for woman was once frequent among good writers but this is now frowned upon as derogatory or contemptuous."

Now that's interesting! The definition we have so far is "Lady—a female with a sick asterisk who emphasizes sex and is contemptuous."

"Sex," Webster says, "is one of the two divisions of organisms formed on the distinction of male and female; males or females collectively."

Why that's terrible!

Oop, here's another definition of Lady—"Lady, on the other hand, is preferred when gentle breeding and delicacy are definitely implied; as 'Alfonso XI at his death left one legitimate son . . . and five bastards by a lady of Seville, Dona Leonor de Guzman (Cambridge Medieval History.)"

Therefore, a lady is a female with a si . . . . oh, this is getting ridiculous. I am confused. I must admit defeat. I can not help this noble group (with a lot of personality) out.

My roommate says, however, to tell them that a Lady is "a girl who makes a man act like she is a woman!" whatever that means.

Mikoyan

Paul Niven

Twenty-four hours after Mikoyan returned to Moscow, he held the first Moscow news conference he had held in many months. It represented a habit he had picked up somewhere between Cleveland and Los Angeles. Mikoyan said many favorable things about America and Americans — duly printed in Soviet newspapers, whose readers found them unfamiliar. His visit to a Washington suburban supermarket was chronicled on film for Moscow television — and that was unusual; Soviet viewers had seldom before been allowed even a fleeting glimpse of American abundance.

It remains to be seen how much more of Mikoyan's newly-acquired and occasionally benevolent expertise will filter down to the Russian "narod." But more important, in the view of some State Department people, are the impressions Mikoyan carried back himself, to be shared with his colleagues. Some of the Department's specialists on the Soviet Union have long urged that the welcome mat be put out for Russia leaders, arguing that the more these men know about the US, the better. The Mikoyan visit did much to sustain this view.

Nearly all the editorial pages of newspapers in cities the Soviet Deuty Premier visited touched on the less savory chapters of his biography, but most of them wound up extending him a more or less cordial invitation to see the local sights. Some elements of the Fourth Estate, it is true, did act as if he were staging a frontal assault on Fort Knox and the 1960 elections. One syndicated article, for example, suggested that the Russian cameras covering his visit to a supermarket were really trained on a nearby naval installation. And Time, scoring the daily press coverage of the trip, seemed to imply that reports should have alternated paragraphs on the Hungarian revolt with details of what Mikoyan saw in Macy's.

But to say that Mikoyan's public-relations operation did not commend itself to all journalists and did not sweep the country into a mood of appeasement is not to gainsay the brilliance of its conception and execution. His original stated purpose in coming here was not spend a pleasant vacation, and perhaps talks a little trade, with his old friend Ambassador Menshikov, the old Bolshevik.

But as soon as his visa had been granted, the Soviet Embassy in Washington began adding to the profits of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company. Long-distance calls were directed to a number of American businessmen, all of them endowed with impeccable social and political backgrounds, and all of them, as it happened, recent visitors to Moscow, where they had received cordial official hospitality. These gentlemen were given to understand that should they now elect to return that hospitality, Mr. Mikoyan might be disposed to include their cities in his itinerary.

Thus did he obtain entree to a succession of opulent brownstone clubs whose carpets had never before known Communist boots. His host in Cleveland, Cyrus Eaton, was a controversial figure whose activities might be thought to have alienated some Ohio Republicans; but a local paper, reporting Eaton's Union League Club lunch for Mikoyan, ventured to guess that never before in history had so much of the city's power and wealth been represented around a table.

To each of these select groups, Mikoyan's message was the same: the Cold War is a bad thing; the United States is responsible, but that is unpleasant so let's not talk about it; businessmen are more sensible than diplomats, so let's get down to business.

The evidence that a Kremlin leader could be human and even humorous came as a revelation to some in his audiences. And understandably. Can anyone imagine Molotov hamming it up with Jerry Lewis, or Gromyko deliriously operating the controls of a retractable hardtop at River Rouge? But Jerry Lewis will not now turn out motion pictures dedicated to socialist realism; there has been no cry for nationalism from the Ford workers; no sign that the laughs Mikoyan drew have really shaken the foundations of the Republic. It might be just as well to take the Republic for granted and speculate instead on its impact on Mr. Mikoyan.

In Maryland, he asked the man who showed him around a modest motel if the establishment was owned by a company. No, said his guide, I own it.

A Washington housewife apologized for a barren larder, explaining that she was waiting for bargains before stocking up. Mikoyan, at the time, was peering into her deep freeze at six steaks and other packages.

In two industrial plats, he inquired if the managements needed more orders. No, he was told, the plants were committed for the next 18 months at full capacity.

In Chicago, he visited the home of a $100-a-week bus driver who is a Republican and admires Mr. Dulles.

The newsmen who watched these encounters felt that Mikoyan would go home still an adversary, but a wiser and more understanding adversary. For the first time in 40 years of Soviet history, one of Russia's top leaders has intimate first-hand experience of the US. It will stand him, and perhaps us, in good stead. —The New Republic

WHITMORE

Chase Nets Short Interview; He's Late For Appointment

"I." ("First person singular," he said).

Whitmore, who has been acting since 1946, said he prefers the stage to either movies or television. He said he plans to go back to the stage.

But the next thing, following this series of 13 half-hour films, is a movie, "Face of the Fire," to be released next fall. Also to be released next fall is another television series entitled "Lincoln Jones." This series is about a lawyer.

Whitmore was not at all hesitant about answering questions. He apologized for having to rush off—and rush off he did.

He is scheduled to leave for Los Angeles this morning.

The "I" television series is being produced by Warner Bros. for CBS television showing later this year. The show being produced in Hillsboro is entitled "I, Buck Larson, Stock Car Driver."

Directing the series is Frank McDonald, who has directed the Wyatt Earp series of TV movies and, several years ago, the "Man Against Crime" series which starred Ralph Bellamy.

Much of the film for the current show had already been made at previous races at Orange Speedway. Several well-known stock-car drivers, such as Buck Baker, were brought in for some close-up's and other scenes.

The story concerns the old pro racer, played by Whitmore, and the younger driver, played by Vic Morrow, who still sees glory in his dare-devil pursuit.

Focal points of the film story were the colorful and historic Colonial Inn as well as the broad expanse of Orange Speedway.

Scenes were shot at the Inn Monday afternoon and evening, and the action moved to the Speedway Tuesday, continuing there through Thursday.

Carolina's Second Ranked Tar Heels Blast Clemson 60-46

It looks as if Baron Adolph Rupp's Kentucky Wildcats will stay a solid choice as the nation's number 1 aggregation as long as they keep winning. The Cats closed first in both the AP and UP polls last week with the Tar Heels of Carolina breathing down their necks in both.

One publication, Sports Illustrated, gives the nod to Carolina. In ranking the teams, regionally, SI rates the Tar Heels first in the South with Kentucky second and Auburn third.

After seeing the Wildcats slaughter three opponents, we can't help but believe maybe they deserve that lofty position. Just let them slip an inch, though, and Carolina will be on top, but quick.

The funny thing about it is that both Kentucky and Carolina have a nucleus of untried sophomores, and neither was rated at all highly before the season began. Now, eyes are opening all over the place and both teams roll along like ole man river.

The next test for Kentucky comes very soon when the Cats tangle with Auburn, who is undefeated this year and has a two-year streak of 24 games going. That might be the last straw.

The next toughie the Tar Heels face is next week when disappointing, but capable, Maryland comes to town. After that, well, there's always State to play again.

State skidded as low as sixth in one of the polls and held onto fourth in the other. The Pack is currently playing with, but not against, Carolina in Charlotte. The two teams swap opponents tonight.

Speaking of the next N. C. State-Carolina contest, upcoming on February 18, the final decision has been made as to where it will be held. After three sites were suggested and much controversy arose, the Athletic Department wisely decided to play the game here in Chapel Hill. Even though Woollen Gym will only hold 4,800, the move was still the right one.

Had the game been played in distant Charlotte, or even at Raleigh, there would have been an immese transportation for students problem. Even though both places had offered 7,000 student tickets, the simple fact remains the students could not have walked to the game. The game will be broadvised for the benefit of those who don't get into the "Sardine Can".

Odd Fact: Kentucky, number 1 team in the nation, isn't even leading its own conference. The Wildcats were beaten by SEC foe Vanderbilt, while Auburn's unbeaten Plainsmen hold the league lead.

Sports Illustrated, in addition to handing the Tar Heels first place, had a picture and article on Carolina middle-distance flash Dave Scurlock. The article asks, "Is the United States a Second-Rate Track Power?" Scurlock runs today in the Millrose games in New York City against old rival Arnie Sowell.

Before last night's battle with Clemson, Carolina had compilled some amazing statistics: 1 — All five starters are averaging in double figures, 2 — They lead the league in offense (74.5), 3 — They average the biggest point spread (almost 10), 4 — York Larese is putting in exactly 50% of his shots.

After this weekend's double header in Charlotte, the Tar Heels have only 8 games left before the ACC Tournament. 4 of them, however, are at home.

Scurlock Runs In Millrose Games Today

All-American Dave Scurlock, North Carolina's 6' 4 senior speedster, will meet a long-time rival once again in Saturday's Millrose Games in New York's Madison Square Garden.

Scurlock, fresh from a fine victory in the Knights of Columbus Games in Boston, will be up against Arnie Sowell, former Pittsburgh star who owns the world indoor record time of 1:50.3 in the 880-yard run. Another entry in Saturday's event is Tom Murphy, who edged out Big Dave for the New York A. G. title last season.

Ranson Convinced

Tar Heel Coach Dale Ranson is convinced that the Greensboro native is headed for his biggest season in this his final year. "Dave is a hard worker and a great competitor," Ranson begins. "He has a lot of confidence in himself. He has developed a strong aversion to losing and I think this will be his best season on the boards—both in quality of performance and in competition."

Scurlock won three major indoor races last year. In addition to the Millrose title, he took firsts in the BAA at Boston and the Chicago Daily News meet. This season Dave nailed down second position in the Sugar Bowl 440, losing out to Olympic star Glenn Davis, before winning at Boston.

3 More Meets

After Saturday's race, Dave is scheduled to participate in the BAA in Boston on Feb. 7, the Philadelphia Inquirer Meet on Feb. 13, the New York AC meet on Feb. 14, the New York K of C. Meet on March 7, and the Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games here on March 14.

CHARLOTTE — Carolina's nationally second-ranked Tar Heels had everything their own way here last night as they clobbered Clemson College 60-46 before 7,275 fans in Memorial Coliseum.

The Heels showed the effects of the long lay-off for exams in their play, but still managed to come through with more than enough for the Tigers.

Doug Moe, having his best night of the year, paced the Tar Heel attack with 22 points. Harvey Salz was the only other man in double figures, getting 10.

After the score was knotted early at 5-5, the Carolinians grabbed a lead they never relinquished the rest of the night on Larese's steal and lay-up. Two more steals and easy shots followed giving Carolina a six-point spread.

Larese's jump gave the Heels their longest lead of the half at 25-16, but then the Tigers began to whittle away at the enemy margin, cutting it to 4 at 28-24. A late rally led by Lee Shaffer, Ray Stanley, and Danny Lotz pulled the Tar Heels away to a halftime spread of 10 points at 35-25.

Coming back onto the floor after intermission, Carolina quickly ran the score up and pulled out of danger early in the second half. Clemson was in striking distance for the rest of the game, but could never muster a rally sufficient to close the gap.

The win boosted Carolina's overall season record to a dazzling 11-1, and kept their conference mark unbeaten at 6-0. It marked the Tar Heels' 5th straight win since losing their only game of the season to Michigan State in the Dixie Classic.

Clemson's defeat sunk them to 3-6 in the league and dropped their overall mark to 5-12.

Tonight at 7:30 the Tar Heels meet South Carolina, a team that gave State College a fight last night in the opener of a double header before bowing 63-53.

Carolina has already defeated both South Carolina and Clemson this season. Last time out the Heels whipped the Gamecocks by 70-57 in Columbia.

Frosh Win

Carolina's Tar Babies edged the Georgetown Frosh 75-73 on a jump shot by guard Don Walsh in the last six seconds. The win advanced the Carolina Frosh to the finals of the Georgetown Invitational Tourney; they face Bullis Prep tonight.

The Tar Babies trailed by 30-22 in the first half, but rallied to lead 38-33 at intermission. The game was close all the way.

The Scoring: Walsh 20, Poteat 18, Hudock 16, Hubbard 9, McComb 8, Phillips 4.

University Volleyball

Once again the members of the UNC faculty have emerged out of their smoke-filled rooms and have taken their sneakers and headed for Woollen Gym. Why? The University Volleyball League is once again in action.

The teams have been set up in the same order as they were during the fall, with the exception of having new captains for the teams and the players have been selected for different teams than they were on during the fall.

The teams still number 6 with 8 players to a team. The new captains are: Pete Mullis, Carl Blyth, Bo Shepard, Mike Ronman, Marvin Allen and Henry House.

Some of the special rules state that play will begin as soon as four players are present, and when a game is in progress and new players arrive, they should be ejected into the game after one complete rotation of the team.

State Outlast Gamecocks 63-53

By KEN ALYTA

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Sixth-ranked North Carolina State led virtually all the way Friday night in scoring a 63-53 victory over South Carolina in the opening game of an Atlantic Coast Conference basketball doubleheader.

John Richter, 6-8 Wolfpack center, scored 21 points to lead the assault against South Carolina. State was on top by 13 points at the half with a late flurry after South Carolina had tied the score at 18-all with 5:30 to go.

State retained a 13-point lead at 52-39 midway of the last half before South Carolina tallied 8 consecutive points to trail by 5 with five minutes left.

Then, rebound ace George Stepanovich and little Lou Pucillo combined for 11 points, 6 by the latter, to put State safely ahead for its seventh conference victory in eight games.

Pucillo had 16 points and Stepanovich 12 for the State team that was down to 10 men. Sophs Niewierowski left school Thursday for what they called personal reasons.

Piano Concert Opens Tuesday Music Series

The UNC Department of Music will open the Tuesday Evening Series for the spring semester with a piano concert by Iren Marik, Hungarian-born pianist, in Hill Hall Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Noted for her interpretation of the music of Liszt, Miss Marik has recorded several albums of piano music on stereophonic tape.

One of these recordings containing iszt's "Berceuse" and "Vallee d'Obermann," which Miss Marik will perform on the program Tuesday, was reviewed by Harold Schonberg in the New York Times.

He commented, "She (Miss Marik) plays these interesting Liszt pieces with grand sweep, a very big technique and all the color they need. This kind of singing line, with such an accurate mechanism to boot, is not too common today. It is to be hoped that Miss Marik is heard in more Liszt—or, indeed, anything she feels like playing."

Miss Marik has performed in most European capitals including London, Belfast, Berlin, Budapest, Vienna, Venice, Milan and Prague.

A graduate of the Royal Academy of Music in Budapest, she studied with the late Bela Bartok and with George Woodhouse in England, where she made concert tours and played many times on programs of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

In this country she has given recitals in Town Hall, Constitution Hall, the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D. C., and in many other cities. At present she is living in Sweet Briar, Va.

In addition to the Liszt pieces, she will play "Organ Prelude in G Minor" by Bach-Siloti; "Sonata, Op. 111 in C Minor" by Beethoven; "Images, Book II" by Debussy; and "Suite, Opus 14" by Bartok.

Campus Hit By Destruction Of Telephones

A new rash of pulling phones off the wall has broken out recently in several men's dorms, according to Rudy Edwards, IDC president.

Three telephones in Cobb for in Connor and one in Winston were ripped from the wall Thursday night.

'PHONE COMPANY INVESTIGATES

Edwards said that the Chapel Hill telephone company, who will have to pay the damages unless the guilty person or persons can be found, sent a representative to one of the dorms to investigate what sort of student action is being take to prevent the destruction.

NO STUDENT ACTION

The representative took an old telephone into one of the booths in a dorm and beat it on the door "for about 45 minutes," making as much noise as he could, to see if anyone would come to see what was going on. No one investigated the disturbance.

STUDENT ACTION NEEDED

"We need responsible student action to help with the problem," said Edwards, "Dorm managers, officers and students should try to see that it is stopped. After all, they are the ones having to pay with the loss of the telephoes."

FEW PERSONS RESPONSIBLE

The IDC feels that just a few people are causing the destruction. The council has received several "tips" as to who is doing it and are following them up in an at-

Nothing To Do?

The newspaper needs new staff members to write news, columns, sports and do art work. Most of the work done on the paper is completed between 2 and 5 p.m. daily. This time is usually convenient for students who have classes in the morning hours.

Students interested in work on The Daily Tar may come to the newspaper office in Graham Memorial any afternoon.

A staff meeting will be announced soon.

Little Practical Importance In Solons' Telegram Bill

"Sending Govs. Almond and Faubus the telegram proposed by the Student Legislature would have been of little practical importance," Harry Ashmore, editor of the Arkansas Gazette in Little Rock, said Saturday here.

Ashmore gave his views to the press after speaking to business management leaders from the South. He spoke to the executive program "Great Ideas" on Race Relations.

"We are not loving our brothers and we now can see the economic effect of this on the nation. You can especially see the effect in Atlanta."

'MEDDLING'

Ashmore said that any action by the UNC Student Legislature on the proposed telegrams would have been considered "meddling from the outside. It would have been all right in general but to do any good would have to come from the University of Arkansas." He spoke of a recently defeated bill introduced in the Student Legislature to send telegrams to the executives of Arkansas and Virginia protesting the closing of public secondary schools in the two states to avoid integration.

ALMOND 'RATIONAL'

"Gov. J. Lindsay Almond and other relatively responsible people in Virginia have gone about this in a rational way." Ashmore went on to say that Arkansas was patterning its legislation after that of Virginia. "The series of court cases is narrowing down the maneuvering room of those opposed to integration. We're fooling around with details now. The courts have decided the issue and we've about run out of legal action. The last line of retreat left is to abandon public schools."

COMPULSORY ATTENDANCE KILLED

Faubus closed Little Rock schools under Arkansas Legislative Act 84. This act also provides that no child will be required to attend an integrated school. "That has killed compulsory attendance in Arkansas schools. My 12 year old daughter — she attends a completely segregated junior high school — doesn't say much about the situation to her pop. I think that she shares her mother's view of impatience with the whole damn nonsense."

HOW MUCH WILL SOUTH PAY

Ashmore concluded saying, "The white man doesn't accept the Negro as an equal. I don't think that the preachers will convert us. The question is now 'How much is the South willing to pay for segregation.' I think that the price is too high. The NAACP is a fact of life that we've got to live with. They won't compromise on fact. It is an emotional thing with them too. If I had the misfortune to be a colored man, I'd be in the NAACP. Faubus resolved the money problems of the Association in Arkansas by calling out the National Guard. Now they have money to burn.

"The South can buy segregation for another generation but the price will be far too much to pay."

Louisville U. Music Head Featured In Petite Musicale

Dr. Francis Hopper, professor of music and head of the organ department at the University of Louisville, will be featured in the first Petite Musicale of the spring semester here.

The program which is open to the public at no charge will be presented today in Gerrard Hall at 8 p.m. The recital is sponsored by Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Dr. Hopper will perform a group of solo pieces for the harpsichord. Assisting him will be Dr. Wilton Mason, UNC professor of music and director of the University Chorus, and Efrim Fruchtman, UNC graduate student from Gainesville, Fla.

The guest performer and Fruchtman will present a sonata by George Abel for harpsichord and viola da gamba. Dr. Hopper, Dr. Mason and Fruchtman will also perform a Handel trio for recorder, harpsichord and viola da gamba.

Last year Dr. Hopper appeared in two programs sponsored by Petites Musicales, one for harpsichord and one for organ.

Dr. Hopper has studied at the Union Theological Seminary in New York City where he earned both a bachelor's and a master's degree in music, and at the School of English Church Music in Chislehurst, England.

While studying in New York he was organist for Sunday morning services at Carnegie Hall, and during Dr. Hopper's stay in England he gave frequent recitals at both Oxford and Cambridge. He has also given many performances throughout the mid-west.

English Classes Begin For Foreign Students

English classes for foreign students will be resumed in the Y building Tuesday with registration in the main lounge upstairs at 6 p.m.

The classes, sponsored by the YMCA in conjunction with the English Department, will be taught each Tuesday evening from 6 to 8 p.m.

All entering foreign students will be placed in beginning and intermediate standing. Students of the fall semester class will receive advanced standing.

Nan Robinson and Dee Donroe have planned the course of instruction as well as social benefits the students receive.

Honor Council Tries Six For Cheating

Six University students were tried Friday night in Men's Honor Council for cheating on a take home quiz in Prabir Roy's Math 11 class, according to Hugh Patterson, head of Men's Honor Council.

Four of the students were judged not guilty and two were placed on indefinite probation.

Patterson emphasized that the case concerned a quiz and had nothing to do with final examinations.

Roy said that after the quizzes had been turned in, he called the six students in and asked them if they had collaborated on the quiz. He then asked them to turn themselves in to Honor Council.

Virginia Assembly Accepts Integration As Inevitable; Tries To Soften Impact

RICHMOND, Va., — (AP) — The Virginia General Assembly yesterday accepted the inevitability of some racial school integration Monday and enacted Gov. J. Lindsay Almond's program to lessen its impact.

A last-ditch fight by a strong Senate group to close the state's pocketbook to areas where schools integrate collapsed in the Senate Finance Committee. Almond's supporters beat the effort to go beyond his recommendations by a 12 to 7 committee vote.

The full Senate then approved the Governor's key requests, which already had passed the house — a three million dollar fund for $250 tuition grants for children who won't attend integrated schools, and repeal of the compulsory school attendance law.

Both houses planned to return Monday to be on hand when the first public school racial itegration in Virginia's history takes place in Norfolk and Arlington county. They also have several legislative matters left on the calendars.

Arlington, the urban northern Virginia county, lost a final legal bid today to stay the admission of four Negroes to Stratford Junior High School. Chief Justice Warren refused any delay and said the school board had not shown him a need for extraordinary action.

School authorities, who have been preparing for the admission of the Negroes, said they didn't expect any disturbances Monday. "I think there will be a smooth transition", said Arlington School Supt. Ray E. Reid.

For Norfolk, integration of 17 Negroes with the white pupils of six high schools and junior high schools, will mean the schools will be open for classes for the 1958-59 school year. The six schools were closed under a now defunct state law last September when ordered to admit the Negroes by a federal court.

Norfolk safety officials declined to spell out precautions they have taken to prevent any possible violence. But legislators here from the area said the police are well equipped to cope with any disorder.

Victor J. Ashe, an attorney for the Negroes, said at Norfolk the 17 will go to their new schools individually, probably accompanied by their parents.

Gov. Almond signed the three key bills of his program at 4:30 p.m. and commented: "I am very deeply grateful with the response of the General Assembly to my recommendations."

The governor said he wanted to assure the parents of children in Arlington and Norfolk that tuition grants for private schooling will be made available to them promptly. He said any delay would be brief.

The real test of strength of the group which felt Almond had not gone far enough to try to block the impending admission of the Negroes to schools Monday was in the finance committee.

A bill sponsored by Sen. Garland Gray and signed by eight others represented the major effort. This bill would have cut state appropriations to the four major public school funds from a total of 139 million dollars to one dollar for each fund. The Governor would take control of the money taken out of the funds and could give it back to the localities if no tuition grants were being paid there — that is, no integrated schools were being operated in the locality.

Atty Gen. A. S. Harrison said the administration couldn't accept it and regarded it as incompatible with the governor's own bill.

Justice Warren Denies Arlington School Delay

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Chief Justice Warren yesterday refused to delay the scheduled admission Monday of four Negro pupils to a white junior high school in Arlington, Va.

School officials said they expect no disturbances when the school is integrated. It has more than 1,000 pupils.

The school board at Arlington, just across the Potomac river from Washington, had asked Waren for a delay in admitting the Negroes to Stratford Junior High.

The board contended it was not in the best interest of students and teachers to permit transfers into the school in the middle of the school year.

Warren acted swiftly. His ruling that the board had not shown need for extraordinary action came less than three hours after taking the request under consideration.

Arlington School Superintendent Ray E. Reid told newsmen "I think there will be a smooth transition." He said all pupils—Negro and white—will be required to enter the school buildings Monday morning without congregating outside.

Police will block off an area half a mile wide around the school ground, officials said. Only teachers, pupils and school employes will be permitted to pass the police lines.

The four Negro children have met some of their future classmates at informal social gatherings during the past several days. The latest of these gatherings was a small party last night.

School officials said the four Negroes got about average grades in achievement tests.

The four Negro pupils scheduled to enter the seventh grade are Ronald Deskins and Michael Jones, both 12, and Lance Newman and Gloria Thompson, both 13.

Arlington is one of two Virginia areas — the other is Norfolk—under orders to enroll Negro pupils next week, breaching the state's "massive resistance" policy.

Student Party Will Hear Furtado

The meeting will be held in the Rendezvous Room at 7:30.

According to SP Chairman John Brooks, this will be the official kick-off of the party's spring campaign "to furnish student government with the best possible leadership for the coming year."

All SP members are requested to attend and be prepared to pay dues of $1. Brooks also invited interested visitors and prospective party members to attend.

Lunch and cookies will be served.

UNC Press Material Not All Local

By ANN A. SMITH

Books from the University of North Carolina Press, contrary to popular opinion, do not concentrate wholly on writings by local folk or about local scenes.

The spring announcement, for instance, lists 16 books for publication between January and June. Of the 19 authors and co-authors whose writings are to appear, only seven are currently affiliated with the Consolidated University.

Testifying to the diversified publishing program of the UNC Press are books dealing with history, biography, sociological research, political survey and critical analysis.

Essays, short stories and translations of literary works are also among the types of writing to be released by the UNC Press this spring.

The UNC Press was incorporated in 1922. It was established to publish periodicals devoted to the advancement of learning, to publish catalogues, bulletins and other documents pertaining to the University, and to promote through publication of deserving works the advancement of the arts and sciences and the development of literature.

The UNC Press is one of 40 members of the Association of American University Presses. Lambert Davis, present director of the UNC Press recently completed a term as president of this organization.

Serving in the capacity of publisher for scholarly organizations, the Press will release three books under the auspices of the Institute of Early American History and Culture. This organization, sponsored jointly by the College of William and Mary and by Colonial Williamsburg, Inc., is dedicated to the furtherance of study, research and publications bearing upon American history up to 1815.

Other books will be published by the UNC Press for the Germanic Languages and Literatures Studies, the Comparative Literature Studies, the Romance Language and Literature Studies, the Institute for Research in Social Science at Chapel Hill and similar institutes at the University of Puerto Rico and Vanderbilt University.

Among the books for release by the UNC Press this spring is "A Southern Moderate Speaks," by Brooks Hays of Arkansas, defeated for re-election to Congress by a write-in campaign as an outgrowth of the Little Rock school crisis.

A book written by Dr. W. G. Bean, head of the History Department at Washington and Lee University and a member of the Virginia Civil War Centennial Commission, promises to be listed among important books concerning the Civil War during its 100th year anniversary.

"Stonewall's Man" is Dr. Bean's biography of Sandie Pendleton, a high-spirited and intelligent Confederate staff officer who at the age of 22 won the confidence, admiration and affection of Stonewall Jackson. It is due to be released in April.

Dr. Floyd Hunter, sociologist and professor of social work at UNC, will have published in March "Top Leadership, U.S.A." which discusses the structure of national decision making and shows how a distinct and recognizable group leads the American people.

An up-to-date political survey explaining the present state of affairs in each of the six republics bridging North and South America entitled "Central America: The Crisis and the Challenge" is scheduled for publication in March.

Written by John D. Martz, a Harvard graduate who has spent two years studying and teaching in Central America, the book offers insights to the better understanding of the Central American republics and their peoples.

"Short Stories from the Old North State," edited by Richard Walser, professor of English at N. C. State College and president of the State Literary and Historical Assn., will appear in April. This new collection

AVERY DORM — You have your choice of anything from shaving cream to soft drinks. This new "Scuttlebutt" operates between the huors of 7 a.m. and 11 p.m. (Photo by Peter Ness)

New Dorm

Those who designed the new dormitories, Avery, Parker, and Teague must have dual personalities. Trying to give the students a maximum of quiet through outside hallways and small eight man sections of four rooms was an excellent idea, but somebody forgot that an essential part of dormitory construction is the walls between rooms.

It is a striking fact about the new dormitories that the sound of someone walking on the fourth floor can on a clear night be heard in the basement. There are times of quiet, but most people are not equipped to work between 9-6 p.m. and still go to classes at 8.

An investigation should be undertaken to estimate the cost of soundproofing the various dormitories, especially the new ones, for the entire extra expense that went into the modified construction of the new dorms was largely wasted.

There are plans currently in the offing that promise new dormitories, but unless the ability to promote quiet is there, these dorms will become virtually unlivable.

To give students the opportunity to study cannot be too difficult a job for the University. After all, this is the University's primary purpose.

The Library

While on the subject of study, a mention might be made of the need to have a library that is open all night or at least a reference section that may be used all night.

The consolidation of the Library has taken a great many books out of divisional libraries and placed them in Louis Round Wilson Library. While this may be administratively better for the library staff, it makes it difficult for the nocturnal student, of which there are several on the campus, to study. Certain materials that were previously within the student's grasp are no longer there, and the situation is difficult for many.

It would be advisable, then, to either open a large reference room all night on the campus or to open the library all night. One of the two should not be expensive to the University pocketbook.

Campus Chest

It seems that the mouths of the "responsible" remain perpetually closed when it comes to the controversial.

The latest of these developments concerns the Campus Chest. Prior to the examination period News Editor Anne Frye was told that information concerning the Campus Chest would be available before exams. Shortly afterwards, the Chairman of the Campus Chest promised to bring the information about the status of the Campus Chest and the organizations it plans to sponsor to the paper by the first day after exams. That day has gone by, and still the organization refuses to answer questions concerning what groups it will sponsor on its annual drive.

There is a live issue this year to be decided by Campus Chest. Each year it sponsors three organizations, and for the Gottingen Exchange program in which UNC students are exchanged with students at the German University for a one year term. The third choice has changed over the years, but last year it was to fund for scholarships for Negro students.

A great deal of objection was raised in fraternity quarters, and a drive to keep students from contributing to the Campus Chest because of this inclusion. Yet, in an extra week of activity in which more democratically inclined people organized to oppose the objectors, the Campus Chest received a representative amount even if it did fall short of its goal, something that has occurred more often than not in recent years.

This year they were faced with the issue of whether they had the courage to keep the Negro scholarship fund in the Campus Chest and whether they were able to take the risk of getting slightly less in hopes of firmly establishing themselves as doing the right thing. They had an alternative — to keep the Negro scholarship fund in the Campus Chest, but to let each person designate which group or groups he wants to give donations. In this way they would not avoid the issue, and actually would provide an optimum situation in which a person's donation is not channeled without his consent to an organization he may not believe worthy. This way each student has a chance.

As it stands now, there officially has been no decision on the Negro scholarship fund, but it begins to look more and more as if it was dropped from the Campus Chest. It would be nice if the officials of that body would tell the campus what is going on. They might like to know where their money is going and why.

The World News In Review

Josie Morris

Sharing the spotlight this week as top news items are Governor J. Lindsay Almond Jr.'s calling of a special meeting of the Virginia General Assembly and Russia's announcement that she wishes to end the cold war.

The first act in the Virginia drama came when two leaders, Rep. Watkins M. Abbitt (D-Va.) and State Sen. Charles T. Moses, both of Appomattox in Southside, Virginia where resistance to desegregation is most rigid, asked Gov. Almond to convene a special session of the Assembly.

The purpose of the session was to have the Assembly assume control of the schools. This action came as a last effort to thwart desegregation.

Their suggestion came at the end of a week in which Virginia's "massive resistance" laws were invalidated both by a three-judge Federal Court and the State Supreme Court of Appeals and Arlington lost its desegregation case before the United States 4th Circuit Court of Appeals. Governor Almond called the Assembly to meet on Wednesday. Here he proposed to the opening session a program of transition to private education in areas which won't accept integration.

He called on the Legislature to provide for state tuition grants of up to $250 per pupil for those who decline to attend integrated schools. He coupled this with a call for repeal of the compulsory school attendance law and also pledged himself to continue the fight he has waged against mixing the races in Virginia's classrooms.

However, the Norfolk School Board ordered on Friday that six schools closed since September be opened Monday. When the school bells ring Monday at 9 a.m. white and Negro children will enter public schools together for the first time in Virginia's history.

German Policy

From Russia came the first open official hints that the U. S. and Soviet Union could find agreement on the timing of a conference on Germany.

Anastas I. Mikoyan, a Soviet First Deputy, said that the main factor in the Berlin crisis was not the Soviet deadline for the East-West negotiations, but the need to get the talks started in the first place. Mikoyan continued by saying that the Soviet Union was ready to be flexible about a time limit within which the talks could get started. The important thing he maintains is "goodwill on the part of the Western powers."

Khruschev Addresses

Premier Nikita Khrushchev opened the 21st Congress of the Soviet Communist Party Wednesday of announcing the Soviet Union has intercontinental ballistic missiles in production. But he said the main Soviet objective is to end the cold war and international tension. Earlier he stated that Mikoyan's trip to the U. S. may also help to ease this tension.

Achieving nuclear disarmament and basing international relations on peaceful coexistence is the "task of tasks," he added.

Russia is ready to ban for all time the building and testing of rockets as well as nuclear weapons and to destroy all stockpiles of these weapons.

However, Khrushchev said nothing to suggest that Russia was any more ready to compromise with the West on Berlin, Germany, or other issues such as control systems that would make disarmament and a ban on nuclear tests possible.

In Washington the Atomic Energy Commission recommended to the White House that any agreement with the Soviet Union on suspending tests of nuclear weapons should be limited to those in the atmosphere. The agency would exclude underground tests.

Also from Moscow came the news that Red China's leaders, Mao Tze-tung and Chou En-lai, with Khrushchev denied reports of discord between the two big Communist countries.

A reported rift between President Eisenhower and Chief Justice of the Supreme Court Earl Warren was repudiated earlier this week, when both Eisenhower and Warren issued statements declaring that they were still friends.

Eisenhower and Warren had been close friends for many years, but a New York Herald-Tribune report said that the relationship had cooled. Eisenhower appointed Warren as Chief Justice.

From North Carolina came the news that Associate Justice Jeff D. Johnson Jr. of the state Supreme Court was planning to step down effective Saturday. Ill health and physical disability required Johnson's retirement. Later in the week Superior Court Judge Clifton L. Moore of Burgaw was named Johnson's vacated position.

Labor Bill

Congression leaders were outdoing one another to curb the Jimmy Hoffa influence in the American labor movement. In the midst of this President Eisenhower submitted his proposals to curb the racketering which he considered prevalent in the unions.

Congressional reaction was mixed to the Eisenhower budget, Conservative Republicans hailed the balanced $77 billion as a healthy event for the nation's economy, while northern liberals condemned it on the ground that it would hamper the nation's defense establishment.

Executions Continue

Perhaps the single most important event during the week was the continuation of mass trials and executions of former supporters of ousted President Fugleacio Batista of Cuba.

Fidel Castro, defiant against mounting disfavor in the United States and abroad, continued to hold summary trials, the majority of which were followed by executions. One such trial he held in front of a screaming throng of 17,000 persons.

Castro said he plans to continue the trials, and no relief from martial law is in sight for the Cuban people for another 17 months. According to observer reports, the Castro policy seems to have the overwhelming support of the Cuban people.

n Alabama a district court judge cleared a state superior court judge of contempt charges, in a controversial case involving the judge's refusal to turn over voting registration records to the federal civil rights commission.

Ship Wreck

The week climaxed with a small Swedish liner striking an iceberg in the northern Atlantic near Greenland. The ship was carrying 130 persons, and rescue operations were underway at press time.

An SOS was sent out shortly after the ship hit the iceberg, and reports from the ship indicated it was sinking slowly. At last report German and American ships had reached the scene of the last report from the Swedish ship Hans Hedtoft, but could find no trace of the ship or survivors.

Farm Policy

In the field of agriculture President Eisenhower proposed a plan for the farmers. The reaction of the Agricultural agencies was far from complimentary. The plan's net effect is to place the economic brunt of recovery from mountainous surpluses upon the sholders of the farmer without any sharing of costs by the consuming public.

Flood losses mounted beyond the 100,000,000 mark this week as rampaging rivers left more than 15,000 persons homeless. Hardest hit were sections of Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Arthur Lessing

The human voice is the most intimate of all available instruments. It it so because it is part of man himself; it belongs to him like his eyes and ears belong to him. The voice expresses like the eye sees and the ear hears. More than artificially-created instruments, the voice is closest to man's soul and being — at least it can be.

The native, enthusiastic, amateur choir can express this closeness but lacks the technique, the control, and the vocal power that is asked by music. The highly-polished professionnal choir on the other hand has the power, has the technique, has the musical capability to perform its music. But through professionalism, through the drudgery of training, the necessity of being a personality-on-stage, innocence is rapidly lost. And with innocence lost, the closeness to man's soul is severed forever and not to be regained. Instead of it, the gloss of professional competence takes control of the voice. It is this asd fact that married not only the singing of the Roger Wagner Chorale last Friday night in Memorial Hall but also seriously injured the music that was performed. No doubt every piece on the program was sung with striking control and amazing precision. No doubt, the choir and especially Mr. Wagner himself presented a neat and flamboyant stage picture. But the heart of the matter was not there, and the heart is the intimacy of voice with man. Music is the expression of man's concern with the depths of his soul. The Chorale sang, but what is truly music never emerged from their voices.

The concert opened with some short pieces of Vittoria, Monteverdi and Di Lasso. Perhaps in these, there was more sincerity than any other work on the program. What Mr. Wagner concentrated on was the sensuous line inclining toward shape rather than austerity — for me a valid interpretation. I was quite impressed with both the very opening and closing of the two works of Vittoria with their floating pianissimo tone "hanging" suspended by nothing in the air. Di Lasso's echo song (the "echo" sung by a off-stage vocal quartet) was quite delightful. But the following work, a Mass in G Minor by the late Vaughan Williams, already showed an emptiness of feeling underneath the thin surface of the music that made the work curiously ineffective in conveying the ritual meanings of the Mass. The surface itself was beautiful constructed, clear in its progress, precise and faultless in rhythm and tone. But once one penetrated through this surface in search of its source, its expression, nothing was to be found. The music itself is remarkable similar in idiom to the Medieaval composers represented earlier on the program. The openings of each section were quite effective musically, but in each there seemed to me a disappointing decline of musical interest: as the music proceded, nothing works forward; there seems only a regretful look backward.

The accompanists, Melvin Stechner and Norman Horowitz, played Brahm's Variations on a Theme by Haydn without any spectacular revelation of musical value. Their performance was slick, technically excellent, musically superficial.

After intermission, two sections of Bloch's Sacred Service were presented in the manner of a Broadway musical — full of show, empty of expression that could strike true. Some songs of Ravel, a couple of sea chanties, and a couple of spirituals ended the program, at least formally. Lots of encores of the semi-folk-song kind could not satisfy the surface taste of the audience. They loved it; and as the Student Entertainment Committee represents them they can be proud of their choice.

For me, however, their taste is not only shallow but unbefitting the atmosphere and intent of a university. It is time we stop wasting our budgets on the trivial and present that which can elevate as well as move our inner selves. For we might as well face it, the audience came for the surface of music that the Wagner Chorale can so well convey. There are, however, people whose concern for art and the portrayal of art a resorely needed in the entertainment series of our student Committee. They are properly artists. It may be that our gum chewing audience is not yet fit for them.

The battle over voting rights rages on all fronts. In some areas voting records are impounded and officials refuse to discuss the issues. In other areas the issue gets into a legal "snafu" over whether the prospective voter is, or is going to be, a "permanent" resident. The methods are different in different areas. The ends are the same — to keep as many people as possible from voting, if they might vote differently from the ones who are in power.

Tuesday it will be decided whether Orange county will be wet or "dry." It has been amusing for me to hear the arguments of the "drys'" for the last several months. You see, I have heard the same arguments before in other parts of the country. There is no need to debate with the "drys" because they believe that their arguments are based upon pure and sound logic. This logic is that no one will drink the foul liquor if they cannot get it. What could be more simple?

You can point out to these "drys" that passing such a law is merely acting like an ostrich who sticks his head in the sand when he sees danger. You can point out to these people that such a law cannot help but cause our young people to become contemptuous of our laws and the adults that voted for them when they see that there is liquor everywhere, in spite of the laws. The "drys" simply reply in a stronger voice that we just need to make the laws stronger than ever.

The people who are against legalized liquor, or at least the majority that I have talked with, are involved either emotionally or financially. The emotional ones feel that they have the duty to remove this immoral influence from the citizens. They are unmoved by any amount of facts ad figures on tax receipts and economic considerations. They see their task, pure and simple — remove the liquor from the hands of those who want it!

Perhaps it is not insignificant that N. C. ranks "first in the nation" in illegal liquor production. The group who have a financial interest in the outcome of the elections is composed of moonshiners and bootleggers. This group does not of course have any moral objection to the sale of liquor, but they would never admit this publicly. In fact, this group is a staunch supporter of the ones who carry the fight because of moral reasons. There is nothing paradoxial about the bootlegger's position. He simply has a gold mine and, like any other profit-seeking businessman, he can be expected to try to maintain the status quo.

The guardians of morality and the bootleggers can always be expected to join in the common crusade to protect our citizens every time such an issue comes to a vote. Future sociologists will no doubt study this alliance as one of the strangest during this enlightened mid-twentieth century.

I have no personal stake in this issue. I have a car and ample funds to drive out of Orange county to buy all the spirits I desire. Although this is only a minor inconvenience, the principle of the thing has often embittered me toward the people who would help me by placing liquor out of my reach. After Tuesday all of us can see how Orange county, the seat of the University of North Carolina, the guardian of culture, and champion of individual freedom and thought, handles this issue.

Letters

Editor:

Accustomed as I am to living in a congenitally mediocre society, certain tastes, views, and doings never fail to amuse me. Here at Carolina I have but to look about me to observe a menagerie of ludicrous carny sights, ranging from the disgusting Playmaker to the ivy league Twiddley-Twatt. The non-conformist on the one hand to Benny Bethesame on the other: both arrogant, both pitifully under the thumb of a disgusting groupism.

Generally, I am a very passive type egotist, that would just as soon not shout in protest at a very blustering humanity. But deep within me there is a tender area that has been continually rubbed sore the whole of the time I have been here. The very recent attempt at a campus literary magazine has banged the wound so severly that I am forced to yelp. How is it that a University of seven thousand students, some of whom are handsome, many who are wise, can produce such drivel? Only the Quarterly or the Archive can surpass this monument of literary nonsense. Why, I wonder, do Parks, Hodges, Godwin, et al, exhibit their work at all? It is worthy of little, if any, merit. Besides a complete lack of taste, there is a very irritating absence of talent . . . it is almost as intellectually barren as the DAILY TAR HEEL . . . and I do except the art work, for certainly the only originality of the entire magazine is due to Mr. Howard, and I owe to him my eternal thanks.

It seems, in this society, what is not wiped out by the Churches is botched by humerous dabblers in the Muses. The reason humanity is lagued in this manner will remain an eternal mystery. My faith is only restored in the occasional appearance of a Conrad, or perhaps a Byron. I suppose there is a special kind of beauty in the knowledge that somewhere in the depository of artistic sluch, one may somehow stumble upon an artist . . . and it is to this knowledge that I raise my glass in a toast!

Editor:

After digesting the SPECTRUM — and to me it was digestible, I find myself quite pleased with the literary efforts of Mr. Danforth nad Miss Godwin. They were both gloriously successful in eluding fake realism. Thus from the notorious newborn have evolved two very fine prdoucts. This is at least one more than the CAROLINA QUARTERLY has ever produced, so what's the gripe?

A Letter

Dear Rep. Hardy:

I read your evil little letter to the editor of the Daily Tar Heel. I enjoyed it a great deal because your blind slashing didn't hit home a single time. I am afraid that you didn't help the U. P. or hurt the S. P. either one. All you did was join the chorus of detractors who can see no virtue in the work that Curtis Gans has done for the students at Carolina.

As for the item on Charlie Gray, any student who places himself in a position of leadership automatically throws away his privacy. He becomes public property and is subject to as much as a football on a Saturday afternoon in October.

The Daily Tar Heel must report the news, and the editor is morally bound to comment on what he sees. Curtis Gans has commented favorably and unfavorably on members of both parties and has devoted just about as much space to one group as the other.

When the S. P. Vice Chairman was recently chastized for calling for party unity, I heard no cry from the rank and file of the party for justice. Yet the Sheffield item was more politically motivated (as I see it) than the one on Mr. Gray.

As a member of the S. P. for going on three years, I feel that I know enough about the party to know who is the real leader, and who makes the policy. The real leader is the Chairman, and the policy maker is the body of the party. (Can you say that for Mr. Gray's party?)

See you in the Spring election.

EXPULSION WARRANTED

"If we do find the guilty ones," said Edwards, "I personally feel that the offense is serious enough to demand expulsion from the University."

He said that it would be some time before the telephones would be repaired "at least in Cobb". He said that he wasn't sure how soon they would be repaired in the other dorms.

The offenses have been most frequent in Cobb. Several telephones were jerked off the wall earlier in the year.

Progress Cited In N. C.'s Care Of The Mentally Ill

By ROBERT H. BARTHOLOMEW

"North Carolina, a few years ago, ranked 46th in the nation in the care of their mentally ill. Today there are only 15 states in the United States that are considered to have a better state hospital system than we have."

This state's climb in the care of its mentally ill was cited this week at a meeting of the Chapel Hill Branch of the American Association of University Women.

The speaker was John W. Umstead Jr., veteran legislator, lay leader in the care of the mentally ill and Chapel Hill civic leader.

Umstead is chairman of the North Carolina Hospital Board of Controls, the agency that administers the five state mental hospitals. He joined the board in 1945 at the request of the late Gov. Gregg Cherry.

"At that time," Umstead said, "there were 227 insane people in this state confined to jails and some of them had been there for as long as three years. Aside from this, there was a waiting list of about 1,000 patients seeking admittance to the mental hospitals. Today there is no waiting list and any person desiring treatment may get it without a delay. Our hospitals operate on a 24-hour-a-day basis and patients are admitted at any time, day or night."

Umstead said that he had been given much of the credit for the outstanding record made by the state mental hospitals, and quickly added that the credit was not due him. "Our effort in this field has been a team effort and the Hospital Board of Controls is due all credit for our success instead of any one member."

The veteran lawmaker, who represents Orange County in the House of Representatives of the Legislature, explained the generousity of the people of the state in the field of care for the mentally ill. "Since 1947, the Legislature, with the support of the people of this state, has allotted the mental hospitals of this state 57 million dollars. With this type of support, our program has constantly moved forward.'

The Chapel Hill businessman said many people were responsible for the high quality of care given the mentally ill in North Carolina. "The leader in this field, however," he explained, "was the late Dr. James W. Murdoch, who was superintendent of our hospital system. Dr. Murdoch took the locks off the doors and the bars from the windows in many parts of our hospital system. The patients responded to this type of treatment nearly overnight. Dr. Murdoch also started the system of voluntary admisions to the hospitals. Today, any person in this state who feels that he needs mental treatment may present himself at one of the hospitals and he will be treated."

Umstead said no better care for mental patients could be had in private hospitals than that given at the state hospitals of North Carolina. He cited the cases of a number of wealthy citizens who had been admitted to private institutions. After staying in these private hospitals for months without improvement, they were then sent to the North Carolina hospitals. Almost without fail, the patient showed better progress in the state institutions.

The reason this state is ranked 16th in the nation, according to the brother of the late Gov. William B. Umstead, instead of in first or second place, is due to personnel problems.

"There simply is not enough psychiatrists to go around," he said. "We finally decided a number of years ago that the only solution to this problems was to 'grow' our own psychiatrist, and that is what we have been doing. In 1951 I was fortunate enough to get a bill through the Legislature that transferred a million dollars from the State Hospital Board of Controls to the University of North Carolina School of Medicine. This money and other funds were used to establish the UNC Psychiatric Center. Today we are training psychiatrists at this University center to man our state mental hospitals."

Umstead pointed out that mental illness was no different from any other illness, it can strike anyone. He said the families of the mentally ill should realize this and not try to put off treatment for the mentally ill. "The quicker we get the patient once he is sick, the better chance there is for a complete recovery," he declared.

The first chapel built at a state mental hospital in the United States was built at the Negro hospital in Goldsboro. The second such chapel was built at Dix Hill in Raleigh, and plans are being made to build such chapels at every state hospital.

"We already have a chaplain and assistant chaplains at each of the hospitals. This is not only a great comfort to the patients but a comfort to the families as well," Umstead said.

Umstead praised the various civic, religious, and fraternal organizations that have been active in donating materials to the various hospitals for use by the Department of Occupational Therapy and Recreational Therapy. He said that books and magazines were in great demand and urged donations of these materials.

Umstead is not only interested in mental illness. He is a member of the UNC Board of Trustees Committee on Health Affairs. In this capacity, he acts as an advisor to UNC Chancellor William Aycock in matters pertaining to the UNC Division of Health Affairs. The Division of Health Affairs is made up of the UNC Schools of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing, Pharmacy, Public Health and N. C. Memorial Hospital.

WHO SAID IT FIRST?
A column of incidental intelligence by Jockey brand

"WOLF IN SHEEP'S CLOTHING"
Bible scholars know that this expression wasn't born with Red Riding Hood. It's from Matthew, VII, 15:
"Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves."

"HAIL FELLOW WELL MET"
We consider this description a compliment today, but it didn't start out that way at all. The original is in Jonathan Swift's, "My Lady's Lamentation."
"Hail, fellow, well met,
All dirty and wet;
Find out if you can,

"MARY HAD A LITTLE LAMB"
If you think this familiar poem is authentic Mother Goose, think again. Nobody knows who wrote Mother Goose, but your librarian will tell you that Sarah Josepha Hale composed the stanzas about Mary and her academic lamb way back in 1830.

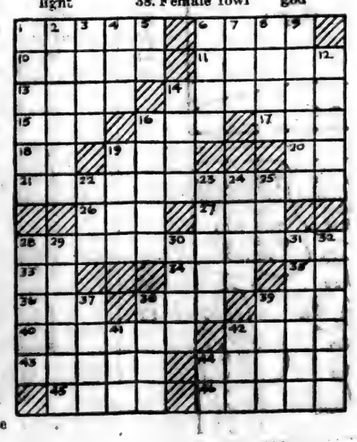
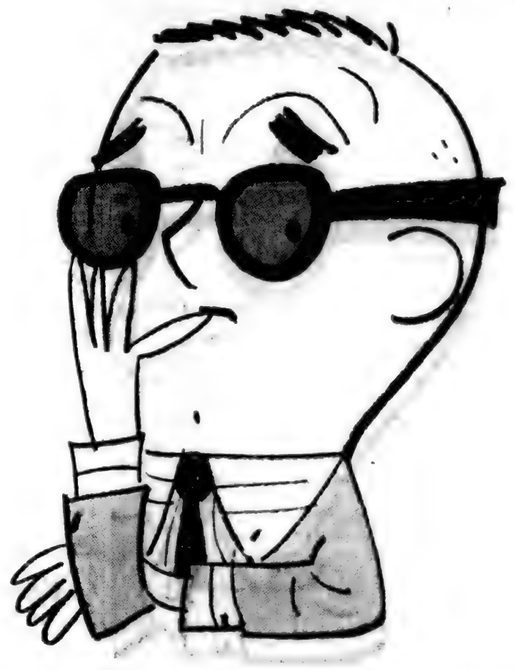
Saturday's Answer





Ever meet a pessimist?

He sees the world through dark glasses. He just knows that he'll wind up in a job he doesn't like, that he'll be underpaid, that he'll get lost in the crowd. But realistic men know these things depend largely on their own decision in choosing a career.

Realistic men look for companies that provide sound training, advancement opportunities, challenging work, stimulating associates and good pay. These are the fundamentals that insure success and progress in a career.

The Bell Telephone Companies offer these fundamentals to hard-working, ambitious realists majoring in the arts, the sciences, business or engineering. Get the whole story regarding telephone careers. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus. Ask him about training, advancement opportunities, salary, job security. We think you'll like what you learn.

Moe Gets 17, Larese 16 In Sixth Straight Win

CHARLOTTE — Carolina's power-laden Tar Heels ran up their sixth consecutive victory here last night by completely overpowering helpless South Carolina 62-50 in the first half of a basketball double header in the Charlotte Coliseum.

The Tar Heels were behind only once, at 1-0, quickly tied the count at 1-1, went ahead 3-1 and were never headed after that.

Carolina, holding 4-6-point leads most of the first half, spurted to a 10-point spread at intermission at 27-17.

The Tar Heels came rearing back onto the floor after halftime, and charged to a weighty 42-27 lead. In that stretch, soph sensation Doug Moe pumped in 10 straight points.

South Carolina's dying effort came with 3 minutes left when the closed the widening gap to 12 points at 56-44, but Carolina just poured it on some more and pulled away for good.

The victory gave the nationally second-ranked Tar Heels a surprising 12-1 record overall, and pushed their unbeaten conference mark to 7-0. Carolina returns home next Wednesday night to battle with Maryland's Terrapins.

It was mostly a slow and dull contest with Carolina still seeking to hit its stride after the long lay-off. The Tar Heels superior heigth and finesse paid off, however, as the so-so Gamecocks were never in the running.

Frank McGuire wasted no time in getting his substitutes into the contest, sending Ray Stanley, Hugh Donahue, and Lou Brown into the action with Carolina holding only a 4-point lead.

Donahue, seeing action in his second game as a Tar Heel, was held out the entire first semester and played for the first time last night against Clemson.

The win was the second for Carolina over the Gamecocks; they earlier whipped Walt Hambrick's crew 83-67 at Columbia.

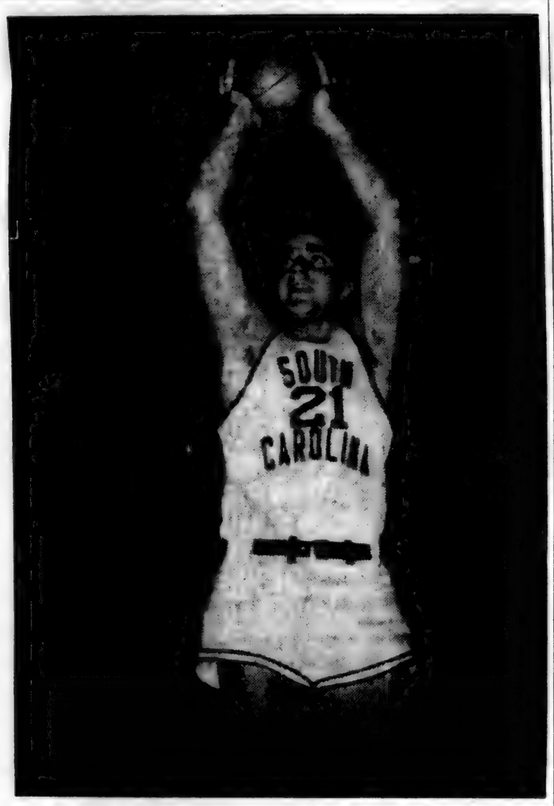
ACC Tourney Tickets

RALEIGH, Jan. 31 — (AP) — Mail order sales for tickets to the Atlantic Coast Conference Basketball Tournament scheduled for Reynolds Coliseum March 5-7 will open Monday.

The ACC Basketball Committee said each order must be limited to four season books, but persons desiring adjacent seats may enclose separate orders and checks on one envelope.

Season books cost $10 or $8 and individual game tickets sell for $2.50 each. Orders should include 25 cents to cover the mailing costs.

The committee said tickets will be distributed to each conference school. Cross counter sales begin Feb. 16.



GAMECOCK ACE — Ray "Cookie" Pericola was a bright spot in South Carolina's losing effort against Carolina's Tar Heels last night. The Heels whipped the Birds in Charlotte Coliseum.

Tar Babies Win Tri-State Event Championship

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Carolina's Tar Babies rolled over previously unbeaten Bullis Prep here last night 63-55 to gain the championship of the Tri-State Invitational Tourney.

The Tar Babies led most of the way. The victory pushed their record to 6-2. Buulis Prep had a 9-0 record going into tonight's game.

Don Walsh, the 5-11 guard, was voted the tournament's Most Valuable Player. Walsh got 21 tonight and 22 last night.

The Tar Babies led 39-25 at halftime and their lead was never seriously threatened.

2 State Cagers Leave For Home

They are Mark Reiner, a 5-11 back court ace who was considered the sixth-ranked Wolfpack's "s i x t h" man; and Stan Niewierowski, a 6-4 198-pounder who has seen only limited action this season.

Both are sophomores.

N. C. State officials, here for the team's participation in a double-header at the Coliseum, said neither player was in scholastic or disciplinary diffculty. They left the squad Thursday, telling Coach Everett Case they were quitting for personal reasons.

Reiner was considered a prime prospect. Earlier in the season he started several games, teaming with senior Lou Pucillo, a 5-9 back court and shooting wizard.

State Game To Be Televised

The Charlotte station said that it was possible that the seven other Carolina stations who regularly carry the ACC Saturday afternoon telecasts also would carry the return game at Chapel Hill between the two national powers.

When the teams met two weeks ago North Carolina State was ranked No. 1 in the nation and lost an overtime game to Carolina at Raleigh.

Soph Flashes Moe And Larese Talk Grades And Basketball

Two young men were relaxing in the dormitory directly across from the campus gymnasium where they perform to the delight of a limited number of students on occasion. A week of rough exams had slowly passed and this being Sunday, a day of physical and mental rest was in order before returning to the practice floor and new classes.

One would assume that a couple of sophomore starters on the nation's second-ranked basketball team would have experienced their greatest tension on the cage boards. But not so with York Larese and Doug Moe, North Carolina's spectacular young stars of the hardwood.

Larese, the Tar Heels' leading point-maker with a 16.2 average through 11 games, began, "Pressure during exams is centainly stiffer than I've experienced in any game. You can play basketball anytime, but not here if you don't keep up the grades."

Exams - You Must Pass

Moe agreed. "Exams affect me a thousand times as much as any game ever has. In a game you have alternate decision, you can pass, dribble or shoot. The strain of exams is terrific because you can only pass to play."

York Bruno Larese, reared in Manhattan, was an outstanding high school performer at St. Ann's. He received some 30 college scholarship offers upon graduation. "But I selected Carolina," he said, "because some friends of mine were here and liked it. And, too, I didn't want to go to a city school."

The story of Douglas Edwin Moe's enrollment here differs. "Coach McGuire was the first to show any interest in me," the handsome six-five Brooklyn native began. "He sold me on the place right away. Later, when other coaches began talking to me, I told them I had already decided on Carolina, although I didn't know a thing about the place."

Actually A Junior

Larese is actually a junior in college standing, but was forced to sit out last season with knee injuries. Heralded as one of the finest marksmen ever to come out of New York City, York has not disappointed his followers. His present shooting percentage of an even 50 percent leads the Atlantic Coast Conference.

When asked how bad the pressure is when playing N. C. State in Raleigh, Larese shuddered. "We've played there so much by now that we are accustomed to the pressure. But the noise . . . it nearly runs you out of the place sometimes." Moe chimed in, "Nothing bothers me as long as we are leading. But when we get behind, I can really hear that crowd."

Both boys are sorry UNC does not have a larger place in which to play and also are not in favor of the ACC set-up for selecting the conference champion. Larese said, "I think all the students, at least, should be able to see the games. As for the ACC Tournament, well . . . you can't possibly find the true champion in three games. Any team can have an off night. Not just because we are leading right now, I don't care who happened to be leading, the regular season winner should go to the NCAA.

Moe's convictions on the subject were similar. "It would be very discouraging to win 14 in a row and then lose out in the tourney," Doug offered. "Fourteen games mean more than three." Concerning the limited seating capacity (4,800) of Woollen Gym, Moe only said, "I would hate to be playing on a visiting team in Woollen Gym."

Robertson the Best

Having played many of the top teams in the nation so far this season, the Tar Heels have faced many outstanding players. But both Larese and Moe agree that Cincinnati's Oscar Robertson is the best individual opponent they have met. But a difference of opinion arises over the top team foe. Larese says either N. C. State or Michigan State. But Moe said he would have to go along with Cincinnati. But the youngsters agree that the recent overtime win over N. C. State in Raleigh was their greatest cage thrill.

Moe, carrying an 11.2 scoring average into the second half of the season, is undecided about his future plans. Being a fine baseball prospect, he said he might give that sport a try after his career at UNC is over. He plans to pitch for the Carolina nine this spring. On the other hand, Larese has decided on his future. "First I want to get married," he grins. "Then either get a coaching job or enter some kind of recreation work with children." To the satisfaction of all Tar Heel supporters, it will be quite a while before either of the boys leave Chapel Hill.

each boy for about four morning

The average school day schedules hours of classroom work, two hours practice in late afternoon, and both insist on eight hours sleep each night. Larese studies after classes before practice and relaxes at night, while Moe prefers to rest in the afternoon and study at night after drills.

Praise McGuire

Both boys are extremely generous in their praise of Coach McGuire. "I've never seen a coach who could build up a team as he does before each game," Larese offered. "That's been the big factor in our success."

"This is the first team I've ever been associated with," Moe interrupted, "that has absolutely no friction between the players. Under Coach McGuire, we couldn't have it if we wanted to." That statement can be seen with a look at the statistics sheet. Each of the UNC starters is averaging over 11 points per game. There is no player attempting to score more than another. Friction never appears on a balanced team. As Larese adds, "We're just happy to be winning."

With this joyful conclusion, the Tar Heel heroes departed. Either could have passed for the groom as they headed to a friend's wedding.

Carolina mentor Frank McGuire, who lured the youngsters to Dixieland as he has so many, cannot hide his enthusiasm over his prize pupils. At the mere mention of either, his expression resembles that of a Wall Street hoofer whose stock has just doubled.

"The potential of those boys to unlimited," 1957's a Coach of the Year said. "York's shooting has been phenomenal. And he's a wonderful rebounder too. But Moe has been the real surprise. He has made our team go. He's a better shot than people realize (hitting over 40 percent) and he's a fine floor-man. He makes successful passes that other players would not even attempt. I keep telling them that they are too inexperienced to be doing so well, but they don't listen to me."

Furtado Urges Change Government System

By STAN BLACK

Student Body President Don Furtado urged a thorough reorganization of Student Government in a speech delivered to a gathering of Student Party members in the Rendezvous Room last night.

Among other problems discussed by Furtado were traffic control, discriminatory clauses, the foreign student problem, deferred rush, and student control of employees.

Concerning reorganization of Student Government, Furtado said that the projected growth of the University in the next five years would necessitate expanded and at the same time more efficient operations to provide the student body with necessary services.

"We should anticipate setting up in the near future a cabinet type structure to deal with difficulties arising in various phases of campus life."

It is also likely, Furtado added, that we will need to request a raise in student fees supporting Student Government to take care of the increased functions.

Another project that should be undertaken soon is a revision of the Constitution to further clarify recall procedures and judicial organization. A committee is presently studying the entire judicial branch with that ultimate end in mind.

One of the most pressing needs, according to President Furtado, is student realization of the purpose of attending the University. He noted Carolina's reputation as the "Country Club of North Carolina" in connection with this point.

Concerning discriminatory clauses in fraternity and sorority charters, Furtado said that the University has decided not to try to force established organization to change their charters, but that it is likely that no fraternity or sorority with such a clause will be allowed to come on this campus in the future.

He said of deferred rush only that its feasibility should be studied, as some of its benefits are obvious. It is a question of whether the harm to the fraternity system would be too great.

Crockford Chairs Chemistry Dept.

Dr. Horace D. Crockford, professor of chemistry, has been named acting chairman of the Department of Chemistry here while Dr. Arthur Roe is on an 18-month leave of absence.

Chancellor William B. Aycock and Dean J. Carlyle Sitterson of the College of Arts and Sciences announced the selection of Dr. Crockford, who has been on the UNC faculty for 37 years.

DR. H. D. CROCKFORD
subbing for Dr. Arthur Roe

Dr. Roe, a Kenan professor, has joined the National Science Foundation in Washington, D. C., to aid in improving content of mathematics and science courses in the nation's colleges and universities.

A teacher of physical chemistry courses on both the graduate and the undergraduate level, Dr. Crockford has been a leader in promoting science interest among North Carolina high school students.

He is also well known in local Navy circles, having directed the Naval Reserve Officers School in Durham, and holds the rank of captain. During the period from 1930-40 he was associated with the staff of the Naval Research Laboratory at Washington.

Dr. Crockford is state director of the science fair program, which will be climaxed by the N. C. Science Fair here during April. In March he will have charge of UNC's participation in the second annual N. C. Junior Science Symposium, to be held in the Raleigh-Durham-Chapel Hill area for 300 select high school students.

Another major post which Dr. Crockford holds is director of the 1959 Summer Institute for College Chemistry Teachers, to be held at UNC on June 8-July 17 for some 50 persons from throughout the nation.

A native of Philadelphia, Pa., Crockford was graduated from N. C. State College, and took his master's and doctor's degrees in chemistry here, beginning his studies and teaching duties in 1921.

Dr. Crockford has written some 40 research papers published in various journals; a laboratory manual of physical chemistry and "Fundamentals of Physical Chemistry," which will appear in a second edition in May.

He began his Navy service in 1936 when he received a reserve commission as a lieutenant. During World War II he was on active duty in connection with various training programs. For two years he was in charge of instruction in mathematics and physics and later celestial navigation at the Navy Preflight School here.

Responsibility Will Be Topic Of NSA Meet

"Student Responsibility" will be the theme of a regional NSA educational affairs conference here Feb. 27-29, according to plans drafted by the campus National Student Assoc. committee yesterday.

Students from 40 regional schools in N. C., S. C. and Va. will gather for the conference which is set to start with a keynote address Friday, Febrary 27 by either NSA national executive Reginald Green or a faculty member from Randolph-Macon College who has recently been active in developing student responsibility.

Campus NSA cor-ordinator Ed Levy outlined orientation, the school of education, course evaluation and high school training as four major areas in which the conference might deal. Levy said the conference's purpose's "to emphasis the student's potential, obligation and role in his own education."

NSA regional vice-president Frank Elkin, in charge of educational affairs, noted that letters to various members of the University administration have drawn expressions of interest in the conference.

Elkin also stated that having the conference here was practically a last resort. The conference originally was scheduled for Charlotte, then change to Davidson, but both lacked facilities for a gathering of the size anticipated.

Virginia Integrates Peacefully

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL

RICHMOND, Va. — (AP) — Racial integration imposed by federal courts came yesterday to unwilling Virginia and seven of her public schools.

Police stood guard, alert but unneeded. The historic shift took place without incident or disorder.

Yet it was with grimness and discontent that the Old Dominion watched the ancient ramparts of segregation start tumbling down in a state which once paced the southland in massive resistance to the mixing of races in the schools.

Through the gaps 17 Negro youngsters filed into six junior and senior high school in Norfolk, the state's largest city. Another four entered Stratford Junior High in Arlington County, a prosperous suburb of Washington.

So for the first time in Virginia's history, Negroes and whites began attending public schools together, limited though the scale of integration might be at the outset.

Here in this capital of the Confederacy during a war fought over another racial issue, the legislature rang out with continued cries of segregationists.

"The rape of our constitutional rights is an accomplished fact," said Sen. Mills E. Godwin," also from the Southside, the area most heavily populated with Negroes.

Segregationists in the legislature still hunted hopeful, but with slim chances of success, for some new device to bring integration to a halt. One rallying point, a new school

Dining Hall Committee To Take Poll In Lenoir

"We feel that since Lenoir Hall is for the students, the students should be accorded some say in the administration of the dining establishment," said Hobart T. Steele, Jr., chairman of the Student Dining Hall Committee.

Steele announced yesterday that questionaires for student opinion on dining facilities will be placed in Lenoir Hall later in the week. Students may pick up the forms in the south lobby and deposit the completed forms in a box there.

The forms ask for comments on (1) wholesomeness, tastiness, attractiveness, and variety of the food, (2) cleanliness of silverware and dishes, personnel, and tables, (3) adequacy and courtesy of the service, and (4) a question for employees only asking their opinions on working and pay conditions.

The Student Dining Hall Committee, established by a Student Legislature bill introduced by Dave Jones, was given full investigative power and authority to make positive recommendations to Lenoir Hall and the Student Aid Office.

"We hope to correct conditions that need correcting," said Steele. He listed as examples of conditions needing correction the one cent charges for extra lemon slices and margarine which have been calculated to bring the cost of margarine up to $1.20 per pound and to make lemons cost approximately 25c each.

The questionaire idea was used Steele asserted "so that arbitrary decisions wouldn't be made by the committee."

Other members of the Student Dining Hall Committee are Dave Jones, representing Student Legislature; Molly Short, representing Carolina Women's Council; Tom Mehl, representing the Inter Dormitory Council; and David Brooks, delegate-at-large from the student body.

Abernethy House Going Down To Make Room For Staff Cars

The Abernethy House, next to the Ackland Art Center on Columbia Street here, is being torn down and the property used as an extension of the grounds and landscaping for the art museum and also to provide parking for members of the UNC faculty.

The property was recently acquired by the University from Mrs. Abernethy, widow of Dr. Eric A. Abernethy, long the director of the University Infirmary. The house was built in 1905, and many University students have lived there.

The use of a portion of the property as a gravelled parking lot will add about 60 new parking spaces to help relieve the parking and traffic problem on campus and in town.

The front of the Abernethy property, facing on Columbia Street, will retain the trees and shrubbery at the front to blend with the landscaping of the adjacent art center.

About 65 parking spaces were eliminated here in the new construction at Phillips Hall, to house the Univac 1105, and the additions to Peabody Building.

However, the loss of those spaces is more than made up by the addition of about 30 spaces between the Peabody parking lot and the Naval ROTC headquarters where a greenhouse was removed.

Cheating Trial Is Tomorrow

Straight Publicity Story: Winter Germans Near

Better start making plans because it will soon be time for Winter Germans.

This winter the Germans Club will feature Kai Winding, his trombone and Septet; John Birks "Dizzy Gillespie, modern jazz trumpeter; and Chris Conner, famed jazz and popular vocalist, for the Saturday afternoon concert on Feb. 14. Kai Winding will also play for the dance Friday night, Feb. 13.

Winding has risen to prominence in the last 10 years as one of the greatest exponents of modern jazz trombone playing and stylization.

Leonard Feather, in his "Encyclopedia of Jazz" said that "Winding, who plays in a brittle yet volatile and emphatic style, ranks with Johnson as one of the two major trombone products of bop, a pacesetter in 1945 and still a major influence." The danceable and jazz-oriented Septet is a further measure of the greatness of Kai Winding.

He first received national notice in 1947 when he joined the Stan Kenton Orchestra as a featured soloist and section trombonist. Among his most popular recordings with Kenton were "Collaboration," "in Bolero, in Boogie" and "Artistry in Percussion." In 1948 he left Kenton to play briefly with Charlie Ventura, lead combos of his own for a year and branch out into studio work with personalities such as Pattie Page.

The Winding success story was given greatest impetus by his joining another great trombonist, J. J. Johnson, in 1954 to form the now famous two-trombone team of "K. and J.J." They remained together for two years, making recordings on the Columbia, Bethlehem and Savoy labels.

Their performances of Broadway show tunes, as "It's All Right With Me," Lover" and "Mad About the Boy," became jazz classics. They separated in the summer of 1957 immediately after a successful appearance at the Newport Jazz Festival to form their own groups. They still make occasional appearances together.

Upon his separation from Johnson, Winding organized three trombones to complement his own bristling sound, a rhythm section, and went on the road billed as "The Trombone Sound." The group became immediately popular at college dances and concerts, and toured the entire nation.

In the summer of 1957 "The Trombone Sound" was featured at an afternoon concert of the Newport Jazz Festival and was generally felt to be one of the high points of the entire festival.

Winding's three "Trombone Sound" albums have been successful. One of the albums, "Trombone Panorama," is a humorous and informative history of jazz trombone playing, with impressions of such people as Glenn Miller, Jack Teagardern and J. J. Johnson. Winding is expected to perform this panorama during his Saturday afternoon concert here. His most recent release, "The Swinging States," is a series of Jazz impressions of famous songs saluting some of the 49 states.

IDC Executive Group Will Meet Tonight

The Executive Committee of the Interdormitory Council will meet today at 5:30 p.m. in the upstairs dining room of Lenoir Hall.

All members of the committee have been urged to attend.

Investigation Nets Only One Student

One student will go on trial Wednesday night as an alleged accomplice in a possible cheating ring.

The student was indicted last night, after several days of investigation by Attorney General Dick Robinson and his staff failed to yield further indictments other than that made last night.

Investigation sprung from a report given Honor Council Chairman Hugh Patterson that exams were for sale in Cobb Dormitory. Two students reported the fact.

In order to get the information, the Honor Council commissioned the two students to make an offer to the student supposed to be selling the examinations.

The pair offered the student $50 for examinations, but received none. However, shortly before the end of the examination period, the two students were given a key by the student, but the key would not open the office lock that it was supposed to, although it opened other locks in the classroom building.

The student who sold the key is no longer in the University; however, on trial is his roommate for complicity in the potential cheating ring.

Further complications of the case that might enlarge the cheating ring into something more than a one student enterprise have failed to develop, but investigation is continuing.

The last big cheating episode in the Universtiy history happened three years ago, when an ex-student was alleged to have stolen examinations and sold them.

As far as investigators have been able to ascertain as the present time, no examinations were stolen.

The accomplice will be tried for failure to report an honor code offense and complicity in the cheating scheme.

According to reliable sources, the defendant did not consider the sale of the key as a serious transaction, but considered it rather as some sort of joke.

Symposium Interviews Start Today

Interviews for prospective members of the Carolina Symposium General Committee will be held today and Wednesday.

Al Goldsmith, chairman of the Symposium's Interim Committee, said yesterday any student interested in working with the Symposium may be interviewed today from 2 to 4 p.m. or Wednesday from 2 to 5 p.m. Both interviewing sessions will be held in the Grail Room.

Approximately 15 people will be named to the Symposium General Committee.

The interviews will be conducted by the present committee members.

Kezziah Named Chief Clerk

Student Body President Don Furtado has announced the appointment of Mike Kezziah as chief clerk of the Men's Honor Council.

Kezziah, a junior, will replace Jack Raper who resigned from the post because of a pending operation and to devote more time to YMCA activities.

The new appointee has served as clerk in the Honor Council for the past semester.

Vending Machines Taken Out By Mistake

The vending machines which were removed from Avery, Parker and Teague dorms will be replaced soon, according to Rudy Edwards, IDC president.

The machines were taken from the dorms when the store opened in Avery basement last week.

In a meeting held yesterday afternoon Edwards, J. A. Branch, business manager, H. R. Ritchie, director of University Book Stores, and Jim Crownover, chairman of the Campus Store Committee, agreed to install a soft drink machine which will dispense three drinks, a candy machine and a cigarette machine in each of the three dorms.

"We hope the machines will be installed in about 10 days," said Edwards.

He said the machines had been removed by the business office when the store opened because of a misunderstanding between that office and the Campus Store Committee.

Both the store and the vending machines will be kept, according to Edwards.

If it turns out that the vending machines seem to be keeping the store from making a profit a poll will be taken in the three dorms to decie whether students want the store closed or the vending machines removed.

AFROTC Makes Awards To Six Student Cadets

Military achievement awards and the Cadet of the Month Award were made in ceremonies of the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps at UNC.

The Cadet of the Month award was presented to Frederick F. Wolfer Jr. of Portland, and Philip B. Nash of Bristol, Va. A board of five cadet officers made the selection in an interview of the cadets competing for the award.

German Table Is Conducted In Lenoir

In order to help students who are taking German to gain more ease in speaking the language, a German Lunch is held every Tuesday and Thursday in the back room upstairs over Lenoir Hall.

Native German speakers — Germans, Austrians and Swiss—meet with the students twice each week for lunch and conversation in German.

Everyone from beginners to native speakers is invited to attend the lunch. Food may be taken upstairs.

ABC Stores

Today townspeople, a few students, and many people in the county will vote on whether the county will have ABC stores during the coming year.

They have the opportunity to bring Chapel Hill a new source of revenue, which currently is being applied to the pockets of other counties in the state.

They have a chance of assuming a more natural attitude toward alcohol than they have before, for alcohol taken in moderation is not necessarily unhealthy, while drunkenness may surely be. However, to keep temptation 12 miles away is not to eliminate it, and surely will not build strong individuals capable of overcoming temptation. The issue must be faced here.

Furthermore, it is the individual's right to drink — as much as it is the individual's right to say no, and neither viewpoint should be forced upon the other, because this would truly be in violation of an individual's free choice in a democracy. A person who does not want to drink, does not have to, but to prohibit someone else is something else again.

The citizens of Orange County will have a chance to be honest to themselves and consistent with individual freedom in the referendum today. The right choice is to vote wet. Under legal control, alchohol is a lot better them under a prohibitive system with no control.

Registration

Some people have questioned the editor and Student Body President Don Furtado about their motives in trying to get students the right to vote in Chapel Hill on the grounds that both the editor and Furtado were just trying to get legalized liquor in Chapel Hill.

While it may be true that both are in favor of legalized liquor in Chapel Hill, if one thinks back about six months to the Great Parking Crisis of spring 1958, one can see the need for a student voice in town affairs.

Many townspeople have objected on the grounds that students know very little about school consolidation issues and the like, but the same issue come up in the towns that students originated from, and the student has little or no knowledge of the issue there as compared to their knowledge of the local issue.

The right to vote is being denied by the peculiar transient status of the student and the local attitude of election boards here and in other parts of the country. It is an issue in itself, separate and apart from consideration of ABC stores. It is the right to vote issue that is important, the other is secondary.

Levy Bill

Harry Ashmore pointed out quite rightly that the Levy (nee telegram) letter bill would have no great impact on the segregation crisis in Arkansas. Indeed, if any of the sponsors of the bill thought it would, they were sadly mistaken.

At best the letter to Governor Faubus would add another voice of reason to try to douse the heat of politically stirred emotionalsim, that the Governor has created in that state.

And yet, the passage of the bill is important, for it is a southern group that is passing the bill. It is a southern student leadership that is saying that education is the primary issue, and that massive resistance is wrong. It is a southern group that is taking the initiative and telling the people of North Carolina that they stand for law and order and are opposed to deprivation of education for anybody to attain political ends. This is the significance of the Levy bill.

As it stands, it must be modified, in that the situation has so changed in Virginia as to make it superfluous to send the letter to Governor Almond. Perhaps it would be wise to send a letter to Mayor Hartsfield of Atlanta in praise of his courageous stand. It is nice if you can praise a southerner's attitude on the question, and perhaps it will cast the Faubus bill in its proper perspective.

Phones

It is amazing that people of college age can not find more enlightening toys to play with than dormitory telephones, for their efforts in ripping out phones in many dorms, which may have caused these, the infirm in mind, much joy, but has caused the students all over the campus endless trouble.

The phone system in Chapel Hill may be and is poor, and yet this is not the way to take out grievances about the inability to get an operator, information, a dial tone, the right number, or the wire that you have crossed with another line uncrossed. Indeed, this only jeopardizes future chances for improvement, and leaves a large number of students without phones at times when they may have to be reached in an emergency.

Despite the vandalism, the phones should be replaced, but dormitory officers should be vigilant so that those who are doing the damage will be appresended. Fun is fun, but ripping telephones out of their hinges isn't.

The End Of Exams

P. W. Carlton

We'd been rushing around for a week, cramming and frying our brains, trying to learn what we should have studied weeks before. Tension began to pile up, nerves grew raw. Sanka and L and M did a booming business, while No Doze stock soared. Signs appeared on many doors, some blasphemously denying visitors entrance, others pleading pathetically for silence. Shadows appeared beneath eyes, which in turn became bloody, but for once these phenomenon were caused by reading rather than by a superfluity of liquid refreshment coupled with early hours.

As the period of "fear and trembling" progressed, men cracked under the strain, giving way to fits of depression, some drowning their sorrows in alcohol, some retreating into shells of despair. Each da ysaw more and more tension permeating the atmosphere. Roommates conversed in quiet tones, their nervous laughter and frightened eyes conveying awareness of the taut situation. Silence became the rule rather than the exception in the dimly lit dormitories.

By the forth day of exams the signs of mental exhaustion made themselves manifest in conversation. A certain "lightness" pervaded all. Men spoke of wild and whirling things, like running through the arboretum stark naked and dancing nude beneath the trees therein. There was talk of soaring from the dormitory roof and flying away into the night in search of adventure. Long and serious discussions took place concerning the aerodynamics involved in such a venture. Finally the poor souls succumbed to academic fatigue and began to sit for hours staring at walls or out windows. Obviously, the critical point had been reached. Something had to give.

And then it rained. From the dark sky fell cooling drops sparkling and dancing on the rooftops, sliding over window panes, plopping on the sills in an amiable fashion. The timeless music of the rainfall started in the tin gutters of the roof, calming strained nerves and salving inflamed emotions. All over the building students left their desks and were drawn to the windows, where they stood watching silently. One could see the hard lines of their faces relax as the raindrops spattered impishly upon their clothing and upturned faces.

The rain is a friendly entity, brings peace and quiet joy with it. No one can explain the reason for its effect on man but it is easily seen. It brings life and makes people pause to reflect upon easie things and put off for a moment the mundance cares of day to day existance. It regenerates the weary soul, lending an aura of beauty to the dusty counterpane of physical experience.

"What Do You Mean, 'Where's The Space Ship?' You Trying To Spoil A Good Story?"

Khruschev's Speech: Nothing Radically New

"The Soviet people will learn to consume more sweets and less bitters." The slogans that politicians throw off can be more revealing than grave statements of policy. The first of these slogans, Mr. Macmillan's, uses the past tense: the other, Mr. Khrushchev's, uses the future tense. Setting aside for the moment the differences between Britain and the Soviet Union as industrial societies, we may say that over vast areas of the world people are eager to be addressed in the future tense. That is Mr. Khrushchev's strength, and he makes the most of it. Whatever struggles may have gone on in the inner rooms of the Kremlin, he emerges before the world as the man with a song in his heart —and the song tells of riches, ease and peace to be achieved if people follow his confident directions. Brandishing in one hand a sputnik, in the other a sheaf of corn (or is it maize?), he expects millions to join the Communist cause when they see its material success. Who shall say that he is mistaken? In the Soviet Union he has defeated his opponents — the "anti-party group"" now branded once again as "despicable" and, worse still, wrong—partly by the methods of the ward boss but also by standing out as the leader who promised the most glittering prizes and improvised the speediest means of attaining them. Communism in his hands is almost emptied of all ideological content other than this song of plenty to come—but it is the song the people want to hear, in Asia and Africa as well as at home. The rest of us ought to heed the warning. Not only have we to convince the poor countries that our way to plenty is at least as good as the Communists' violent methods. We should also compare our own performance with that which Mr. Krushchev hymns in advance. How many science graduates shall we have in 1965? And how many tens of thousands of miles of Soviet railways will have been electrified by the time the current flows from Manchester to Crewe or Euston?

Of itself, however, Mr. Khrushchev's song ought not to grate in our ears. If the Soviet Union can achieve the economic benefits which he holds out, so much the better for everybody. They will mean a better life for hard-used people. At the same time it will add to the world's wealth. So "Good appetite, comrades" is, as a battle cry, safer for mankind at large than world revolution. How closely Soviet performance will match Mr. Khrushchev's promises is another matter. One of his promises seems already to have been modified. To judge from first reports of his long speech, he has stopped saying (as he did when the seven-year plan was launched) that Russia would overtake the capitalist countries in output per head by 1970. The aim is still there, but the date (it seems) has been put back. For the rest the targets are those given in the plan. Most of them still seem respectable and realistic enough — but Mr. Khrushchev is still bent on making a genuine and solid increase in production sound more extra-ordinary than, on his own figures, it will be. In spite of his disclaimer the planned rate of increase has gone down—to a figure which, if it is achieved, will have the merit of being about as high as the real and more sensible than the projected figure under the last plan. We may perhaps detect in Mr. Khrushchev's speech a stronger inducement than he has held out before to the many people in Russia who hanker after an easier life and more consumer goods—though we may wonder whether the high target for agriculture will be met and many note that Mr. Khrushchev is cagey about the time when the severe housing shortage will be relieved to the point of allowing every Soviet family its own front door.

On this as on other matters Mr. Khrushchev presents us with a kind of double image. There is the jolly cherub who empties from his cornucopia a mixture of boiled sweets (so much healthier than vodka) and space rockets (so much better than nuclear weapons), casting over them a glow of millennial expectation. And there is the rough-and-ready politician who has just knocked together the heads of "anti-party" rivals and planned the latest infiltration into the Middle East. The affair of the "anti-party group" continues to rumble in the background, and a delicate seismograph might perhaps pick up from Tuesday's speech a small reference to the yet more arcane dispute over the priority to be given to industry or agriculture. On international affairs Mr. Khrushchev's comments scarcely depart from what is now routine, except in his new proposal of an "atom-free" zone in the Pacific and in his admission of marginal differences from China. On all these matters the congress, or its sequel, may cast a light less anodyne than that beamed forth from Mr. Khruschev on Tuesday. But for the moment the stance we see him in is the jaunty one appropriate to a man who, if he had attended an American university (one of those Texas agricultural colleges, say), would certainly have been voted by his classmates "most likely to succeed."—The Manchester Guardian

On International Law

Sidney Dakar

The other day I read of a speech by a gentleman from Duke University. He spoke on world rule by international law. This gentleman, like many others, feels that our major problems in international relations could be solved if we had good, strong international laws. This solution seems doubtful as long as we have sovereign states.

Such a simple and logical solution would certainly be welcomed in our troubled world today. What could be better than to have an orderly way of disposing of any and all problems that arise? After all, does not this system work here in the U. S.? Mr. Reinhold Niebuhr, professor of Applied Christianity at Union Theological Seminary, has wrote on this subject. He says that "we try to reason from national to international communities, and trust in the abstract logic of constitutional forms in disregard of the underlying social realities. All of such solutions take legal symbols for social realities."

There are some rather basic facts that the preachers of international law seem to gloss over. The most important of these is that Russia does not accept the authority of The Hague, the present International Court. Russia maintains that this court supports the western capitalistic law and she cannot recognize it.

The big issues between governments are not disagreements over what the law is but over what the law should be. One of the main disadvantages of the Court is that it cannot say what the law should be; it can only say what the law is. The Court cannot, as a rule, take social and political factors into account when it reaches it decisions. These very factors are the ones that cause most of the wars.

Most of the cases that go to the Court are of very little consequence to the nation as a whole. They may involve sums of several thousand dollars, or even several million, but what is this to most nations? No nation ever agrees to submit issues concerning "national honor" and "vital interest." A nation that wants to change the status quo is certainly not going to submit the issue to the Court and have an almost certain ruling against it. And of course no case can go before the Court unless both parties agree to it.

The Court tries to maintain the status quo, as defined by past decisions of the Court and by agreements between nations. Almost all wars have been started not because the aggressive nation did not know the status quo but because the nation felt that it was time to change it. One of our most pressing problems today is that Russia does not recognize the status quo and, furthermore, she has vowed to change it by overthrowing the capitalistic countries and ruling the world with Communism.

"To assume that the tortuous processes of history can be controlled by the power of constitutional logic is an infantile illusion," says Mr. Niebuhr.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

It seems there are still people in the world who consider Baroque music performed by Baroque instruments a delicate treat to be digested with proper esoteric taste and academic frame of mind. These people gasp at the subtleties of the harpsicord, gape at the recorder, and gurgle with delight at the sight of an honest-to-goodness viola da gamba. Unfortunately I am not one of these people, as I like to consider my music as music where ever it comes from, whenever it was composed, and however it is reproduced. And with such an attitude, the sounds of the harpsichord, recorder, and viola da gamba quickly lost their charm for me during the Petites Musicales Concert in Gerrard Hall last Sunday evening.

Mr. Francis Hooper, Mr. Efrim Fruchtmann, and Mr. Wilton Mason pooled their efforts to devote an entire evening to such Baroque composers as Telemann, Cimarosa, and Handel. The first five minutes of a concert of this kind are always interesting. The harpsichord sounds quaint, delicate, even delicious. But as soon as the novelty wears off, and it does rather quickly for me I am afraid, nothing is left but the artist's persistence that what he is playing is frightfully interesting and my conviction that it is time we consider his instrument a thing of the past. As it was, Mr. Hooper's playing struck me as downright boring throughout the first two selections, a Fantasy of Telemann and a Suite of Purcell, so actually even the composers' compositional gems remained unassuming and unpretentious — making it impossible to really say anything significant about either performer or composer.

The Handel Sonata that followed, aided with a gamba continuo, is one of the better-known works the composer wrote for the flute. As it came across, it has lost all its robust flavor, dramatic musical import, and plodded childishly to its end. I was glad to see Mr. Hooper return to the harpsichord after the intermission: at least he seems at home there on the recorder he sounded like a Boy Scout playing the National Anthem on his home-made whistle.

The Suite No. XI in D Minor of Handel received the most authoritative performance of the evening. Mr. Hopper played it with character and strongly pronounced rhythms t;hat made the piece a lively and, all in all, delightful affair. Especially the last two movements of the work are clearly defined in expression: the composer seems to be able to get out of his peculiar bad habit that I find so irritating, namely, a kind of indecisive musical progression that wanders contrapuntally but does not quite achieve anything. Mr. Hopper's performance did full justice to these two movements in solving Handel's' dilemma.

I am frankly at a loss who to blame for the trivia of the following work, Kary Friedrich Abel's Sonata in E minor for viola da gamba and harpsichord. Was it Fruchtmann's uncomfortably petite performance, the irritating nasal sounds of his instrument, or the composer's inconsequental musical material?

Cimarosa's music and a Sonata of Jose Joaquim Dos Sanctos filled the rest of the program. For those, as I said, who love the quaintness of a concert of, to say the least, music with distinct limits of expression, played on instruments that have gone below effeminacy in power, performed by musicians whose academic training has gotten the better of their artistic taste for them the evening was a distinct joy.

As for me, I was left as cold as a fish in need for some fresh water and invigorating air.

Postscript

Jonathan Yardley

"Playhouse 90" and Regionald Rose have made much more valuable contributions to television drama than last Thursday's "A Quiet Game of Cards," an interesting but only spasmodically meaningful play about the urge to kill and a number of other rather haphazardly arranged ideas. Excellent performances by Barry Sullivan and William Bendix, two of the industry's most consistent meat and potatoes actors, helped build the play to a climax that turned out to be quite anti-climatic.

The plot was a rather clever one: five men have been playing poker together every Tuesday night for a couple of decades and during that period have consistently raised both their incomes and the stakes. On the particular night on which the show begins they suddenly realize that the game of poker and the small stakes have become extremely monotonous, so they decide to do something more exciting. They choose murder, but a murder which will prove beneficial to society. During the next week each man is to decide uopn some person who is so evil that his death will prove a blessing to soceity. When they convene, however, the final choice is a blank slip of paper in the hat, placed there by Al (Played by Barry Sullivan).

It is at this point that the play assumes its most challenging and interesting moments, for Sullivan's contention is that it would be more beneficial to mankind to murder a genuinely good man than to kill a bad one, for there is always another equally bad one to rise in his place and consequently the world is not rid of an evil but of a man. Therefore he suggests that to murder a good man, and to place the blame for his murder on an element in society which needs correction, on the theory that a cruel and senseless murder would arouse the intense agitation needed for such a task. The man agreed upon is a Dr. Carmichael, a great educator who left his post at the State University ot become the principal of the toughest vocational high school in the state. This move had been widely hailed as one of the most courageous and honest attempts to fight juvenile delinquency. His murder, they felt, when accomplished in such a way as to make the "Jupiters," the largest gang in the school, seem guilty, would bring a great deal of public attention to the pressing problem of juvenile delinquency.

The plans for the murder are quickly agreed upon. A plan of the school is obtained and the time, a Wednesday night after a symposium which Carmichael holds for educators of the area, is decided upon. They play five card stud for the various jobs which must be done. One is to do the actual murder, one is to go with him, one obtains a switch blade knife, one goes into the school early and opens the side door, and one does nothing. Sullivan, of course, draws high and is chosen killer, and William Bendix, as Len, goes with him after the player who had drawn second high realizes that he is afraid.

It is at this point that one of the essential points of the play is made, that these men, mainly Sullivan and Bendix, are really more interested in the actual physical and emotional fact of the murder itself than in its supposed purpose. Their rationalizations for the murder, despite the arguments of their friends, are frenzied and almost mad. They say that they wish to change "the flow of history," and when told that sooner or later it is going to right itself anyway they reply that they are getting to old, and want to see it themselves. They wish to hurry the flow of history.

On the night of the murder everything goes smoothly. The door is opened with no trouble, and the two murderers depart on schedule and arrive on schedule. One of the three left behind, however, editor of the city's leading newspaper, suddenly realizes the complete criminality of what they are trying to do and rushes to the school. He beats Sullivan and Bendix and finds Carmichael in his office. He hurrys him out, saying he ought to be in bed and asking for an interview while they leave. In the hall, however, they encounter the murderers. They are introduced, and when Carmichael bends down to pick up something Sullivan raises the knife high above his head and is about to plunge it into Carmichael's back. He cannot do it. Suddenly Carmichael hears a noise, and goes into the storeroom, where he finds three juveniles wrecking everything in sight. As soon as they see him one grabs his arms and another, in the hurry of the moment, knifes the great man to death. As they leave we see, written on the wall, the words: "The Jupiters were here." The three men find the body and, as they stand amazed, Bendix looks up and asks questioningly: "The flow of history?" Fade-out and into commercial. The end.

Obviously, the end is a superficial cliche, a dissappointing finale to what had been a rather provocative ninety minutes (give or take fifteen for too many commercials and station breaks). However, things were said which bear thought, there was an excellent script, and the acting was good. Man cannot purposely change the flow of history; it flows of its own accord. The Jupiters killed the man because they were the ones who had to kill him. The outsiders, conscientious or not could not impose their own actions upon the actions and the fate of others. There is also a certain amount of implied irony at the end which is interesting: if they had not opened the door the boys never would have entered in all probability and the men being the last people in the building and possessing the switch blade knife, may be accused of the murder. History may have backfired.

VIRGINIA

Segregationalists Protest

closure bill, was defeated in the Senate.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond and legislators alike voiced gratification that the transition to integration was peaceful at Norfolk and Arlington. That was just what school and community authorities had predicted—with crossed fingers.

Both at Norfolk and in Arlington, 200 miles to the north, extra police were on duty just in case. But both inside and outside the buildings no violence or even unpleasantness were reported.

The Negro newcomers offered no complaints at their treatment. Demonstrations against them were lacking, even though cameraderie was lacking too.

Yet bespectacled Lewis Cousins, the one Negro admitted to Maury High in Norfolk, said he "made a few friends, mostly in the halls."

Norfolk's six secondary schools had been closed since last September. They never opened then, after federal courts ordered the 17 Negroes admitted and Virginia brought into play a now dead law to close them automatically.

In the interval, most of the pupils went into other public or private schools or tutored classes.

The expected enrollment last fall would have been 9,950. Today's belated enrollments totalled 6,443—about 1,000 less than school officials had expected. Whether this difference measures the extent of protest against integration was impossible to say.

The Norfolk schools were open only half a day, for enrolling the pupils and assigning them to classes. Classes begin today. A number of white children said it was good to be back, even with integration, although they still would prefer segregated schools.

The annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Research Foundation will be held at the UNC School of Pharmacy Wednesday (tomorrow).

A luncheon for the directors, UNC officials and the pharmacy faculty will be held at 12:15. The business session will begin at 1:45 p.m.

The organization was founded in 1946 by the pharmacists of North Carolina through the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Association. The purpose of the foundation is to promote pharmaceutical service to the state and the South through the UNC School of Pharmacy.

Dr. E. A. Brecht, dean of the UNC School of Pharmacy and secretary of the foundation, said the organization had one of its best years during 1958.

Dr. Brecht reported that during the 12 years of the organization's existence, a total of $276,000 had been received. Of this, some $68,000 had been expended by the School of Pharmacy for scholarships and fellowships, research supplies, special equipment, library materials and other needs of the Pharmacy School.

At the present time the foundation has assets totaling $198,000. Of this sum $167,000 is in endowments and the remainder, $31,000, is in expendable funds.

During the past 12 years, only $10,000 has been used as operating expenses by the foundation.

Tar Babies Seek Revenge Against State Wolflets Tonight

Put 6-2 Record On Line At Nashville

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Tar Babies tangle with the N. C. State frosh for the second time this year tonight in Nashville, N. C., and Coach Dean Smith's cagers will be out to avenge the 74-63 decision that the Wolflets hung on them in Raleigh.

For the Carolina frosh, who currently sport a 6-2 record, tonight's engagement will mark their third appearance in five days. The frosh will continue their busy schedule again tomorrow evening when they take on Wilmington College in Woollen Gym prior to the varsity game against Maryland.

Win Tournament

Last weekend the Tar Babies traveled to Washington, D. C. and came home with a trophy representing first place in the Tri-State Basketball Tournament held at Georgetown University. Coach Joe Quigg who directed the team on this trip felt that the team played very well during the two-night stand.

Friday night's contest was the closest affair that the Carolina frosh have been in to date. It took a jump shot by Don Walsh in the final seconds of the game to give the Tar Babies a 75-73 win over the Georgetown frosh and send them into the finals against Bullis Prep.

The Tar Babies trailed by as much as eight points during the first half of the Geirgetown game but came on strong in the closing minutes to nail down a 38-33 halftime lead. Walsh had 20 points to lead the frosh offense and was followed by Yogi Poteet with 18 and Jim Hudock who had 16.

Bullis Loses, 63-55

Against Bullis in the final game, Walsh was again the leading scorer for the Tar Babies, this time he had 21. The final score of 63-55 does not tell the entire story of how the Carolina freshmen dominated play. The first string built up a large margin in the second half before Quigg substituted another unit into play.

The main problem for the Tar Babies tonight will be keeping Wolflet center John Key under control. In their last meeting Key dumped in 21 points in addition to hauling down numerous rebounds. With Key, forward Russ Marvel and guard George Finnegan form most of the State scoring potential.

Heels Hold Second In Poll; Ky. First

(AP) — College basketball's leading teams ended their mid-season lull and resumed the full time business of beating one another's ears off last week. The results brought only one change in the top 10 rankings, but led the experts to scatter their votes a bit more than usual.

It was Kentucky on top again by a comfortable margin over North Carolina with the order of the leaders unchanged until seventh place was reached. St. John's of Brooklyn dropped out of that spot after losing two games on a road trip. Michigan State and Bradley moved up to close the gap and St. Louis, winner over St. John's, took over ninth place.

Kentucky's Wildcats rolled over three Southeastern Conference opponents last week to build their season record of 17 victories in 18 games. Kentucky scored a total of 296 points against Georgia Tech, Georgia and Florida to 171 for the combined opposition.

Those performances impressed the 104 sports writers and broadcasters casting ballots in the weekly Associated Press poll to the extent that 42 listed Kentucky first. But others scattered their votes so widely that the Wildcats' point total dropped to 890, considerably below last week's figure.

The same thing happened to second place North Carolina, which drew 22 first place votes and 802 points. Kentucky's 58-point margin of a week ago stretched to 88 points. Kansas State, in third place, barely nosed out undefeated Auburn, 619 to 610.

AP POLL

1.	Kentucky (42) 17-1	890
2.	North Carolina (22) 12-1	802

5.	Cincinnati (2) 13-2	579
6.	N. C. State 14-2	575
7.	Michigan State (3) 11-2	263
8.	Bradley 14-2	281
9.	St. Louis (3) 13-2	211
10.	West Virginia (1) 16-3	174

With two easy weekend ACC victories under its belt, Carolina gets down to serious business this week with two big games on tap—Maryland here Wednesday and at Duke Friday.

While the Tar Heels didn't look especially sharp against either Clemson or South Carolina, they managed to win without much trouble. The long lay-off from exams showed markedly in their play, however, and they must get back into trim soon or risk a possible defeat.

Currently the Carolinians sit at the pinnacle of the heap in the two-team ACC flag chase, and unless the unforeseen happens the upcoming Carolina-State rematch in Chapel Hill will decide who gets top seeding in the conference tournament.

Perhaps the brightest spot in the Charlotte round-robin was soph Doug Moe, who was high man both nights. Moe hit 22 against Clemson and poured in 17 against South Carolina.

Films were taken of the two coliseum games and the team will doubtlessly spend many engrossing hours going over mistakes and good plays.

Those two games, played almost 200 miles away from Chapel Hill, actually belonged to the students. The corresponding number of contests should be played here each year, but we have Woollen Gym, thus the team plays where more people can see them.

★ ★ ★

The main purpose this weekend served was to get the subs into the game and get a little experience under their belts. Ray Stanley Danny Lotz, Lou Brown, and Hugh Donahue all saw plenty of action and can be called on for help whenever and wherever its needed.

Donahue, the 6-8 soph who was held out the first semester, saw his first action in the double bill. He may come on as the Tar Heels' sixth man; he has the ability.

With State reserve stars Stan Niewerowski and Mark Reiner mysteriously dropping out of school for no apparent reason, the Pack has been considerably weakened on the bench. Reiner had seen plenty of action, he even started a few games. Now State has a solid first five, but after that the pickings are a little slim.

Duke's phenomenal sophs are kicking up dust all over the place over in Durham. The Devils in their last two outings have bested Maryland and Pitt. Lanky Blue Devil Carrol Youngkin even outscored Pitt's all-American Don Hennon Saturday by 35-31 as Duke won it going away. Come tournamemnt time, and somebody better watch out. The Dukes are now 8-8 overall.

Maryland, the defending ACC champion, has third place to itself right now. The Terps have a 4-3 league record, but overall they post only a disappointing 6-7 mark. It would seem that the Terrapins missed Nick Davis and Co. more than anyone figured when the champs graduated last spring. Maryland's best effort of the season came against number 1 ranked Kentucky when the Terps pushed them to the limit before booting the affair in the closing seconds.

The Tar Babies, looking tougher every game, ran through the Tri-State Invitational Tournament in Washington over the weekend like they owned the district. In the finals they whipped Bullis Prep, a squad that entered the game with a 9-0 record.

Don Walsh, our nomination as the ACC's next Lou Pucillo, clicked for 20 and 21 points and gained the tournament's Most Valuable Player award.

Everything gets back into gear in the field of athletics this week after a two-week break for exams. The basketball, wrestling, and swimming teams will all be back in action sometime this week.

Malinovsky Declares U. S. Arms 'Outdated'

MOSCOW — (AP) — Marshall Rodion Malinovsky declared yesterday the West's nuclear weapons are outdated by long range sharpshooting Soviet ballistic missiles that no anti-aircraft defense can stop.

"Your arms are too short, gentlemen," The Soviet defense minister warned the Western powers in a speech before the 21st Congress of the Soviet Communist Party.

The west wants to unleash war with nuclear weapons, he asserted, "But this is an outdated means."

"We have more perfected weapons, ballistic rockets—long, middle and close range—that can carry their hydrogen charges to any point on earth . . . To the very point, for they are very accurate."

(In Washington, Secretary of Defense Neil H. McElroy and Gen. Nathan F. Twining, chairman of the joint chiefs of staff, said they did not believe the claim to pinpoint accuracy. McElroy said he was not perturbed by Malinovsky's speech, adding: "It seems to me like a normal kind of statement in a war of nerves . .. " The secretary said the Russians have developed a more powerful thrust for rockets, but as for ICBMS "We have enough thrust to send them 5,500 miles—or into Russia.")

Virginia School Integration Continues On Amicable Basis

RICHMOND, Va., — (AP) — Negro and white children paraded to school yesterday without major incident on the second day of racial integration in Norfolk and Arlington County. They studied amicably side by side.

Enrollment at Norfolk's integrated schools jumped nearly 500 over Monday. The worries of parents apparently were diminishing.

But wary school officials and watchful police in both Norfolk and Arlington were unconvinced the dangers of trouble and disturbance were over in a state that submitted unwillingly to federal court mandates for integration.

In diimnished numbers, and with little to do but look on, police still stood guard yesterday at three senior and three junior high schools in Norfolk and at Stratford Junior High in Arlington.

The school day began in both communities — 200 miles apart — without a hitch. No demonstration, no pickets, no violence — just a bit of hooting about "The Niggers" from white youngsters at Norfolk's Norview High.

Ray E. Reid, Arlington school superintendent, said he thinks there still could be trouble and added:

"I don't think we can take too many precautions."

A veteran policeman inquired: "Who knows what will happen when we leave?"

Both the lights and police were kept on again Monday night at Stratford, a modern yellow brick building in a prosperous Washington suburb.

Alexandria, another Virginia community a few miles away, will learn in a day or two whether a federal court will decree admission of 14 Negroes to its public school system.

Titan Missile Fails During Launching

CAPE CANAVERAL, FLA, — (AP)— The Air Force's powerful new Titan ICBM belched fire for a split second, but failed to fly on its second launching attempt.

It was the second time in six weeks that the bullet shaped missile, potentially the nation's mightiest war rocket, fizzled on the launching pad on the first attempt at launching.

A huge ball of orange flame flashed from the base of the 90-foot missile at 4:27 p.m., Eastern Standard Time. When the fire sputtered out a second later the test announcer reported that automatic engine cutoff had occurred.

The Air Force announced several minutes later that "a malfunction occurred causing the engine to be automatically cut off while the mis-

'59 Campus Chest Has $3,000 As Top Goal

The 1959 Campus Chest drive will be held March 1-7 with a goal of $3,060 for the three participating agencies.

Doug Kellam, chairman of the drive, said yesterday the $3,000 goal is higher than last year's goal by $1,000 and the highest in recent years.

The three agencies to be benefited are: World University Service, Goettingen scholarships for North Carolina students and the Class for Mentally Retarded Children in Orange County.

These agencies were selected by the Campus Chest Board, Miss Kellam said, because they contribute to the well being of the world, college and community.

The Board customarily includes only three agencies in the budget, she said, but varies the three each year. This year the Board considered a possible 15 agencies before narrowing down to the three selected, she said.

The allocation in the budget for each agency is: 40 per cent ($1,200) for the World University Service, 40 per cent ($1,200) for the Goettingen scholarships and 20 per cent ($600) for the Class of Mentally Retarded Children.

The World University Service aids students over the world in such ways as buying textbooks, providing medical supplies and food. This service may also initiate action in academic areas and then let another agency, as the government, take over.

Goettingen scholarships allow Carolina students to attend the Goettingen University in Germany for one year. In addition, some help is given toward the transportation expenses of German scholars who come here under an exchange policy wih the German university.

The Board will also support the mentally retarded children of this county, subject to the approval of the Orange County Board of Education.

The one county class for retarded children is held in Hillsboro High School. Inadequate facilities for the class were called to the attention of the Campus Chest Board, Miss Kellam commented.

The Board has been divided into three sections for the one-week drive. The Solicititions Committee will be in charge of making contacts over the campus for support of the drive. Information of the agencies will be handled by the Publications Committee. The third section of the Board is the Special Projects Committee, which will use various means to draw attention to the drive.

Appointment of the chairman is made the spring prior to the drive by the student body president.

Phone Damage Is Topic For IDC

The recent outbreak of telephones being torn from dormitory walls will be discussed at tonight's meeting of the Interdormitory Council.

Rudy Edwards, IDC president, said a man from the telephone office will be present to speak to the council. A short discussion of how the phones can be prevented from being torn from the walls will follow the talk.

Plans, rules, receptions and information for the upcoming sweetheart dances will be released at the meeting.

Also to be discussed is the Coed Visiting Agreement. A report on the success of the agreement will be presented.

An announcement of dorm social fees, the council's budget for the coming year and a questionaire from from the Drinking Committee are among the other matters to come before the group.

Peabody Hall Facelifting Scheduled

Construction underway at the School of Education's building, Peabody Hall, will give the building an entirely new look by May of 1960.

The construction will wrap around Peabody on the west and north. The old building will be visable only from the back of the present location.

J. S. Benett, director of operations, said yesterday the school has not been enlarged in the past 35 or 40 years.

"The new construction will make the building twice its present size and is scheduled to be completed by May 1960."

A 1957 State Legislature appropriation of $865,000 has made the enlargement possible.

Voters In Orange County Approve Legal Control

By RON SHUMATE

Orange County is "wet."

The voting by precincts is as follows: (the vote for the ABC stores is listed first): Chapel Hill No. 1, 295-74; Chapel Hill No.2, 300-105; Chapel Hill No. 3, 451-107; Chapel Hill No. 4, 347-194; Chapel Hill No. 5, 440-137; Carrboro, 289-349.

Hillsboro, 652-507; Efland, 77-146; Cheek's Crossing, 63-125; Cedar Grove, 63-80; Tolar's, 35-64; St. Mary's 13-62; Caldwell, 34-67; University, 72-43; White Cross, 39-121; Rock Springs, 25-171; Carr, 69-20; Patterson, 30-26; and Cole's Store, 25-87.

The total number of votes cast was 5,713. The number of voters in the county is approximately 18,000.

In Chapel Hill the number of votes cast was 2,450. Out of this number 1,833 were for ABC, and 617 were against.

The last ABC election was held on Friday, September 9, 1938. At that time a total of 3,395 voters went to the polls. Legal control was defeated by a total of 457 votes, with 1,926 voting against it while 1,496 were for it.

Most of the precincts over the county voted the same way in Tuesday's election as they did in 1928. Of the 19 precincts, nine voted for legal control. In the 1938 vote five of 15 precincts voted for ABC stores.

B. B. Sparrow, co-chairman of the county's anti-ABC forces, said "My cause is right and does not have to be propped up with names or votes. It is hard to counteract 26 years of false propaganda in one week. At least we have had an opportunity to present some of the true facts about so-called "control" to many citizens in Orange County. I would like to express my appreciation for the support given by so many people."

The chairman of the Orange County Citizens for Legal Control, Orville Campbell, said "We are very happy that the people have decided in favor of ABC and we feel that the margin of 825 votes is convincing proof that the majority of our citizens are in favor of legal control, over the present system."

"All citizens have a moral obligation to see that alcoholic beverages are used moderately," Campbell said. "The local law enforcement officers should be stricter than ever before in all cases dealing with bootleggers.

Crane Gets Editorship Of 'Spectrum

Spectrum Magazine has a new editor. He is Ted Crane, who succeeds Dennis Parks, a January graduate.

Crane, a member of the Spectrum Editorial Board last semester, was named to the editorship last month. He is a graduate student at UNC, majoring in classics.

Another new staff member of Spectrum is Jim Jordan, art editor. Jordan replaces Jo Trupp. Spectrum's policy is to select a new art editor with each issue.

The next issue of Spectrum will be bigger and more copies will be printed, Hodges said yesterday. The deadline for art and manuscripts for the next issue is March 12.

Directors' Annual Meet Starts Today

The Board of Directors of the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Research Foundation will hold its 13th annual meeting at the UNC School of Pharmacy today.

A 12:15 luncheon will be held at the UNC Monogram Club for the directors, UNC officials and members of the pharmacy faculty. The business session begins at the School of Pharmacy at 1:45 p.m.

The organization was founded in 1946 by the pharmacists of North Carolina through the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Association. The purpose of the foundation is to promote pharmaceutical service to the State and the South through the UNC School of Pharmacy.

Dr. E. A. Brecht, dean of the UNC School of Pharmacy and secretary of the foundation, said the organization had one of its best years during 1958.

Dr. Brecht reported that during the 12 years of the organization's existence, a total of $276,000 had been received. Of this, some $68,000 had been expended by the School of Pharmacy for scholarships and fellowships, research supplies, special equipment, library materials and other needs of the Pharmacy School.

At the present time the foundation has assets totaling $198,000. Of this sum $167,000 is in endowments and the remainder, $31,000, is in expendable funds.

Class Ring Orders Open For Juniors

Juniors (and seniors) may order class rings today and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Y Building.

Sponsoring the ring sale is the Order of the Grail, who will assist a representative of the Balfour Company in taking orders.

Danny Lotz, ring sale chairman for the Grail, said the rings are mailed to students around eight weeks after the orders are made.

Goettingen Scholarship Applications Available

Interested in studying for a year at a German University? Then a Goettingen Scholarship might be the answer. Goettingen Scholarship applications for interested students may be secured from Sam Magill, assistant dean of student affairs, YMCA; or Larkin Kirkman, 415 Joyner.

Undergraduates at UNC who would plan to return for an additional year here after spending the year in Germany are eligible for a scholarship.

Applicants will be selected on the basis of the application forms and an interview which will be held sometime in February. Some personal knowledge of German would be desirable.

Interviews

Today from 2 to 5 p.m. interviews will be held for prospective members of the Carolina Symposium General Committee.

Al Goldsmith, chairman of the Symposium's Interim Committee, said that any student interested in working with the Symposium may be interviewed by present committee members in the Grail Room.

An interviewing session was also held yesterday.

Approximately 15 people will be named to the Symposium General Committee.

'Dizzy' Gillespie Features Hot Trumpet, Hats, Comedy

DIZZY GILLESPIE
. . . play a hot trumpet

Strange hats, garbled introductions and humorous singing is what UNC students can expect from John Birks "Dizzy" Gillespie, who will appear here for the Winter Germans concert Saturday, Feb. 14, in Memorial Hall at 3 p.m.

Other artists who will appear on the Germans concert program include Kai Winding and his orchestra and vocalist Chris Conner.

When Gillespie appears here, his performance will be the first on this campus and one of few in the South.

In the late 1930s and early '40s, he began on his career with performances with such well known orchestras and soloists as Cab Calloway, Ella Fitzgerald, Benny Carter and Duke Ellington. His rise in popularity came in 1944 when he joined Billy Eckstine. The next year Gillespie organized his own band.

Although his first band folded the same year it was organized, Gillespie started another band in 1950.

'Y' Committee Aids Students Going Abroad

It takes a lot of planning to go abroad, and the YMCA Seminar Committee has announced a series of 14 weekly meetings this spring to help prepare students for seminars abroad this summer.

Each week's meeting will give information for a particular European country. The sessions, led by faculty advisers who are experts on their particular countries, will deal with several problems of American tourists in Europe—what to wear and take.

Although the meetings are designed especially for students going abroad, anyone may attend them.

There will be an organization meeting today at 4.30 p.m. in the Library Assembly room to determine the time and agenda for the discussions.

Books Go Cheap In Sale

Only a nickel might buy a valuable book when the Library puts 10,000-12,000 technical books on sale Feb. 9-11.

The price of these books will range from a nickle to fifty cents. The reason for the low price is that the Library wants to clear out duplicat copies of the more technical books.

Conducting the sale in the Smoking Room of he Library will be members of the Graduate Club. Proceeds from the sale will be used to purchase furniture for the graduate study in the stacks.

Most of the books on sale are not available in book stores. The books are reported to be in good condition, as well as excellent buys.

RAIN PREDICTED, BUT —

Cold Is Slowly Leaving

Freezing rain brought out strange clothing combinations yesterday as students attempted to keep warm and dry all at once.

It all started, according to the weatherman, when a cold front moved into North Carolina bringing with it rain that seemed undecided whether to remain just rain or turn into sleet.

BRR . . . — Yesterday was really cold as temperatures stayed below freezing until early afternoon while a cold, cold rain coated trees and shrubbery with a coating of ice. Better weather is predicted — at least warmer — for today. photo by Bill Brinkhous

The result: a nasty combination of both. Fortunately for motorists and students the concrete, asphalt and brick walks and roads held the heat from yesterday enough to resist being covered with ice. Trees, radio aerials, and windshields were not so fortunate.

However, according to an Associated Press weather advisory yesterday, prospects for better—at least warmer—weather were looking up. At 2 p.m. temperatures had managed to climb above freezing and a warming trend was underway.

Predictions for today are for slowly warming weather with intermittent rain throughout the day.

The AP advisory adds the cheery note that the rising temperatures mean temperatures "considerably" warmer than those of yesterday.

Still wet, but at least warmer.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Nancy Carole Smathers, Barbara Burkhardt, Jane Elizabeth Moore, Stephen Winston Grasman, James Alexander Turner, Frederick Charles Platt, Thomas Evan Fletcher, Everett Gordon Hassell, James Arthur Ryder, Oren Reid Manning and Lloyd Benton Smith.

Honor Council Tries Five — Four Guilty

Hugh Patterson, chairman, reported that the not guilty case involved a boy who entered a classroom building office late at night. The decision of not guilty was rendered because the door had been left open.

Of the two cases involving plagiarism, one student was given an official reprimand and the other was placed on probation.

Two other students were tried for breaking into a coca-cola machine in the School of Medicine. Both students were found guilty. One was placed on probation and the other was suspended.

Administration Probe?

State newspapers sometimes pick up items such as cheating and gambling on the University campus and use it as the charger to mount a giant crusade for administrative crackdown.

An instance of this was the editorial in The Raleigh Times Monday night, which pointed out that the administration should take action on the cheating that went on during exams.

What the editorialist did not know was that the administration was working with student officials to get to the bottom of the matter, and that both were running into a small stone wall.

It is strange that there is not a greater realization that whether the problem of honor is handled by administrators or students, cheating will still go on — to one degree or another. There are usually some people who can not resist temptation. Perhaps the University could take precautionary measures in insisting that all examinations be centrally printed and be kept in a central guarded location, and yet, the problem of cheating would not be solved.

In other words, in one very real sense neither an honor system nor a proctor system, nor even a guard in every building is a workable practical arrangement.

Indeed, the only workable practical arrangement is no system. By putting individual class standards on an absolute basis according to the individual instructor, those who cheat or who conspire to cheat will not be able to endanger the futures of others students, and at the same time he would be cheating himself and himself alone.

The difficulty in cheating lies not with the system of enforcement, but with the system of education. If one can stimulate students to form their own values and to compete not for grades or jobs, but for achievement up to the extent of his individual ability, there might be an opportunity to correct the situation. As it is, the problem will not be resolved.

Secrecy

It is always a difficult thing to draw the line between what is confidential and what is open to the public. In campus judicial cases, this job becomes more difficult.

These offices are among the highest elective posts on the campus, and the campus deserves a chance to see the functions of the judicial, the cases and facts that come up under the judicial system, the fairness of the verdict, and the handling of judicial details and procedures. Indeed, they have a right to know some of the issues that will confront the Student Legislature in the form of revision, and some of the concepts that they will be called upon to decide in Spring elections.

They obviously should not be given the identity of defendants unless the defendants so wish, in order that these defendants may live without stigma in a society that is a microcosm of the democratic world.

Yet, there has been a resistance to give the facts until now, and this resistance is one example of an overly paternalistic attitude that exists among many leaders, not only judicial. The public has a right to know. This much — the facts — the judicial and other officers have an obligation to give them.

Space Holdup

One of the basic holdbacks in our government's changeover from liquid fueled missiles to solid fueled missiles is the expansive amount of gasseous air in the present Congress. —F. C.

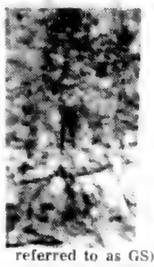
Out Of Joint

March Wind

One of the more sparkling lecturers on this campus is, without a doubt, the infinitely urbane Dean Godfrey. An admirer of his has recently pointed out that the Dean is "a rotund palm tree standing tall in the middle of the Sahara."

Just before the end of his last semester Godfrey was on the lecture platform, musing in his droll way about the English Chartists and the hysteria these radicals of the 19th century caused. But, like Neil Bass vanishing into limbo, the Chartists vanished from the scene. "The hysteria of one generation," said the Dean, "Is the history of the next. Say, that's pretty good. I hope you all got that phrase down in your notes."



This little triumph reminded Godfrey of an earlier epigrammatic foray. He favored the class with Godfrey's Historical Law: "Everything comes from Everything."

I immediately turned around in my seat and asked one of the graduate students to explicate Godfrey's Law. The graduate student (hereinafter referred to as GS) is presently working on his dissertation: "Trench Mouth in Orange County, 1771-1780."

The GS said that Godfrey's Law, though profound, was surprisingly simple. "In fact," said the GS, "I've been working along similar lines for quite some time now.

"To begin with, you must realize that the repudiation of the Bryan-Chamorro Treaty compounded the dipsasterous 7th Crusade against Berlin in 1945 by Robespierre."

"It's all tied in with the bank panic of 1066, caused by Mongolian hordes sweeping in to engulf the Bishop of Hippo at Sarajevo.

"You see, when the Mongols came there was a crisis of confidence, and Dred Scott withdrew his account, thus forcing Baron Rothschild and Hideki Tojo into bankruptcy during the embargo of the Middle Period at Berchtesgarden while the Thermidorean Reaction raged against the Holy Alliance."

I still looked blank and uncomprehending.

"I'm rather proud of these intricate formulations," said the GS. "But, of course, I can't claim sole credit. No indeed! Like most of the 'yoots' (a Max Shulman phrase), I came to UNC hungry for the meaning of history. Diligently, I applied myself. I sat at the feet of great professors, soaking up wisdom. And now, having survived the rigors of Social Science I and Social Science 2 (repeated endlessly under a variety of interesting course descriptions), I am ready at long last to communicate the exctiement, the grandeur, the glamor and the glory of HISTORY to those underprivileged young men and women who hail from Charley Justice's home town, Asheville. The Bishop of Hippo, incidentally, was not engulfed at Asheville. The Bishop of Hippo was engulfed at Sarajevo. Is that perfectly clear?"

It was all clear, perfectly clear. The GS, having finished his oration, ran away screaming to Lenoir and a tranquilizer with his morning cup of coffee.

When Good Dean Godfrey said that "everything comes from everything," he had (as is his wont) ye oulde tongue in ye olde cheek. But he was satirizing a powerful trend among contemporary historians — a trend that says there is no meaning in history and even to search for meaning is futile and preposterous. To search for meaning is to speculate, and to speculate is to be "unscientific."

Well, to go with Godfrey's Law, we now can add March Wind's Law: "Even the wrong meaning is better than no meaning." I think this is what the GS was driving at. Somebody, somewhere, has to make some kind of sense out of the enormous mountains of data piled up by generations of historical laborers. Even the wrong sense is better than no sense. Better wrong sense, than nonsense.

New York And The Negro

Max Ascoli

Ever since the beginning of Southern evasion or defiance of the Supreme Court decisions on the desegregation of the schools, those of us in the North who advocated compliance could not help feeling that their civic virtue was neither costly nor risky. Or at least, to avoid hiding behind the editorial "we," I felt keenly and painfully embarrassed by the good fortune of being a New Yorker.

One thing, however, must be said immediately: in New York outraged racial feeling is the sad privilege of the Negroes. Impelled by old and legitimate resentments, or by ignorance and misery, or by the ranting of demagegues, the Negroes can be driven into a united front against the whites. But anything like the White Citizens' Councils is not even remotely conceivable here in New York.

There are still evil habits and mean practices of discrimination that have been somehow blunted but not erased by the law. But there is no deliberate, organized will to keep the Negroes down, or, as it sometimes is said by Southerners, in their place. No amount of Negro anger could ever create such a will. Rather, whenever Negro anger makes itself felt, it creates a shock and then a sense among white people that varies from self-consciousness to shame. Again I will not say in the "white" community, for there is no such thing.

There is no such thing because New York is too big, it has had to assimilate too many different kinds and races of peoples. This assimilation, which has been made largely possible by the fact that people have the right to vote, is usually described by the trite expression "melting pot"—a term that may have some meaning only if we remember that there have been huge differentials in the rate at which the melting of the various groups has proceeded. Ours is a society of equals in the sense that the chance of self-improvement is open to all those who can overcome the varying handicaps of the groups to which they belong.

The Negroes in New York are determined to have their handicaps reduced. Yet in the present crisis—which is largely centered, as in the case of the Negroes throughout the rest of the country, on equality of education—it must be remembered that the so-called Negro community is an extraordinarily American community, composed of a very large number of different types and strains. Resentment over the various handicaps imposed on the Negroes may weld them together. But in the process the demagogues those professionals in fomenting passions, tend to acquire the upper hand. This inevitably is registered and resented by the more enlightened and responsible Negroes. With those men, we who happen to be white and who are their friends must not lose contact. Indeed, we must not let our friendship be even slightly weakened—even when they are suspicious of us and doubt our good will.

We who are white can well afford being reasonable; but we must also be firm, never losing sight of the fact that conflict between honestly held ideas is nothing but the test of friendship. So, for instance, we can maintain—or at least I do—that while the standards of education in the predominantly Negro schools, as in all the city's public schools, must be radically and steadily improved, it is absurd and self-defeating to rely too heavily on the schools for the elimination of the abuses under which the Negroes have suffered. Certainly it is not by courtroom battles, or by keeping children away from schools, that education for the Negroes can be improved.

This means that the causes of the present unrest must be dealt with decisively by our public officials and by all responsible men, Negro or white, in positions of authority. No matter what some overexcited Negro leaders may say, New York is not Little Rock—Nelson Rockefeller and Robert Wagner have no more in common with Orval Faubus than with Anastas Mikoyan. The present crisis can be, and I do believe must be, weathered. Then others will come. But if we are honest with each other, Negro and white, New York now and in the future can set an example for the whole nation.

"Well, That Takes Care Of That"

Neither Black Nor White... Mostly Shades Of Grey

Norman B. Smith

Adventure seems hard to come by when one lives in an automatic society that wakes up by electric alarm (not too early) in the morning, eats a packaged, vitamin-infused, almost pre-digested breakfast, and begins another day of prescribed work, prescribed talk, — yes, it reaches the point of prescribed thought.

Adventure doesn't have to mean exploring some far-off land and returning to fill in blank spaces on a map with the knowledge you have acquired, or leading a great military campaign in which thousands are shot and thousands more sicken or starve to death, doesn't have to mean creating a parallel to some trite Zane Grey, True Magazine, Tom Swift, or Zorro episode of false suspense, hero image transfer, and poetic justice.

Adventure is simple to achieve if you turn aside from your planned well-marked path of existence, if you sacrifice a few hours of security, and go . . .

He stood by the side of the road not knowing how nor when, nor even if he would get to Nashville, six hundred miles away.

The banker, properly in grey double-breasted suit and vest and cigar-scented heavy, black Odlsmobile, talked with animation about football as portly former football stars do who can now not run but only watch and help raise funds for new stadiums. But it was a mistake for him (the rider) to bring up the subject of integration because the banker had been raised among nigras (the proper aristocratic coastal plains terminology: not Negroes — that is Yankee, nor niggers — that is poor white trash), he had played with them and he knew them well, well enough to know that they were good enough in their place but that the Supreme Court was being neither legal nor sensible in attempting to put them in white schools.

A burly workman in sour-smelling work clothes told him that he had been home with his wife every night that week and now that it was Friday night he was going to "go out and find some strange."

Two hotrodders with gutted muffler kept the interior lighs on all the while he was with them, and one of them kept a hand on a jacket pocket that had a menacing bulge. It seemed to him that they were on the defensive because they thought that average honesty must be no greater than their own. He wisely kept both hands visible and unmoving.

On the dark, curving mountain road the driver's companion passed out, and he wondered if the driver would as they careened around corners that jutted over valleys, he deph of which he could not judge in the darkness. But the driver stayed awake, telling him how much he and the companion were enjoying their first week home after duty in Korea. Some difference here, he said, where he could drink all he could hold: in Korea he would take most of his month's pay, buy up as many of the other soldier's one-can-per-month beer ration at five dollars a can as he could and mix it with shave lotion and antiseptic so that for two days out of every thirty he could forget about the dreary, cold surroundings and home so far away.

A young patrolman stopped the tired Army sergeant who had left Baltimore early that morning, stopped him for going 65 and escorted them to a lightless, ramshackle country store. A bearded, bleary-eyed justice of the peace came to the door after repeated loud knocking, led them over to a cluttered, dirty desk in a corner of the almost stockless store, and wrote the receipt for a $12 bond which would suffice as fine as well as bond because neither the justice nor the patrolman knew nor cared when the trial would be as long as they each got their half of it.

The Baptist preacher was on his way to a revival. Maybe it was because just the two of them were with no one else there to brand them heretical or to show off their zeal to, because it was in those hours between the beginning of the new day on the clock and the beginning of the new day on the horizon when one can make quiet confidences, that and the smooth rhythm of his traveling with such simple steadiness over a road that they all alone possessed at that hour, passing by blurred, darkened, unidentifiable objects on the side of the highway with such consistency that a calming, geometric pattern seemed to be formed. Maybe these things allowed the two of them to reach as close a rappor in discussing religious philosophy as could any two Dominicans, cloistered, life-long inhabitants of some isolated monestary. The one, a Baptist clergyman, and the other, a Unitarian layman, whose professed doctrines differed so greatly that had it been waking hours and had there been other people, surely he former would have thought the latter a borderline atheist and the latter would have called the former an unenlightened, dogmatic, bigoted literalist.

The below-freezing Virginia hill country air made his whole (overcoatless) body violently shiver, so he began to walk to keep warm. For ten miles he walked out of the night, through the dawn, and into the daylight. No cars came, but there had been one recently because he saw two dogs, eyes beginning to glaze over the light of the moon, limbs stiffening in the chill air, blood congealing on the tomb-cold concrete, hair accumulating particles of frost — two dogs whose orgy intended pre-dawn love chase had ended in sudden death. Shocks of corn stalks grew visible against the hilly horizon as a faint, unnatural glimmer of the dawn timidly began to erase Orion and Cassiopea's Chair on the eastern sky. Soon chicken feed sack calico curtains parted behind smudgy windows of small farmhouses as wives who had gotten up to set fires in wood stoves heard measured footsteps on the road outside.

"My name is Fred Wood. If you are ever in Clayville again, come to see me. I'll show you my farm, and the wife will cook you up some country ham with grits and red-eye gravy," said the man who had no real reason to say this to the stranger he had met only an hour ago.

Then there was Nashville and the end of it — the end of an adventure. He felt so keenly at the time it was adventure, but he waited for months, and he thoughts of all those things kept returning, churning, recalling him to that afternoon and night and morning when he escaped (not escaped: evaded) that planned existence of automatic, proper response to rules (formal and understood) that the community imposes on its inmates, and he knows now after four months that it was true adventure.

A Letter

Editor:

Mr. Wolff deserves great credit for his review of "The Defiant Ones" in the January 7 Tar Heel. It is good to know that the tolerance and humanitarianism revealed in this inspiring film are reflected in the University community. Many of our townspeople and students were not as fortunate as Mr. Wolff — they were unable to see the picture because they are Negroes. The idea that true "brotherhood" can be attained only when people are recognized as individuals is a point that Negroes need to be reminded of no less than whites, and as Mr. Wolff says, ". . . this is a movie which all Americans would do well to see; particularly those Americans who are supposedly in the process of examining their convictions in the hope of building a better world."

Mr. Wolff is right, and it is rewarding to know that Hollywood is still capable of producing pictures which evoke such statements. It will be even better when all Americans have the opportunity to see these significant social documents of our times.

Ernie Kovacs is one of the most delightful people whose face ever crossed the flickering screen. Exuding charm, humor, and warmth, he is the perfect television talent. On Monday night's "Desilu Playhouse" he was at his very disarming best in a whimsical offering entitled "Symbol of Authority."

The play dealt with a proof reader in a printing house, the perfect prototype of the Caspar Milquetoast — Walter Mitty image, who lives his own humdrum little existence and never tells the beautiful widow with whom he works of his love for her. When he is forced into the hospital by appendicitis he becomes smiitten with doctors and the kindness which they show him. On one of his holidays, as he wanders aimlessly around the city he sees a stethoscope in a pawn shop and buys it. On his first day at work he goes to the hospital to visit his friend and ex-wardmate, but finds that because he has not come during visiting hours he will have to get special permission from the desk. As he walks to the desk he unconsciously pulls the stethoscope from his pocket and is quite surprised when the nurse, seeing the stethoscope, tells him to "go right on up, doctor." This is the big moment in his life.

From then on he enters the hospital every Saturday, armed with his pawn shop stethoscope, pacing up and down the halls, cheerily greeting everyone who passes him and stopping in on patients to check their charts, give a word of encouragement, do a small favor. Soon he becomes a beloved part of hospital life, despite the fact that no one knows his name.

Finally he is apprehended. Two interns riding in an elevator with him ask for his mediation in an argument they are having about a medical technicality. When he is dumbfounded they get suspicious and call the police. Kovacs realizes he is being chased and tries to elude his pursuers, but to no avail. They catch him and question him about his motives — narcotics? theft? medicines? They cannot get an answer and it is only when the girl from the office, played by Jean Hagen, comes to affirm his identity and character that he is set free, but not until the police officer confiscates his precious stethoscope. Broken-hearted, Kovacs starts to leave the hospital, but is continually stopped by people thanking him for the small kindnesses he has done them. Jean Hagen, following behind, hears all this and realizes that he is much more the man than he thinks, and accepts his offer of marriage.

The point, of course, is very simple: one needs more than a badge of authority to hold the true position of that authority. The kind-hearted little man, by giving his heart and time to the forgotten people in the hospital, had done as much for them as any real doctor. And he had also proved to himself that he was as much a man as any other and that he needed no badge to mark himself from the crowd as a person of real worth and value to the community.

This show was one of the many delightful contributions the Desilu Playhouse has made to Monday night viewing, and Monday night viewing has long needed a shot in the arm. It was also further proof that, although live telecasting has many advantages over film, a kinescoped show also can convey the charm and warmth of human emotions and actions.

Television in the next few months should be no less interesting and entertaining than it has been recently (for whatever that statement is worth). The Evening With Fred Astaire show, perhaps the best single show run last fall, will be re-broadcast February eleventh and anyone who missed it would be foolish to miss is a second itme. The Green Pastures, one of the best offerings of recent years, will also be re-broadcast, this on March 23. Keep it in mind.

"The Garry Moore Show," easily one of the two best variety and comedy shows on the air (have you seen Durward Kirby as Arthur Murry?) has given time to the Kingston Trio, Alfred Drake, and Gordon and Shiela MacRae all in the last two weeks. All, of course, are delightful and are tops. Steve Allen's February first show might have been the funniest he's ever done. Louis Nye, Tom Poston, and Don Knotts are the three funniest men in the world, or so a lot of people are saying. And "Maverick" — well, some of us think that it's the best television show around, and that no one is more entertaining than James Garner. More realistically, the adaptation of Sheridan's "The Rivals" two weeks ago was very clever, and last week's "Duel at Sundown," a little more active than the average Garner show, was further humorous evidence that Bret Maverick is the most honest coward who ever wore a black suit and a ruffled shirt.

Since this is a new slant for "Postscript," a lot of people haev been asking your reviewer what shows he likes best, and which ones will get consistently good reviews from him. Here, then, is one man's award list, which we shall call "The 1957 Arthur Winners:"

Best variety show — "The Steve Allen Show;" Best musical show — none eixsts; Best Dramatic Series — "Playhouse 90;" Best Action Series — "Maverick;" Best Comedy Series—"Maverick" (that's right); Best Comedian — Red Skelton; Best Humorist — Mort Sahl (and let's have more of; him); Best Serious Actor — Art Carney; Best Musical Background — "Peter Gunn," even though it's not very good jazz; Best Actress — nine in sight, Best Sports Series — NHL Hockey; Worst Announcer — Jimmy Powers; Worst Show — "Arthur Murray Party;" Second Worst Show — "Arthur Godfrey Time;" Your Reviewer's favorite was to spend an hour — watching "Maverick."

There are a lot of good serious shows on television, and none of these have been taken into consideration above, because this is the list of a person who watches television for very simple reasons — no matter, how bad it can be, there are a lot of good laughs and a lot of very very good dramatic shows. And they are the things this column is concerned with.

"It is written very frequently overseas that the U. S. Navy is capable of landing troops at any point on our coast," Malinovsky said.

"It appears to me that it would be a good thing for those overseas to give a thought about the vulnerability of their own coast."

The marshal told the Congress:

"If war is imposed on the U. S. S. R the rocket weapons will constitute the fighting force, capable of accomplishing the most important tasks in the air, on land and sea . . .

"We are grateful to our scientists, engineers and workers who have armed our army with a whole series of intercontinental, continental and other rockets of long, medium and short range.

"Thanks to the care of the party our armed forces in their technical equipment and training are entirely equal to present day requirements.

"We are not contemplating attacking anybody, but we have all the means of inflicting retaliatory blows on aggressors, no matter where they are, in order to end any desire on their part to attack."

His report on the military situation shared attention in the congress with fresh criticism of downgraded Soviet leaders. There were these developments:

1. Malinovsky himself attacked his predecessor, Marshal Georgi Zhukov, the World War II hero who was dropped as Defense Minister in October 1957. He said the Party's Central Committee had discovered "Zhukov's intention to divorce the army from the party and gave a timely rebuke to this resurrected Napoleon."

2. Deputy Premier Frol R. Kozlov accused the antiparty group of criminal activity—a pointer that they could be brought to trial. Charter members of that group, shifted over the last 18 months to minor jobs, are former Premiers Georgi Malenkov, Nikolai Bulganin and V. M. Molotov, Former Deputy Premier Lazar Kaganovich and former Foreign Minister Dmitri Shepilov.

3. Former Deputy Premier Mikhail G. Pervukhin, Soviet ambassador to East Germany, admitted he joined the antiparty group in attacking Khrushchev's actions before the 1956 congress, but denied he took part in any move to oust him as the party leader. He told he delegates:

"I assure you that I shall always stand on ground for the affairs of the party and shall fight for the carrying out of its general line for the cause of peace and Communism."

A Leningrad Party Secretary, Ivan Spiridonov, last Thursday had named Pervukhin and Maxim Saburov, a former top economic planner, as man who should becalled before the congress to explain their actions.

Pervukhin humbly thanked the Central Committee for giving him the chance to explain. He said he would try to justify the confidence shown in him.

Deputy Premier Josef Kuzmin, however, was not satisfied. Kuzmin said Pervukhin apparently reckoned his activities in the antiparty group and his failure to unmask it would remain unnoticed.

Attendance To Mount

The School Board turned them down. Legal arguments on the action ended today before U. S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan. The judge promised a ruling in a day or two. Whichever way it goes, the decision almost certainly will be appealed to the 4th U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The six schools reopened Monday but only to register 17 Negroes and 6,360 white pupils and assign them to classes. They were closed before they started the fall term last September under a massive resistance program later killed by the State Supreme Court.

All six showed an enrollment increase yesterday, to a total of 6,837. This still is short of the 9,950 expected in September.

The City Superintenden of Schools, J. J. Brewbaker, predicted that attendance will keep on mounting over the next week or two. He said some parents had been afraid of disorders. So he said:

"I told them by all means then to wait a day or two if they wanted to."

He also expects some pupils who went elsewhere last September to return to their old schools.

Ordinarily the drop in school registrations would mean a drop in state funds for the Norfolk schools. State contributions are pegged to average daily attendance.

But one of the bills rushed through a five-day special session of the State Legislature was designed to ease this problem. It amended the law to permit certain adjustments, although details still must be worked out.

Furthermore, the Virginia State Administration isn't conceding that it can't stop the spread of integration generally throughout the state.

Gov. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. has promised to set up promptly a special commission of members of the legislature to work on a long range program, probably built around the idea of a part private, part public school system.

The legislature adjourned Monday night until March 31. Neither it nor the Governor was able to find a way to halt the beginnings of integration in the Old Dominion.

But desperation measures were put through to lessen the impact.

One will permit the payment of tuition of up to $250 a year for attendance at a private non-sectarian school.

The same situation occurred last Dec. 20 when the Air Force first tried to launch the two-stage weapon.

Since that time two ground engine static tests also failed before the rocket was ready for today's shoot.

U. S. strategists hope the 110-ton Titan will be one of the answers to Russia's challenging advances in the intercontinental ballistic missile field.

Red-Hot Tar Heels Risk League Lead Against Terps Tonight

Teams Tangle At 8:00; Moe Doubtful Starter

Frank McGuire's balanced and feared Tar Heels, sporting a glittering 12-1 season record, tonight entertain defending Atlantic Coast Conference champion Maryland in Woollen Gym at 8:00.

The Tar Heels received sad news yesterday when they learned that Doug Moe has been put on the doubtful listf or tonight's game. Moe, suffering from an ankle injury retained in the South Carolina game, is very doubtful, according to Trainer John Lacey.

It will be the first meeting of the season between the two teams. Carolina still remembers the last time the two battled when Maryland whipped the Tar Heels for the championship last March in Raleigh. They had previously split two regular season contests, the Terps and Tar Heels each winning at home.

Second In Nation

The McGuiremen, in addition to their 12-1 overall record, are ranked second in the nation and lead the tough ACC with a 7-0 mark.

Maryland, although great things were predicted for it, has faltered badly. The Terps have a paltry 6-7 overall mark, but are third in the conference with a so-so 4-3 record.

Carolina's last outing was a double-header weekend affair in Charlotte, and the Heels responded by whipping Clemson 60-46 and South Carolina 62-50. The last game before that the Carolinians beat then first-ranked State College 72-68 in overtime.

Bowed To Clemson

After a disastrous tour of South Carolina, which saw the Terps bow to lowly Clemson (55-46), the Terrapins polished off Georgetown before heading into exams. The best Maryland effort of the year was a losing one; they pushed number 1 Kentucky to the limit before going down 56-54 in the final seconds.

Carolina's starting five, including two sophomores, continues to average in double figures. York Larese leads the parade at 15.4, then come Lee Shaffer (13.3), Doug Moe (12.5), Harvey Salz (11.9), and Dick Kepley (10.7).

The men to watch on Maryland's squad are 6-9 Al Bunge and 6-6 Charlie McNeil. Both were thorns in the Carolina side in last year's games.

Terps Lead Defense

Maryland, always noted for defense, is the top team in the league in that department and feature a slow and deliberate style of play.

Carolina, who leads the league in offense, can move the ball with the best, hit from the outside, and fast-break.

Frank McGuire stated earlier this week that "I look for Maryland to play its best game of the season to date. We just hope to be ready. We made a lot of mistakes in Charlotte although I was generally pleased with the play of our boys."

The addition of 6-8 soph Hugh Donahue to the playing roster gives the Tar Heels another top-notch suo to go with Ray Stanley, Danny Lotz, and Lou Brown.

McGuire will probably start the usual: Moe, Larese, Salz, Shaffer, and Kepley, although Moe is doubtful due to an injured ankle.

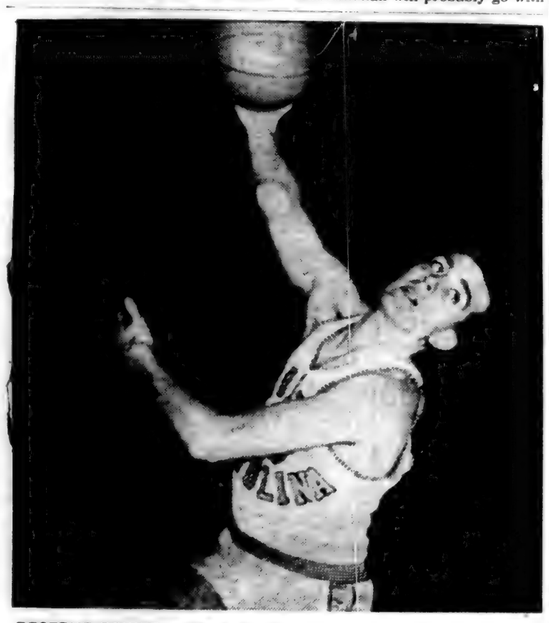
TERRAPIN TERROR — 6-9 Al Bunge, center for the Maryland Terps, will be one of many men to watch tonight when the Terrapins meet Carolina at 8:00 in Woollen Gym.



RESERVE POWER — Hugh Donahue, Carolina's 6-8 sophomore center, has seen his first action after being held out the first semester and shows signs of becoming the top Tar Heel reserve.

In ACC

Carolina Paces Stax

GREENSBORO — (AP) — Carolina's conference-leading Tar Heels face a fair-sized battle to retain their team scoring lead in the Atlantic Coast Conference during the stretch drive just ahead, but as an overall efficient-operating unit they are not at present closely challenged.

Their scoring average dropped from 74.5 to 72.5 points a game off last weekend's action, leaving the Tar Heels just 2.1 points a game ahead of second-place Virginia, which again tops the conference in free throw accuracy at 71.7 per cent.

But that's as far as the close race goes, according to latest ACC Service Bureau figures. The Tar Heels, in addition to holding the team scoring lead, also have the best field goal shooting average, 43.6 per cent, hold the largest average margin over the opposition, 10.5 points a game, and rank a close second to N. C. State in rebounding with 49.1 recoveries to the Wolfpack's 49.5.

Wake Forest has the second best floor shooting average, 40.3 per cent. N. C. State has dropped below 40 per cent for the first time this year, 39.7 per cent. The Wolfpack, however, has the second best average margin over the opposition at 6.4 points a game and is the no. 2 team in defense against scoring with an average yield of 59.9 points.

Maryland's defending champion Terps, though frequently beaten in the first half of the season, continue to set an outstanding pace as the defensive leaders of the league. Marylnad, the perennial defensive champion, has given up an average of only 55.3 points a game, even though the Terps have lost seven of 13 games.

Clemson is second to Virginia in free throw shooting, having made 69.3 per cent of its foul shots.

Wolflets Beat Carolina Frosh 79-64

NASHVILLE — State's freshman basketball team grabbed off an early lead here last night and then held onto it for the rest of the game to defeat the Tar Babies 79-64 before a packed house of more than 1,500 fans.

For the Wolflets it was the second time in as many meetings that they have come out on top of the Carolina frosh. The loss was the third of the season for the Tar Babies in nine decisions.

Lee Terrill's cagers from Raleigh had a comparatively easy time of it as they led all the way and were never in any grave danger during the contest. The Wolflets held a 34-23 halftime margin and built it up better than a 20 point lead during stages of the final half.

The State frosh got an 18 point effort out of Denny Lutz to lead their attack. Anton Muehlbauer with 16 and John Key with 13 were the other major Wolflet scorers.

Hudock Has 19

Center Jim Hudock led the Tar Baby scoring with 19 points for the night. He was closely followed by Don Walsh who had 18. Ken McComb with 11 was the only other member of the Carolina five to hit double figures. Guard Yogi Poteet had his worst night of the year as he was held to 1 point by the Wolflet defense.

Once again the Tar Babies lost the services of their big men through fouling out. In addition to Hudock and McComb, Poteet and Bill Hubbard also fouled out. Before the first half was over both Hudock and McComb had collected three fouls, so they were virtually useless during the final twenty minutes.

The Tar Babies resume action again tonight when they take on Wilmington College prior to the varsity contest against Maryland.

The Scoring

State — Finnegan, 8; Lutz, 18; Key, 13; Whitfield, 2; Gabriel, 4; Muehlbauer, 16; Wherry, 8; Yates, 3; Prescott, 1; Rhodes, 2.

Carolina — Hubbard, 3; O'Bannon, 2; Hudock, 19; Callahan, 4; McComb, 11; Philips, 4; Poteet, 1; Foushee, 2; Walsh, 18.

All-Campus Team In V-Ball Picked

Officials in the Intramural Volleyball League have chosen the 1958-59 All-Campus Volleyball team, consisting of the six best players on the campus, according to the group.

When the debating and voting had ended 6 names stood out above all the rest. These were: Brent Nash (Zeta Psi), Bill Bost (Zeta Psi), Frank York (Med. School), Sandy Ainslie (SAE), Ben Hammet (Joyner), and Jack Rugheimer (Connor).

This is the mythical best team on the entire campus chosen from the teams competing in the Intramurals program.

The final date for table tennis entries will be Wednesday February 4 at 6:00 p.m. Those wishing to enter should submit their entries to the Intramural Office.

At the last Intramural managers meeting, it was decided that the play should consist of 2 single and one double match rather than the 2 double and one single matches which was previously planned. The number of players per team remains at four. The table tennis play is on the point system.

"Oh Mary, Mary Lou" we said, "if you are ever to be wed a gentle hint might work out fine. Be rakish, send a Valentine!" The desperate child sent ten instead.
O glorious day, the ancient spell worked out, and now she does so well that in the dorms most every dame turns green at mention of her name, and soon will chime the wedding bell.

IDC Favors Shelves In Enclosed Booths

By RON SHUMATE

The Inter-Dormitory Council went on record Wednesday night as being in favor of the immediate construction of a shelf in each enclosed telephone booth in men's dormitories.

The resolution passed by a unanimous vote of the Council body.

Last Thursday night eight telephones were torn from their places. Four of these were in Connor, three in Cobb and one in Winston.

One IDC member reported that the receivers were torn from the wires in his dorm, but the coin boxes were not bothered. Only one of the missing receivers has turned up at the present time.

Rudy Edwards, IDC president, said "We have good reason to believe that only one or two persons are doing the damage."

Edwards said that the IDC is currently tracing several "tips" as to the identity of the assailans.

In commenting earlier in the week on the situation, Edwards said he feels that the offense "is serious enough to demand expulsion from the University."

Earlier in the year several telephones were jerked off a wall in Cobb dorm, where the offenses have been more frequent.

A representative from the Chapel Hill telephone company was originally scheduled to speak to the council, but due to prevailing circumstances he did not speak. Edwards said the representative would discuss the matter at next week's meeting.

(The body voted to hold their next meeting Wed., Feb. 11, instead of the next regularly scheduled meeting date, which fell on the same night as the Carolina-State basketball game.)

The co-ed visiting agreement, which is now in effect, is being utilized in only three dormitories at present. Lewis, Mangum and Aycock are the only dorms which have sponsors, which is a prerequisite for the visiting agreement to go into effect in dorms.

Jim Scott of Lewis dorm, chairman of the Co-ed Visiting Agreement Committee, emphasized that these sponsors do not have to be present every weekend when the dorms have open house. The sponsors' duties are to chaperone dances and receptions and help with decoration of the dorm social rooms.

Legislators Resume Work This Evening

By DEE DANIELS

The amended Levy bill and a bill establihing a Campus Affairs Board will be discussed tonight at the first meeting of the Student Legislature for the spring semester.

The solons will meet at 7:30 in Phi Hall, 4th floor, New East.

The Ed Levy (SP-UP) bill to send telegrams to the governor of Arkansas and Virginia concerning school integration was defeated by the Legislature Dec. 4.

But the bill was reconsidered after Gray Greer (SP) amended it to provide for sending registered letters instead of telegrams and modified the wording of the message on Jan. 8.

The Ways and Means Committee passed it unfavorably this week. The action, which was not unanimous, was taken due to recent developments in Virginia.

Several members of the Committee objected to the presentation of the bill to Legislature without removal of (1) the Almond communique, while retaining the Faubus letter and (2) the financial provision which authorizes the sending of telegrams, since it has been modified to send letters.

Jim Crownover (SP) presented a bill at the last meeting of Legislature to establish a Campus Affairs Board. The Board would replace the miscellaneous committees which are appointed by the student body president throughout the year to deal with various problems. Committees have been set up in the past for such matters as the student dining hall, study areas, fraternity parking problem and bicycle racks.

The Board, if the bill is sanctioned, would consist of 10 members and a chairman appointed by the president of the student body. All bills dealing with campus welfare passed by the Legislature would be referred to the newly created Board.

In action on the bill, the Ways and Means Committee changed the name of the Board to Campus Affairs. In the bill, it was called Campus Welfare. The Committee also defined more clearly the powers, organization and assumption of duties of the Board.

A bill, presented by Norman Smith (ind.) on Jan. 8, to present to the student body a referendum proposing an amendment to the student constitution which will distinguish personal honor from recommended duty is being withheld indefinitely.

According to Smith, new proposals for the restructuring of the entire judicial system will either include or preclude the suggestions of the bill.

Legislature will also elect a speaker pro tem and a new chairman of the Rules Committee tonight. Gary Greer, present speaker pro tem and Rules chairman, moved from his district the first of the semester.

According to Ralph Cummings, speaker of Legislature, three representatives have resigned by letter and four have moved from their distrcits. This includes four Student Party members, two from the University Party and one who is doubly endorsed.

JERRY STOKES
. . . curent events leader

GMAB Group To Be Led By Stokes

Jerry Stokes is the new chariman of the Current Events Committee of the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Stokes was appointed to that position this week by GMAB President Bob Carter to replace Louis May, who recently resigned the post.

In addition to Stokes' appointment, Carter also announced GMAB committee projects for the semester.

GMAB's big weekend will come March 6 with the "Lost Weekend" dance and concert, featuring Dave Brubeck for the concert and the Gladiolas and the Shadows for the dance that night. Gay Cowan, chairman of the Dance Committee, is in charge of arrangements for the "Lost Weekend."

Another important event of a GMAB committee is the performance of pianist Roger Williams, who will appear here March 8, sponsored by the Student Entertainment Committee. Chairman of this committee is Bob Borden.

Other activities planned include a pool tournament, Feb. 9-25, and eight Petites Musicales. Free flicks for this semester begin Friday and Saturday night this week and will continue through May.

Free juke box music and combos will provide music for Friday night dances in the Rendezvous Room.

The Sound and Fury musical, to be held in May, is also sponsored by GMAB.

Politics In House Underway

RALEIGH — (UP) — Legislative circles buzzed Wednesday with a report that Gov. Hodges had offered Rep. Addison Hewlett a Superior Court judgeship that would have taken Hewlett out of his successful race for the House speakership.

Neither Hodges nor Hewlett would comment on the report.

The Superior Court judgeship in Hewlett's judicial district became vacant last week when Gov. Hodges named Judge Clifton L. Moore of Burgaw an Associate Justice of the State Supreme Court. The Governor appointed Rudolph I. Mintz of Wilmington to the post.

Hewlett was chosen Speaker Tuesday night as the climax of a hotly-contested race with Rep. Carl Venters of Onslow. Venters was an administration stalwart in the 1957 General Assembly, serving as chairman of the important Appropriations Committee. The Governor insisted throughout the race which began nearly two years ago that he was neutral and would not take sides in the contest.

Hewlett was asked whether he would confirm or deny the report. He then reiterated he had no comment, adding, "The speakership race is over. Let's all get together." He said he was determined to work for the best interests of the state and he felt that was the Governor's attitude.

One legislator, who asked that his name not be used, said flatly Hewlett had been offered the judgeship and turned it down.

One Venters supporter said the report of the offer spread like wildlife in the closing days of the speakership race. "I'll bet it cost us 6 to 8 votes," he added. Ironically, one Hewlett man said the report had cost their side votes, too.

Outdoor cafes may be far removed from Chapel Hill, but the French effect will be the same at the Cosmopolitan Club's annual International Dinner Saturday at 6:30 p.m. in the basement of the University Baptist Church.

French food and other foreign foods will be served at the dinner.

Tickets for the dinner are available at the Y for $1. Students who purchased tickets for the dinner called off last year have been asked to exchange these for new tickets at the Y.

Spring Elections Date Announced

Spring elections this year will be held April 7. This was the date decided upon at a meeting yesterday afternoon of the Elections Board.

As yet no new Elections Board chairman has been named.

AL SALLEY
. . . who in Hellas?

Al Salley To Produce 'Oh Hellas'

The production will be presented early in May.

Salley was named producer of the student show by GMAB President Bob Carter yesterday. The director of Sound and Fury has not yet been selected.

Sound and Fury is an annual musical comedy entirely written, produced and directed by students. The script for the show was written by Lew Hardee.

In taking over his new position, Sound and Fury Producer Salley said he needed students to work in many areas of the show.

"We are interested in getting wide participation from the students because a particularly large cast and production staff are going to be needed this year," he said.

East German Commies Let Convoy Through

HELMSTEDT, GERMANY — (UP) — Under sharp attack by the United States, Soviet authorities yesterday turned loose a U. S. Army truck convoy they had held in East Germany for 53 hours.

The four-truck convoy and its five grim soldiers rolled into West Germany, past the checkpoint on the border between East and West Germany, at 6:12 p.m. yesterday.

That was after the U. S. State Department, backed by President Eisenhower, had delivered a stiff protest in Moscow against any interference with the Western Allies' access to Berlin.

The convoy, en route from Berlin to West Germany, was detained Monday afternoon within sight of the East-West border.

The Soviet Army demanded an inspection of the cargoes. But Findley Burns Jr., political adviser to the U. S. Army Mission in East Berlin who came here for the final negotiations said the Russians were not allowed to inspect the inside of the trucks.

The United States thus won a point in its efforts to prevent the Russians from gradually clamping a stranglehold on the highway supply line to Berlin, isolated 110 miles behind the Iron Curtain.

The detention of the trucks was fast ballooning into a major diplomatic crisis when the Russians gave in.

Following three U. S. Army protests yesterday in Berlin and Frankfurt, President Eisenhower announced to his news conference today that a vigorous demand was being made by the State Department for release of the convoy. He said the Untied States never had allowed the Russians inspection privileges.

The State Department note released later called the Russian action "unwarranted and inadmissable." Refusal to let the trucks through without inspection, it said, was a "clear violation" of American rights, under four-power agreements since 1945, to free access to Berlin.

LARESE GETS 32

Heels Top Terps 64-57

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's nationally second-ranked Tar Heels rolled over defending ACC champ Maryland here last night as sophomore York Larese scored half the team's points in a 64-57 win.

Larese, who wound up with 32 counters, got 19 of them in the second half. He was deadly all night with his fall-away jump and hit several lay-ups to boot.

The victory pushed surprising Carolina to a 13-1 season record and an unbeaten 8-0 mark in the conference.

In a last minute surprise, Doug Moe started and played most of the game. Tuesday it was reported he was on the doubtful list due to an injured foot. He wasn't effective as usual, though, only getting 4 points.

Maryland managed to stay fairly close to Carolina until the closing minutes of the first half when the Tar Heels really poured it on.

Things stayed fairly even until 6 straight points by Dick Kepley put Carolina ahead 15-10. But the lead was short-lived as Maryland hit 7 straight of its own to go ahead 19-17. Maryland led 23-22 with 4:21 on the clock, but after Salz's jump at 3:41 made it 24-23 Carolina, the Tar Heels were never headed for the rest of the game.

The score stood 30-27, Carolina, with 1:46 to go, but then Salz, Larese, and Moe each hit a driving lay-up to give the Heels their 9-point halftime spread of 36-27.

Carolina experienced little difficulty in keeping at a safe distance through most of the game, though Maryland pulled within 6 at 42-36 and later scrapped to within 5 at 59-54 with 3:08 in the game.

But a free throw by Larese and two more by Salz gave the Heels the lead they needed to go on and

Honor Council Convicts One For Cheating

One student was cleared and another was convicted on cheating charges by the Men's Honor Council Tuesday night.

Hugh Patterson, Council chairman, said yesterday that a student accused of using notes in a classics examination was cleared of all charges. The other student was found guilty on two charges of cheating and put on probation.

WRC Debates Late Grants After Games

By BARBARA DEANS

Possible late permission for coeds after major basketball games was discussed by the Women's Residence Council yesterday.

The idea was referred to a committee. As the proposal stands the WRC would decide before each game whether or not it merits late permission.

In co-operation with the Infirmary the WRC will erect a "Have You Signed Out?" sign at the Infirmary's admissions desk. This is being done in an effort to decrease the number of coeds who forget to sign out when going to the Infirmary.

A 2 a.m. late permission has been granted for all coeds on Friday, Feb. 13, during Germans weekend.

The council announced that second semester freshmen with C averages will have privileges for six weekends off campus and will not have closed study.

A schedule for interviewing applicants for Women's Orientation Chairman and Woman's Handbook editor will be announced later.

RING SALE

Today is the last day this month for juniors and seniors to order class rings. Orders are being taken from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Y building.

Sponsoring the ring sale is the Order of the Grail. Members of the Grail will assist a representative of the Balfour Company in taking orders.

Danny Lotz, ring sale chairman for the Grail, said the rings are mailed to students around eight weeks after the orders are made.

Teachers Threatened, Says Negro Educaton

RALEIGH — (UP) — A Negro education officials aid Wednesday several Negro teachers in North Carolina have been threatened with loss of their jobs for taking stands on civil rights issues.

Executive Secretary W. L. Greene of the North Carolina Teachers Assn. indicated that intimidation has been used to silence teachers' civil rights activity since the state repealed the teachers' Tenure Law in 1955.

Because of this the Negro education group included in its legislative program a proposal to assure the tenure of teachers who are otherwise qualified.

Chairman James T. Taylor of the association's legislative committee said the proposed law would be "designed to protect the jobs of teachers who may be intimidated in civil rights issues."

Another item in the program would make it a criminal offense to intimidate by threat or violence communities in the process of desegregating their public schools.

Other proposals:

To divide Escheats funds equally among all institutions of higher learning instead of passing them off to the University of North Carolina. Escheats money comes from property whose ownership cannot be determined.

To pay teachers for the week preceding and the week following school terms.

To provide sick and maternity leave for teachers and principals.

To provide sufficient school buses to eliminate overcrowding and second trips.

To eliminate advisory committees in school districts.

Committee Will Select ABC Sites

A three-man committee will be chosen within the next few weeks to determine the location of ABC stores and to select the personnel to work in them.

R. J. M. Hobbs, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners, said yesterday the Board of County Commissioners and the Board of Education are required by law to meet and choose the three-man committee.

Don Stanford, a member of the Board of County Commissioners, said the statute actually requires that the County Board of Health meet with the other two boards to aid in the selection of the ABC committee. Since Orange County has no Board of Health, only the commissioners and the members of the education board will make the selections.

Woman's Handbook Editorship Is Open

During the spring each year the handbook is compiled to be sent to new coeds and parents during the summer.

Coeds will be able to look over past copies of the handbook in the dean of women's office Feb. 9 and 10.

After the deadline for applications Feb. 13, interviewing sessions will be held Feb. 17.

Last year Suzanne Mosteller edited the 40-page handbook containing information about the women's program here.

Refresher Course In Pharmacy Opens

A four-week refresher course for pharmacists began at the UNC School of Pharmacy Wednesday night.

Classes are being held each Wednesday night from 7:30 to 9:30. Instructions for the course will be provided by the faculty members of the UNC School of Pharmacy.

The subjects and teachers for the four classes include The Steroid Hormones by Dr. Sigurdur Jonsson, Insulin and the Oral Diabetic by Carl Bauguess, Tranquilizing Agents by Dr. Herman O. Thompson and The Diuretic Drugs by Dr. George Cocolas.

This course is designed to assist the pharmacist in his role as therapeutic consultant to the doctor and others in the health profession.

Model U. N. Assembly Planned For Carolina

A model United Nations assembly will be held at UNC from April 9-11. The assembly will be sponsored by the State Collegiate Council of the United Nations. The host committee is the local YMCA United Nations Education Committee.

Each of the participating schools will represent a member nation of the UN. They will present all the arguments, fears and tensions of their delegated country. Fifteen colleges and universities already have accepted the invitations sent by the committee.

The national president of the CCUN and several of his aides will be at the assembly. Guest speakers will soon be announced.

Carolina students who have a working knowledge of international affairs are needed to head discussion groups at the assembly. Interested students have been asked to contact Liz Howell, Whitehead Dorm, 89066.

UP Floorleader Calls For Caucus

A University Party caucus of Legislature members has been called by UP floorleader Charlie Gray for today at 7 p.m. in the Grail Room.

Candidates for chairman of the Rules Committee and speaker pro tem of Legislature will be nominated at this time.

Doug Clark's Combo To Play For Benefit

Doug Clark's combo will furnish the music for the benefit Valentine Dance to be held Thursday, Feb. 12 from 9 p.m. to 1:30 a.m.

The dance is a result of an effort by the policeman to raise money for a local boy, who was paralyzed from his waist down in an accident a year ago.

Tickets may be purchased from "Scottie" and at the local police department for $3 per couple.

The dance will be held in the American Legion Hut here.

Still More Publicity: Don't Forget Germans

Joining Kai Winding and his orchestra and jazz trumpeter John Birks "Dizzy" Gillespie for the Winter Germans concert Saturday afternoon, Feb. 14, will be popular and jazz vocalist Chris Connor.

Miss Connor will sing several of her well known hit recordings during the concert in Memorial Hall beginning at 3 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 14.

Coming from a musical family, Miss Connor worked for several years in the music world before arriving at her present fame. A clarinetist in high school, she began singing with the University of Missouri band and then started working in the professional field with a Kansas City group led by trombonist Bob Brookmeyer.

Her first big band jobs came with Claude Thornhill and Jerry Wald, but she made her first impression on the music world when she went to work with Stan Kenton in 1950 on the recommendation of June Christy.

After three years with Kenton, Miss Connor began to make her first single recordings and night-club appearances. Her Bethlehem albums of "Chris," "This Is Chris" and "Lullaby of Birdland" were received successfully throughout the country.

Later she transferred to Atlantic Records and made her first hit recording, "I Miss You So."

Miss Connor is considered one of the best singers in the Anita O'Day-June Christy "cool" school. She is expecially characterized by her throaty effects on ballads and slower songs. Popular recordings she has made in the slower mood include "Mixed Emotions," "Portrait of Ronnie" and "Lush Life."

No Extension

The first piece of significant legislation to be presented to Congress is the proposal to extend the Selective Service system for two additional years past the expiration date of June of this year.

This law has particular relevance to college students who have a great part of their future laid out before them, and many of whom have to determine that future in terms of their obligation to the United States military.

In simple terms, the draft law does not work, nor is effective in promoting a strong military in the atomic age. Moreover, it is destructive in terms of the creative lives of many who could be quite creative.

As it stands now $28,000,000 is being spent to induct an average of three people per board annually, money that would be well to spend elsewhere on the defense system. Further, the system itself has weaknesses and complications. Indeed, as it stands now it is sucking into the military the backbone of the country — the unmarieds of age 23 on the average. These are the people who are just beginning a career, for the most part, and who are freed from the familial ties that would leave them in a position not to advance rapidly in the working world.

For the college student, the draft is especially bad, for as a military advisor at Amherst College pointed out in a recent issue of The Nation, college students by and large are looking for legal ways to avoid the draft. So, students get married prematurely, and once married are urged to have children so that they will have the requisite number of dependents to be ineligible in peacetime. Most of these people are in a position where they can neither afford a wife or a family, and in a position where the financial drain of a family may well hurt their career.

In other cases, students who would profit from working in society for a year or two have to attend graduate school immediately after their college career ends with the main idea of avoiding the draft.

Inequities exist still further when one sees that in many rural districts the volunteer rate is such that no person is drafted in entire years, so that the quota system serves to keep a staff of people busy for no apparent purpose, since the classification and re-classification nets no entrants into the service. Other urban areas have no recruits and higher quotas, so that it is at the present time advisable, if one lives in the city, to move into the country — the point here being that a supposedly equitable draft system is far from equitable and is a drain on the taxpayer as well as providing several useless jobs, services which could well be rendered in other areas of government.

It should also be pointed out that the Selective Service system that now exists is far from selective, in that there is only one real Selection that an individual may make. This selection is whether to enlist or take one's chances with the draft and seek legitimate methods of dodging that draft. Once inducted a person finds out that he is put into that position which he most qualified for. In the typical arrangement of things a college graduate in physics may be digging trenches or fixing telephone lines, while persons of no education are given high responsibility. This tends to foster an unwieldy incompetence.

Finally, consideration must be made for the direction toward which services should be heading. This direction is up. The country is moving toward the space age using a LaSalle, and perhaps they might try using an intercontinental ballistics missile instead. The age of the foot soldier is at least partially gone, and the need to keep a large standarmy is almost non-existent.

This is not to say that there is not a need for trained military personnel, but it is to say that continuation of the present law is wrong.

There are several shoices open to the government. The first and most obvious is Universal Military Training for a short period immediately after high school graduation or departure. The second is a reinstatement of the G. I. Bill in an effort to get volunteers which surely would come under the program, since there are fully 200,000 students in the United States capable of doing college work, but unable financially to atend. Finally, if the present system is continued in anything like its present form, it should be modified so that individuals can serve the country in government work according to their individual ability. Under this plan a chemistry graduate could work in a research department of the government for two to three years, something that would both profit the military and the individual.

At present the system is wrong, but it is not past corerction.

On Reading Matter

Sidney Dakar

Quite frequently some student sends a letter to the editor of the DTH and complains of the poor quality of the editorial page. Some say it is too intellectual, some that it is intellectually barren. We need more like those that are complaining. At least, I assume, that they read the editorial page, which is, by the way, open to any and all that feel that they could do better than those who try. The sad truth is that most Carolina students never get further than the sport's page and Pogo when they read any newspaper.

There is nothing wrong with sporting activities; they are very excellent for enjoying our free time. Some students, however, have sports on their "minds" all day. These people know all the "vital" statistics on their favorite athletics. This is a frightful tendency as far as I am concerned. While the world is falling in on us, while our whole value system is being threatened by the aroused masses of the world, while Russian students are diligently studying the science of H-bombs and ICBM's 16 hours a day, some of our future leaders at Carolina spend a long breakfast (and sometimes lunch) talking only about last night's game.

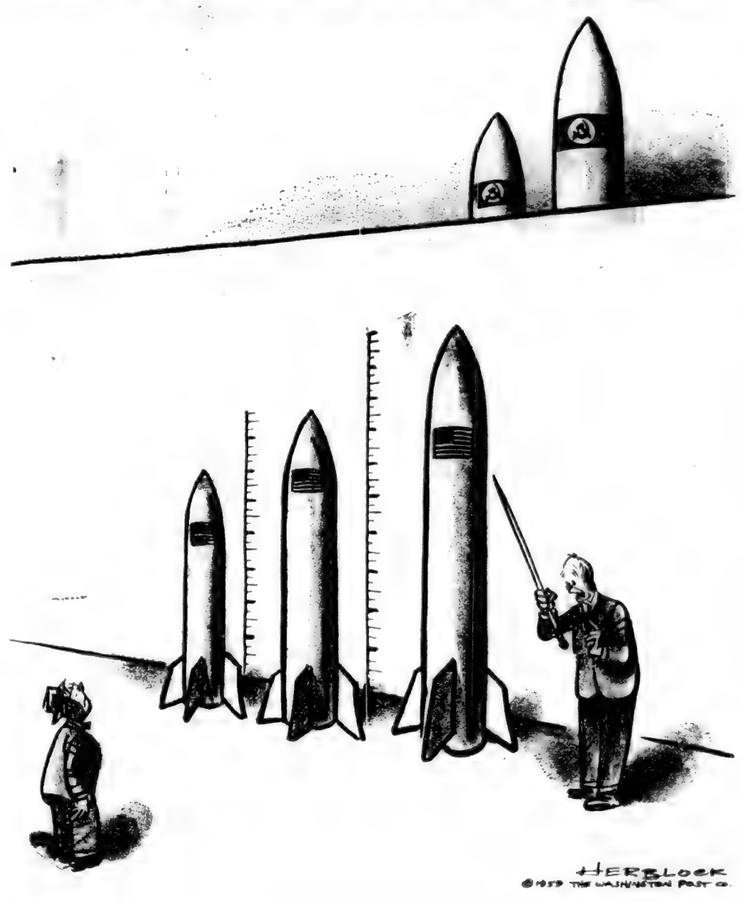
It is interesting to learn who won the game and maybe even the exact score, but to spend hours discussing the game is for children and for those who know nothing more important of which to talk. I am of course excluding those who make their living with sports, such as coaches and professional players. It is conceivable that the lowest type of manual laborers might spend the better part of the day discussing shotting and batting averages, but not college students! The future leaders! We are not the masses; we are supposed to be the chosen few, but this is probably a myth that will soon be exposed.

Our editor has been overly generous with columns from other sources than here on campus. He has frequently printed articles from many of the learned journals and newspapers. It is not important that the reader agree with all of the views that are presented. Most of the articles are written not specifically to make the student change his mind but to make him think, to reconsider judgments that he might have thuoght final. The most thought-provoking essays can appear on the editorial page and there will not be a murmur of any sort amoung the students, but let the editor put Pogo or Feanuts in a new spot or omit them completely (God forbid!) and the postmen will be working overtime forwarding the angry and indignant letters to the editor.

Right now the U. S. is rich and powerful, but we will do well to remember that this was accomplished not by us but by the sweat and toil of our fathers and their fathers. Some people in the present generation have come to believe that God actually favors Americans over all others. Ask them about any of our most pressing world problems and they will merely reply that "everything will come out all right in the end." At the risk of sounding trite, I will say that "God helps those who help themselves." The United States will not automatically remain powerful in the future. It will require a serious mental and physical effort on our part.

History will determine if the present generation of college students will have met the challenge that has been arrogantly flung in their faces by the Russian leaders and students. "The moving finger of fate writes, and having written, moves on. All of our pious pleading will not change it, nor all of our tears wash out a word of it."

"Don't Let Anyone Say We're Not Making Progress"



Letter

Editor:

During the break between semesters, several persons had items stolen from their rooms in Cobb Dormitory. The thief evidently has a pass key and can open any room in the building.

I was one of the unfortunate ones. My practically new typewriter was taken from my room, 333 Cobb. If the person that took the typewriter returns it, no questions will be asked, and a reward will be given. However, if the typewriter is not returned, and if either I or the police find who has it, I will see that the thief is prosecuted to the full extent of the law.

I am waiting for its return.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

The presentation of passion in music finds widely divergent expression in the music of our Western world, for it can never merely be presentation, but must be digested and formed within a composer's idiom and musical concern. In music, we never confront passion as it is, but rather are given a metamorphoses of passion which incorporates it with all else that is given by the composer. Miss Iren Marik's piano recital in Hill Hall last Tuesday evening was a study of such a metamorphoses.

To be specific about Miss Marik's personal musical equipment, there is little doubt that the artist showed herself to be a serious pianist with a thorough if limited range of artistry which provided her performance with an outspoken care for detail, a certain depth of tone production, and, unfortunately, a lack of intellectual conception necessary to hold her artistic concern in focus. In short, her stature as a pianist overwhelmed at times her stature as an artist; however, there were many moments during her recital when there resulted a happy reunion between these two, making her concert an event of considerable musical interest.

The Siloti arrangement of Bach's Organ Prelude in G Minor demonstrated not a metamorphoses of passion into the musical terms of Bach's personality, but the false imposition of nineteenth century romanticism on a musical style that is neither suited nor should be available to such an intrusion. Instead of metamorphoses we were given a conglomerate of parts unnaturally held together.

The very difficult Beethoven Sonata that followed shows a passion that, inbedded within the composer's peculiar spiritual development, as shown in his music, is not so much purified as turned in the metamorphoses toward depth rather than exuberance. Here, romantic passion becomes the energy for an exploration of its opposite. The Sonata in C Minor (Opus III) with its two complimentary movements, as if one sets up the challenge of the task of metamorphoses and the other the answer, shows passion in progress toward spirit in its most profound sense.

The second book of Debussy's "Images" presents the metamorphoses of passion into mobility. For Debussy, movement itself expresses his musical concern, but passion is now the musical counterpart of Bergson's elan vital.

Bartok's Suite Opus 14 is an early work, and, curiously enough, still retains the influences of List's' romanticism and Richard Strauss's chromaticism. Yet, for Bartok, passion is no longer romantic as it is for his teachers. As the final movement of the suite, a "Sostenuto" well demonstrates, the composer has changed passion into the mysterious that was to become fundamental to his personal musical idiom. Mystery, as the metamorphoses of passion, and rhythmic motive, the other element basic to his idiom, both serve the total metamorphoses of his music as complimentary forces.

List's "Berceuse" and "Valee d'Overmann" show the unabashed spread of passion as metamorphosed into the freedom of romantic style. With little melodic material at his dispossal, List makes passion serve as freedom and creates a kind of music that exhibits it with full color, even though for us in 1959 it seems all a bit confusing in form.

Thus the metamorphoses of passion into spirit, mobility, the mysterious, and freedom gives each composer that sense of music that makes it understandable as human and meaningful. Miss. Marik's playing was succesful in doing just that.

Spectrum: A Literary Magazine?

Anthony Wolff

We are confronted - those of us who care to be - with two magazines, both of the genre known as "little magazines." One of them, THE CAROLINA QUARTERLY, has been around for ten years or so. The QUARTERLY is the pariah of UNC publications, despite the fact that the students contribute collectively to its support through student fees. That they contribute the little support they do is due not so much to any genuine concern for the magazine or the standards which it represents as to a guilty desire to share in its quality without having - God forbid! - to read the damn thing.

The idea is that the QUARTERLY, originating as it does from UNC under the aegis of each and every one of us, casts a glow of cultivated respectability over all our dissipation and fraudulent education. For most of us, it is one of those things which we would rather not have around, much less pay for, but for the fact that like a leather-bound set of classics standing elegant and untouched on a shelf, the QUARTERLY gives us the appearance of an intellectual depth to which we are unwilling - and perhaps unable - to attain.

Our second literary magazines is the new-born SPECTRUM, the first issue of which appeared last month. No sooner did it make its modest debut than one of our more straight-laced student leaders let out a high-pitched and outraged yelp - "SPECTRUM IS OBSCENE;" whereupon this unpresuming little publication sold out a rather large first printing in a matter of hours. Rumor even has it that a number of copies were sold into the limbo of the fraternity houses, thus depriving several genuine bohemians of their copies.

It is not surprising that our noble solon's imitation of a Southern Methodist minister reviewing LOLITA from the pulpit had the happy effect which it had - one is left to wonder whether he is so politically naive as to believe that his charges could have any other effect than the one they had; and, the obvious answer to that one being "no," one is then left to wonder at such things as the state of local politics, the moral's of our leaders, etc.

Nor is it surprising that this charge of obscenity, like all such charges, was all pious hot air. In the first place, obscenity is a difficult charge to make against any art work, or even any pretended art work: art is perhaps by definition exempt from such considerations, except in Boston and other papist strongholds. Chapel Hill is not yet under the influence of Papal Bull.

In the second place, SPECTRUM is so weak minded, so devoid of any energy, that it could not possibly offend anyone who can sit through a deoderant commerical without blushing. The word "shit' appears once, on page 42; and that poor cuss has long since become so insipid that it passes for more-or-less proper speech in most sorority houses (though the Pan Hell Handbook doesn't mention it).

And this isolated word is the worst thing in the magazine. There is no erotic literature, no mention of any serious amorality, nothing even good enough to be seriously disturbing or depressing. The magazine as a whole may be said to lack that blind, smug cheer which has vitiated whatever was valuable in our Protestant Puritan heritage, but that does not make it obscene to any but those who must grin to conceal a spiritual vacuum.

SPECTRUM is not, then, the "squeeze your nuts and open your face" sort of publication, such as HOWL and other "BEAT" publications are: it is interesting to see that HOWL, the Book of Common Prayer of the Beat, is parodied in SPECTRUM.

If SPECTRUM is neither a campus PLAYBOY nor a local voice of "beat" romanticism, what is it? Unfortunately, on this question criticism breaks down: as a whole, at least, SPECTRUM is not much of anything, and if its contents are representative of the best literary effort being produced on this campus, then we have no need for a campus literary magazine at all. Even the magazine's title denies the possibility of any internal consistency.

Taken individually, the stories and poems in the magazine have little to recommend them. Some are plain frauds, without any form or content. This is a sweeping generalization, but it applies without reservation to most of the poetry and some of the prose. The difficulties of the poetry - difficulties mostly of formlessness and meaninglessness rather than of form and meaning - evaporate easily under analysis; unfortunately, the poems disappear with the difficulties rather than gaining substance from them. For this reason, the poems in SPECTRUM are unavailable to criticism of any serious sort; even parody is out, for they parody themselves quite well.

The only two which make any sense at all - indeed, the only two which will stand still for inspection -are Dennis Parks' "Why We Should Make Love In The Streets" and Parker Hodges' "The Glory That Was Rome." Of the two, Mr. Parks' piece is by far the better, but both of them are so trite in conception, language and diction, having already been well done by Eliot, or Pound or Cummings or somebody (and quite possibly everybody), that they seem pale and limp.

At least Mr. Parks seems to be trying to write poetry rather than sloppy prose, which is more than can be said for Miss Berry, Messrs. Hodges, Blume, Benjamin (who exhibits a flair for the double negative in the very first line, thus demonstrating a fasionable knowledge of Middle English poetic conventions), or even Editor Parks himself in his other contribution about the delights of congress in the bathtub.

Robert Bell's "Ululate" (Lat. "Howl") is the only criticism in the magazine, an attempt to parody Ginsburg's famous rail against American society. Unfortunately, the poem which is parodied is so vulnerable that Mr. Bell's failure is compounded. "Howl" has only the most rudimentary form, and its language is anything but precise or eclectic: it should parody easily. On second thought, however, it becomes clear that the original comes so close to parodying itself and the whole genre to which it belongs that further parody may in fact be impossible. At any rate, there would always be the danger of confusing the poem and the parody. Mr. Bell neatly avoids this danger by missing the poem entirely. Alone, his own work has no merit.

There are four prose pieces, three short stories and one "short briefstory." This last is a more-or-less delightful little exercise in nonsense, enhanced by its no nonsense approach to nonsense rather than the pretentious approach exhibited by the rest of the work (credo: meaninglessness is our meaning, and it is best expressed by meaninglessness).

"George Ed's Girl" is the lead story in the magazine, and a prime example of the "Look, Ma! I'm a wierdo" school of fiction. The only requirements for admission are a superficial knowledge of J. D. Salinger - i.e. the ability to imitate his language, if you don't come by it naturally - and an underlying mawkishness about such nauseating people and situations that the flip prep-school inarticulateness is necessary to protect the reader from the story. The substance of this particular story is good enough to warrant a more skillful treatment.

Gail Godwin and Anne Higgins are the two remaining authors, both of them less "arty," more direct than their companions-in-print, and both of them so obvious in their intentions that their stories lose almost all artistic effect and become simply illustrated essays of two familiar patterns of human frustration.

Neither author has much skill in characterization, probably because for the most part each is writing about people whom she has never met, and so she resorts to stereotypes. The fault is illustrated by the difference between Miss Godwin's believable treatment of the college girls with whom she is familiar and her stiff, cliche sketch of the two elderly "art lovers."

Both stories are superficial because the value which each presents as important is never fully explored. Miss Higgins' symbol for freedom is a rather ridiculous one. At least one hopes that she is not suggesting that $5000 be granted every student who wants to go mountain climbing; and yet Mr. Smith's refusal to heed the student's plea is supposed to represent a self-betrayal. Certainly this idea should be explored, preferably by Mr. Smith rather than the reader.

Miss Godwin also fails to perform the "reality testing" necessary cannot borrow the fifty-cents admission fee from a store run by a friend who allows him to charge his meals; and, despite the pitiable situation of the frustrated little man, it is also legitimate to ask, "So what?"

The art work, consisting of some scetches for sculpture by Robert Howard of the UNC art facully, is very fine. It seems to be out of place, however. Mr. Howard is an established sculptor and a professional artist, and it seems unfair to juxtapose his work with the student contributions. At any rate, his sketches are certainly the best feature of the magazine, even though they are out of place.

A last word about format: it would be a good idea if SPECTRUM, now that it has enough money, would group all of its advertising in one place instead of using it for page breaks. The present arrangement is not very satisfactory.

The next issue is looked to for great improvement. Certainly it is to be hoped that better writing than this is being done on this campus. Such writing should be encouraged and published, and SPECTRUM is ready, waiting, and in dire need.

Note: The Carolina Quarterly will be reviewed in this column as soon as the reviewer recovers from Spectrum.)

Tar Heels Top Terps By 64-57

Carolina wound up with a 42% accuracy mark for the night, but they had a 48% average in the first half. The rebounding was about even as possible with the Terps getting 46 and Carolina 45.

Harvey Salz got exactly half as many points as Larese (16), and Dick Kepley was third with half as many again (8).

High man for the Terrapins was big Al Bunge who collected 17. He was followed by Jim Halleck with 12 and Charlie McNeil with 10.

McNeil was hitting well until he collected his fourth personal early in the second half. He then left the contest and didn't return until the final stages, thus robbing his mates of their biggest gun.

Grapplers To Meet West Va.

Carolina's varsity wrestling team will be seeking to climb above the .500 mark Saturday night when it entertains always-tough West Virginia in Woollen Gym at 8:00 p.m.

The Tar Heels own an even 3-3 season record so far, having beaten Davidson, Wake Forest and N. C. State while losing to Washington and Lee, Virginia and VMI.

West Virginia, perrenial runner-up in the Southern Conference wrestling group, is a team that Carolina has not met for five years, but is also a squad the Tar Heels have never defeated.

Plans are underway for a frosh meet between the Tar Babies, who have a 3-2 season mark, and Fort Bragg, but the issue is not decided as yet.

New Tar Heel

NEW YORK — (AP)—Another New York high school basketball star has decided to enroll at the University of North Carolina.

He is Billy Galantal, 6-5 Brooklyn boy, who has been sought by many other college coaches.

Galantal said he wants to be a sports announcer and plans to take the radio-TV course at UNC.

Swimmers Face Tough Florida

Carolina's unbeaten varsity swimmers face what shapes up to be their toughest assignment of the season this Saturday when powerful Florida University comes to town. The meet will be held in Bowman Gray Memorial pool Saturday afternoon.

The Tar Heels, who own a phenomenal 26-meet winning streak, have bowled over 6 foes thus far this season. Twice they have stopped strong little East Carolina, last time by the scant margin of 44-42.

The Floridians also were here last year, and the Tar Heels, paced by 5 all-Americans, won that one easily.

WALSH POURS IN 33

Tar Babies Swamp Wilmington 99-85

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Carolina freshman got a 33 point effort from guard Donnie Walsh to lead them to a 99-85 victory over Wilmington Junior College last night in Woollen Gym.

The win boosted the Tar Babies season record to 7-3 and gave them their third victory in the last six days. The Tar Heel frosh looked like a different team from the one that got mauled 79-64 by the State College Wolflets Tuesday evening in Nashville.

In addition to Walsh's 33 points, Yogi Poteet had 24 and big Jim Hudock had 23 so that this trio contributed more than four fifths of the Tar Babies total output.

53-37 At Half

Dean Smith's frosh were in command all the way and by the half owned a 53-37 lead. Wilmington managed to shave this margin to 8 points midway in the final half by outscoring the Tar Babies nine to one during one stretch. At this point, however, Walsh and Hudock began to hit and the big lead was quickly regained.

The Tar Babies had an excellent night from the floor as they hit on 37 of 71 attempts for a 52.1 percentage. On the foul line the frosh were equally hot and dropped in 25 of 31 charity tosses.

The victory for the Tar Babies was also highlighted by the fact that neither Hudock or Ken McComb fouled out. As has been the case many timest his season both of these big starters have fouled out leaving the Tar Babies virtually without any superior height. In both contests against State the loss of the big men severely hampered Tar Baby efforts.

For the losers from Wilmington their offense was led by Ed Miastkowski who had 19 points. Behind Miastkowski were Ed Williams with 16, Larry Lindsey with 13, and Dick Brennan with 12.

Smith Clears Bench

Smith cleared his bench for the second night in a row as eight of the Carolina freshmen got into the scoring column. With the Tar Babies leading 96-77 and 2:02 left on the clock an entire new team came in, but they were unable to get the necessary four points to tie their seasonal high.

The Tar Babies had their chance to hit 100 with only seconds left in the contest. John Laws had the chance on a foul but missed the shot and when a follow-up didn't drop the Carolina frosh had to settle for 99.

The Scoring

Wilmington — Fritz, 10; Williams, 16; Brennan, 12; Miastkowski, 19; McLoughlin, 6; Bullard, 0; Lindsey, 13.

A Valentine Message

For Ladies Only

We knew a gal named Mary Lou, whose eyes were brown, we think, or blue. Her figure, in the usual spot, differed from that of younger tots. She very much resembled YOU.

She'd learned, beside her mother's knee that every proper girl should be aloof - the subject of man's dreams and not the victim of his schemes, (a thought with which we can't agree).

Imagine, if you will, her plight, Saving so much for MR. RIGHT that fellows said "although she's nice she sitteth on a cake of ice." She studied trig each week-end night.

"Oh Mary, Mary Lou" we said, "if you are ever to be wed a gentle hint might work out fine. Be rakish, send a Valentine!" The desperate child sent ten instead.

O glorious day, the ancient spell worked out, and now she does so well that in the dorms most every dame turns green at mention of her name, and soon will chime the wedding bell.

THE MORAL - Keep it in your mind - TO CATCH A MAN, YOU FIRST MUST FIND A WAY TO TELL HIM HE, PERHAPS, CAN CUT MORE ICE THAN OTHER CHAPS. Consult, at once, the undersigned.

Conference On World Affairs Draws High Ranking Official

High ranking officials from the U. S. Departments of State and Defense will be two principal speakers for the ninth annual Conference on World Affairs, which will be held here Feb. 11 and 12.

More than 500 persons from all parts of the state are expected to attend the group discussions and general sessions, which will focus attention on the uncommitted peoples of the non-western world.

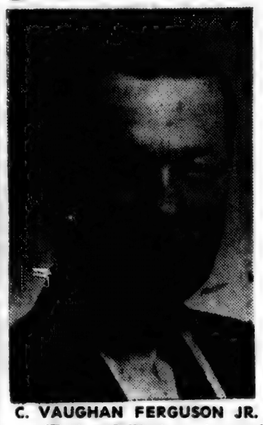
C. Vaughan Ferguson Jr., director of the Office of Middle and Southern African Affairs of the State Department, will keynote the conference theme, "East and West—A Search for Perspective," at a 10 a.m. session Thursday, Feb. 12, in Carroll Hall auditorium.

On the preceding evening at 8 o'clock in Carroll Hall, Brig. Gen. Millard C. Young, who is assigned to the organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff as chief of the Subsidiary Activities Division, will speak on the topic, "The Issues in Foreign Policy."

A second speaker at the Thursday morning session will be Mrs. Elizabeth Chesley Baity, formerly of Chapel Hill, now of Geneva, Switzerland, author, lecturer and writer with the World Literacy Team. Her topic will be "Turn East to Listen," and will be based on a book which she is in process of writing.

To summarize the conference at a closing general session at 4 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 12, Dr. Eugene E. Pfaff, professor of history at Woman's College, Greensboro, will speak on the topic, "East and West—A Perspective."

BRIG. GEN. MILLARD YOUNG
. . . 'The Issues In Foreign Policy'



C. VAUGHAN FERGUSON JR.
. . . 'East and West — A search for Perspective'

Ferguson, a native New Yorker and Harvard University graduate, has had a distinguished career in foreign service, which he entered in 1940. After service in Winnipeg, Tehran, Bucharest and Dakar, he was counselor and consul general at Tangier in 1956 and 1957. He is a graduate of the Naval War College at Newport, R. I.

General Young was graduated from the U. S. Military Academy at West Point in 1931, and has been in the Air Forces since 1932. His World War II service was in the Far East, where he became in 1944 assistant chief of staff operations for the Far East Air Service command at Brisbane, and later chief of management for the control, with his base in Hollandia, New Guinea.

Since the war, General Young has served in various important posts, with the atomic tests operations at Bikini, as chief of the guided missiles branch of the Air Force Headquarters, with the military air transportation, as chief of the psychological warfare division at Air Force headquarters, and, before assuming his present post with SHAPE as chief of staff of the Allied Air Forces of Southern Europe.

Committees Need Members

All students interested in applying for any of the vacant positions are urged to do so. The committee vacancies are as follows:

Foreign Student Committee — This committee is responsible for coordinating and improving the Foreign Student program on campus. The Committee also selects Goettingen scholars.

Carolina Forum — The Carolina Forum is responsible for arranging and promoting visits of outstanding public figures to the UNC campus. These prominaries come to UNC to speak on pertinent issues.

Men's Honor Council—The office of clerk being vacated by Jack Raper who is resigning is also open. The Clerk is responsible for the accurate recording of testimony and proceedings in all trials.

Furtado stated that "Previous experience in student government is not a prerequisite for selection to these positions. All interested students who have a sincere desire to aid in the improvement of our campus community are urged to apply."

Rush Manual Needs Editor

The deadline for junior coeds to apply for editorship of the manual is Feb. 23. Interviews with the girls will be held Feb. 24, and the selection of an editor will be made the next day.

The major requirement for all applicants is preparation of a "dummy" of their proposed Rush Manuals. Old manuals will be available in the dean of women's office now until Feb. 16.

Announcement of details for prospective editors of the Rush Manual was made at a meeting of the Panhellenic Council this week.

Legislators Defeat Levy Telegram Bill

By DEE DANIELS

The Levy bill is no more.

The Student Legislature last night defeated the Ed Levy (SP-UP) bill proposing the sending of telegrams to the governors of Arkansas and Virginia.

In speaking for his bill, Levy, although no longer a member of the Legslature, said he felt the bill should still be considered as if it were the first time it was being presented.

He told the solons that the bill was still important and that they had two choices, either to amend the bill or defeat it.

They defeated it.

A bill, introduced by Jim Crownover (SP) at the last session, to establish a Campus Affairs Board was passed.

Crownover stated that such a Board would eliminate the neeessity of the student body president, following spring elections, appointing approximately 160 people whom he probably would never see again.

He also pointed out that it would provide a system for channeling all committee reports on campus, as well as providing a better system of checks between Legislature and committees.

Gordon Street (UP) called the bill an "excellent move." He said it is a great step forward toward a more closely knitted student government.

In the absence of Ralph Cummings (SP), speaker of Legislature, and Gary Greer (SP), president pro tem, Norman Smith (Ind.), Ways and Means chairman, presided over the meeting last night.

Ann Lucas (SP) was elected, also by acclamation, as the new Rules Committee chairman. Greer also held this position.

Debate Squad At W & M For Tournament

Tom Long and John Brooks form the affirmative team for the UNC varsity squad. Clay Simpson and David Evans are the negative team. This is the same team which was undefeated at the New York University Hall of Fame Tournament on Dec. 12, 1958.

Many schools from the East Coast will be represented at William and Mary.

UP To Decide Issues Tuesday

The University Party will approve or reject a proposed revision of the party's nominations procedure in a meeting Tuesday night at 7:15. The meeting will be held in Graham Memorial, Roland Parker Lounge I and II.

The UP will also discuss several campus issues to be incorporated in its platform for spring elections. They will decide when to hold nominations.

NO PLAY

The Playmaker business office has announced that there will not be a new full-length play presented Feb. 25 to March 1 as scheduled originally.

"The Wouldbe Gentleman" by Moliere has been moved up from April 8-12 to the vacant position left this month.

On April 8-12 "Mrs. McThing" by Mary Chase will be presented.

Both of the plays will be presented in the Playmaker's Theater at 8:30 p.m. each night of their run.

STATE TICKETS

The redemption of passbooks for the Carolina-State game on February 18 will continue today and tomorrow for those students whose last names begin with A-M.

The ticket office in Woollen Gym reported yesterday that the tickets were going fast with better than half of them already issued. Beginning Monday morning the distribution of tickets to other students and the general public will begin.

All students who have priority and desire tickets for the game are urged to get them before the supply runs out.

Recording Disclosed In U. S. Plane Crash

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The United States exposed to the world yesterday a secret recording of excited, gloating voices it identified as those of Soviet jet fighter pilots shooting down a helpless U. S. transport plane.

One bit, merciless and boasting, said:

"Yes, he is falling, I will finish him off, boys, I will finish him off on the run."

The graphic recording was made public by the State Department on the eve of thebu rial of two victims of the plane crash. In all, 17 American airmen may have died. Certainly six did.

It was last Sept. 2 that the unarmed C130 transport was downed, near the border between Turkey and Soviet Armenia.

The craft was admittedly off course and it crashed about 25 miles inside Armenia—but there was no question about it being a transport, and there was a suspicion it may have been led astray by Soviet radic signals.

The vivid account was earlier presented to the Soviet government. But from Deputy Premier Anastas Mikoyan on down, Soviet officials treated the incident as just another airplane crash. They have ignored the tape recording and denied information of the missing 11 Americans.

The United States government almost from the beginning took the position that the transport was shot down. But until today it had declined to disclose—except to the Moscow government—the basis for this determined assertion.

The tape recording purportedly covers the operation of five Soviet fighter pilots from the beginning of a search for the transport over Soviet territory until after it was destroyed.

Coliseum To Wait On Union

By NORMAN B. SMITH

Plans for a multi-purpose coliseum type building which would serve as a basketball stadium, armory, and auditorium will not be given priority over the proposed student union.

The coliseum proposal has received considerable interest recently. It was purposely omitted from the University budget requests, said Chancellor William B. Aycock because the student union, new dormitories, and classroom buildings are much more critical needs.

The coliseum building is on University long-range planning, however. Tentative location is the present site of the Tin Can. It is still very much in the planning stage. Cost of such a structure is estimated to be about $3,000,000.

This discussion took place at a meeting of the University Athletic Council on Wednesday. Student Body President Don Furtado who was present said that inclusion of the coliseum on the UNC construction program would depend in (See EXPANSION, col. 5, page 3)

'World Community In 'A' Age' Topic For Coming Speaker

World traveler and former executive secretary of the American Friends Service Committee, Clarence Pickett, will speak in Carroll Hall at 8 p.m., Feb. 9.

Pickett, sponsored by the Carolina YMCA and YWCA and the Friends Meetings of Chapel Hill and Durham, will speak on "The Challenge of World Community in the Atomic Age."

The speaker was executive secretary of the American Friends Service Committee between 1929 and 1950 which, with the British Friends Service Committee received the Novel Peace prize in 1948. Under his leadership the AFSC carried on an extensive program of relief, reconstruction and peace education in America and throughout the world.

During the depression he served the government in the Divisions of Subsistance Homesteads, Resettlement Administration and the National Housing Agency. In 1952 he was a member of the President's Commission on Immigration and Nationalization.

Pickett has served for six years as a member of the Quaker team at the United Nations and in 1957 made a six-months trip around the world in the interest of Peace. He visited Japan, Hongkong, Singapore, Thailand, Burma, India and a number of ports on the coast of Africa.

In 1957, he with Norman Cousins, helped to organize the National Committee for a sane Nuclear Policy of which he is co-chairman.

Ike Asks Congress To Make Violence Blocking Integration Of Schools, Federal Crime

WASHINGTON — (AP) — President Eisenhower asked a divided Congress yesterday to make it a federal crime to use force or mob violence to block racial integration of schools under court orders.

The President also asked the legislators to strengthen the FBI's hand in dealing with school and church bombing cases and to authorize federal funds and advice to help states make the change to desegregated schools.

These were key proposals in a seven-point civil rights program submitted to congress in a brief, special message. The Justice, Welfare and Labor Departments immediately followed through with the dispatch of seven bills to the capitol.

Reaction was cut to a familiar pattern—the Eisenhower civil rights program either goes too far or not far enough, depending on whether a southern segregationist or a northern liberal is talking. And then there are the in-betweens, largely staunch administration supporters from GOP ranks, who said it was just right.

Southerners called the program offensive, a form of bribery, and an intrusion into a field where the federal government has no business. Sen. Richard D. Russell (D-GA), a leader of Senate southerners, said Eisenhower offers political legislation. He predicted significantly that "a vigorous effort will be made to amend any civil rights bill that reaches the floor with punitive provisions requesting that the South be patrolled, policed and punished."

From the opposite camp, chairman Emanuel Celler (D-NY) of the House Judiciary Committee commented:

"An empty gesture so far as the schools are concerned. It provides a snail's pace for enforcement."

Various Reublicans called the program temperate and moderate, as Eisenhower himself did in advance of its submission.

From Senate Democratic leader Lyndon B. Johnson of Texas came assurances the Eisenhower suggestions "will be considered on their merits by fair minded men seeking to resolve—rather than sharpen—the conflicts within our country."

Yet trouble obviously lies ahead—to begin with, in hearings a Senate judiciary subcommittee is starting march on assorted civil rights measures.

But then, the administration had trouble itself in whipping the program together.

Reportedly stripped away at the last momentw as a provision allowing the federal government to intervene more directly in suits intended to enforce segregation. This (See CIVIL RIGHTS, col. 4, page 3)

Patterson To Head Elections

Hank Patterson, a freshman from Manhasset, N. Y., is the new chairman of the Elections Board. Patterson was appointed yesterday by Student Body President Don Furtado to replace Bob Furtado, who resigned recently.

Commenting on his action, Furtado said, "Though Hank is only a freshman, he has worked closely with the past chairman of the Elections Board during the past two elections. He has illustrated a sincere desire to exert his full efforts in order to prepare for the actual election process. I am confident that Hank will utilize the abilities of the other members of the Elections Board and will be able to prepare for a smoothly run spring election."

Panel Plans To Discuss 'College Dress'

For those who wish to be up-to-date on what to wear when, a panel discussion on the "Do's and Don'ts of College Dress" will be given in Gerrard Hall on Feb. 12 at 4 p.m.

The senior woman's viewpoint will be expressed by Paddy Wall, secretary of the Student Body; I Janie Walters, member of the legislature, will speak for the junior women.

Mrs. E. William Noland will speak for Chapel Hill women; the Chapel Hill men will be represented by Chancellor Emeritus R. B. House.

Mrs. Carter Burns will be the moderator for the panel.

Sponsored as part of an In-Service Training Program for the staff of the Dean of Women's office, this panel is the fourth in the 1958-59 series. The program is being managed by Mrs. Lorena Patee, Alpha Gamma Delta house, and Mrs. Grances MacDonald, Alpha Delta Pi house.

Overseas Summer Work Open To Juniors - Placement Service

Interested in summer work in Europe?

For those who are, the Placement Service will hold campus interviews on March 12 for juniors interested in summer work abroad.

The Mobil Overseas Oil Company is sponsoring a ten-week training program in an effort to interest young men in foreign career positions; the countries offered are France, Germany, Austria, Italy Mexico and parts of West Africa.

The applicants are restricted to juniors who can present approval from their draft board. Parents' permission for those students under 21, the passing of a physical examination, and the ability to converse fluently in a foreign language are also necessary.

The choice is not limited to students in business school, but the company is looking for people with an aptitude for marketing, business administration, industrial sales, and accounting. Trainees with liberal arts and business administration backgrounds are usually assigned to service stations; those in engineering go to terminals and refineries. A short training period precedes job assignments.

Mobil assumes the transportation costs to and from New York and the candidate's destination. The company also pays for visas, passports, physicals, and inoculations. Each trainee has a $500 expense account for the summer which includes an advance travel allowance of $50. In addition, the candidate receives wages in local currency. The salary is based on the local pay scales for the job he is given Candidates who wish to remain abroad at the end of their ten-week assignment may do so at their own discretion and expense.

Local Scouts Join National Celebration

Chapel Hill Scouts will join with more than 29,500,000 present and past members of the Boy Scouts of America in the celebration of their 49th anniversary from Feb. 7 to the 13th.

Frank Yandell Jr., Orange District Scout Executive, has announced that Chapel Hill Scouts will have a display on the grounds of the University Methodist Saturday between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Activities will be held at the display site at 10, 12, 2, and 4 o'clock.

On Sunday the scouts will attend local churches in uniform in honor of "Scouting Sunday."

The theme of Saturday's' show is Scoutcraft and Scout skills. Troop 39 will erect a 30-foot signal tower and Troop 835 will display a teepee made by the troop members.

A district court of honor held at the Institute of Government on Sunday night will recognize 40 advancements in rank and about 50 merit badges earned by local scouts.

Chief Scout Executive Arthur A. Shuck, commenting on Scout Week from National Scout Headquarters in New Jersey said, "Scouting presently has 3,617,000 boy members or 24.6 per cent of the boys between the ages of eight and 16. We must strive to make scouting available to every boy in America."

INFIRMARY

A Death

What the American public is witnessing today, tomorrow, and next week is the death of a President. The President may not die in office, but the walls of prestige that have for so long shielded the President from the world of reality are crumbling in such a way as to leave no doubt of the final result.

He is witnessing what he has tried to do in six years being trampled into the dirt by a Democratic Congress which is showing the potent force behind the overwhelming mandate given them by the people in November. And for the first time, he is feeling the full impact of the world, a world from which he has been away so long.

If Eisenhower had been a strong man, a man of ideas, a man of foresight and vision, one could sympathize with this loss, but as it is, he becomes the object of pity, and a pitiable creature is the lowest on earth.

If it were truth or wisdom that Eisenhower was standing up for, or even education, one might rally to his cause, but when it is a balanced budget that the war is being for, one can only turn his head from the brutal slaughter.

Eisenhower won his election in 1952 by a name and a personal charm that were far removed from politics and continued that image through the 1956 campaign. This aloofness to politics made it impossible for him to strengthen his party, and as likely, his breakdown will not materially weaken that party. As far as the partisan political scene is concerned, it will be as if he was never there, for what little his leadership was, it was not partisan in direction, and indeed had no direction over and above the platitudes that were mouthed in both campaigns about "Modern Republicanism" and "Peace, Prosperity, and Progress." This, like so much of the Eisenhower Administration, has been shown to be empty words, and now the balloon has burst.

Whatever his lack of effect on the political scene may be, in world and national affairs, the nation is rocking from his punches, for although well meaning in all his actions, Eisenhower has shown that he was either too far removed from or lacked the ability to understand the situation.

The results are history now. They are told in pages which speak of the President's desire to implement sound economics, and the resultant record inflation. It is spoken in the voice of one who sought prosperity, and had to hang on through a depression. It is written in the large letters of a "stable agricultural" policy, which saw the highest surpluses in history being thrown into storage bins. It is said in the firm tones of a "positive" foreign policy and has borne fruit in the alienation of allies and the strategic dominance of Russia. And when this chapter of history closes and is read in twenty years, the name Eisenhower will be read few times, while the name Khruschev will dominate the scene.

The death knell was sounded in the Senate two days ago, when Senator Homer Capehart, an administration adherent, introduced a substitute motion to cut funds out of a Democratic housing bill to bring it in line with the President's request. In his speech Capehart asked the plaintive question, "Do we want a balanced budget?" And the Senate with characteristic stolidity answered with a resounding 58-32 "No."

And the story is continuing. It will be read by millions coast-to-coast during the next days, weeks, and months, as one-by-one, the bills the President favors will be defeated, and those that he opposes will be passed. And a man who can shrink in press conferences from criticism as Mr. Eisenhower has in the past or who can be touched to the quick by a disagreeable word from the pen of an old military associate, Field Marshal Montgomery, is not going to be able to take much of the battering. He is a victim, caught in a web of his own unwitting making, a web from which he will find no release.

He is dying as sure as the sun will rise tomorrow or the sun set in the evening, and when one has to write an obituary in the pages of history, the best man can do for the President is say that he tried and that this trying could not make him a man equal to his task.

Congratulations

Congratulations are in order for Orange County which voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to have ABC stores in the county. Orville Campbell and his group of people who actively backed the proposal are also due for praise.

Not only does this signal an improved and more natural attitude toward alcohol consumption, but it may be able to forestall the two shift school system that promises to be a reality next year, unless sufficient revenues come in for school construction.

Indeed the action of the county is commendable and perhaps through legal control, there is a chance to stop some of the rotgut that has been produced. The town should benefit both financially and in attitude, since they have rid themselves of much of the hypocrisy that is latent in prohibition.

Levy Resignation

(Once in a great while a student gets nominated by both political parties, and if he is elected and must resign his office he is thrust into a position of having to decide which party his position will be filled by. Ed Levy was nominated by both the SP and UP in the fall and was forced to resign his seat because he moved out of the district. The letter below is his resignation and his choice of which party his seat should be filled by.)

Dear Ralph:

This is to notify you that I am no longer eligible to claim my seat in the Legislature, as I reside out of the district in which I was elected.

As I was fortunate enough to receive the nomination from both the Student Party and the University Party, it is my obligation to indicate which of the parties will have the opportunity to fill the vacancy I create. I assure you that the decision as to which party should receive the seat is not one which war arrived at hastily; instead the choice was made after a great deal of thought and consideration. I think that I owe it to you, the Legislature, the two parties, and my constituents to explain my choice.

The student government of the Universtiy of North Carolina affords the student body the privilege (and with it the responsibility) of governing itself. This privilege has at times been exercised, at times violated. The responsibility involved is sometimes realized, sometimes shunned. Our student government of today provides us with many services, both tangible and intangible. However, it can, in fact, it must perfect and extend itself. The University Party and the Student Party are instruments which must suggest, discuss, and implement improvements and epansion. Unfortunately, there is only one party capable of exercising the type of leadership cognizant of the resonsibility involved; this is the Student Party.

Although I have served both as an officer of the University Party and a fraternity. I cannot possibly justify a party based almost entirely on the block vote. The block vote is a bland corruption of the democratic process an autonomous student government is attempting to foster.

For the above and other reasons, I feel compelled to allow the Student Party to fill the vacancy.

Mikoyan Threat

It was interesting to read Mikoyan's reply to the charge that Russia does not hove a free press. Of course Mikoyan maintained that the Russian press "belonged to the people." He made the countercharge that we here in America do not have a free press. Mikoyan's reasoning was that where there is a millionaire who owns 10 newspapers and 10 million people who do not own any newspaper there will be no free press.

Of course Mikoyan was exaggerating for political purposes, but when we really examine some aspects of our press and radio system it is hard to prove him entirely wrong. It is well known that almost all newspapers and magazines are either Republican or Democratic. Their editorials are slanted toward the "party line" most of the time. Even on those rare occasions when they disagree with the "party line" they never actually take a stand that agrees with the other party. Of course this is a generalization; there are a few newspapers that still resemble Pulitzer's St. Louis Post-Dispatch, but the commercial interests have a death grip on them.

Consider a newspaper that is owned by an individual or family. We see an old, rich and conservative gentleman as head of the board. Do you think that such people are really interested in "freedom of the press?" They are interested in making money. The most pious organization cannot exist for long if it spends more money than it takes in; newspapers and churches are no exception. One does not get rich by always upholding freedom of the press (i.e. by paying more than mere lip service to the concept). One gets rich by not offending the right advertisers, powerful families and minority pressure groups.

Some of you may recall my "blast" against some newspapers for not printing the Putnam letter (a southern viewpoint on segregation). Do not misunderstand me; any newspaper has the "right' to turn down any material for publication—providing it is above the issue involved (you know, the "all the news that is fit to print" line). But, in this case the northern press is filled every day with uncompromising and vitriolic attacks on the South. Yet, these papers would not halt this vicious and almost sadistic attack for one day in order to print another side of the issue. Is this what we call freedom of the press?

It is not a question of whether the Putnam view is "right" or "wrong," or, "scientific" or "unscientific." It is my firm conviction that the majority of Southerners feel as Mr. Putnam and we cannot solve any problem until both sides will at least listen to the other side's viewpoint. There is a principle involved here. Voltaire expressed it very eloquently when he said, "I may not agree with what you say, but I would give my life for your right to say it."

The Washington Post and Times-Herald has attacked the South on many occassions. It also refused to print this letter. Rep. George Huddleston Jr. attacked in the House this very biased stand by the Post and demanded an explanation from the editors. "They could not be reached for comment."

It is interesting to note that J. R. Wiggins, former chairman of the American Society of Newspaper Editors' "Freedom of Information Committee," is vice-president and executive editor of the Washington Post.

Harper's Bizarre

Faced with the alternative of studying or hearing some poet talk, we donned a tie and made for Hill Hall and the long shot.

That evening marked the first time we differentiated between Robert Frost and Carl Sandburg. One of the men seated on the platform was that harmonica player, and the other was too well-fed to be Sandburg. We sat and listened to Dr. Lyons introduce the old New Englander. In essense, he said, "When Frost comes, can Spring be far behind?"

By the evening's end we were convinced that the coming of Frost and Spring were synomymous. The magic of the language which flowed from the silver wreathed mind held us in amazement. Mr. Frost leaned on the locturn and told us of his New England: about the birch trees, the apple harvest, the quiet snowflakes; about an ant called "Jerry" — and then we were laughing with him.

Members of the audience — almost everyone seemed to have a volume of poetry with him — would call for certain selections, and the old man would roll off the requests, moving easily from verse to verse, improvising poetry in the intervals, hardly turning the leaves of his notebook of thoughts. We'd heard the words before, but coming from him they sounded better.

We left the auditorium later, giddy with the musical patterns woven by the old man. We know little more of the hired man or the two divergent roads than before, but the overwhelming warmth of Robert Frost remained.

The next week, infatuated with this newly discovered poetry, we went back to hear a lady read, allegedly in English. Perhaps it was British. At any rate, we found that the wonderful thoughts spoken by Mr. Frost were peculiarly his own.

We waited anxiously for the return of Spring. Then one day someone said, "Frost's coming."

We were there to see him, hear him tell in the best of words of the little things which had amused him, were dear to him.

Now we once again anxiously await their return — Spring, the young season; Frost, the young mind — to us, inseparable.

"That's What Happens When You Rely On Ordinary People To Defy Law And Order"

Chapel Hill-Brussels & Back

As you may observe from the overline to this column, my last year was spent for the most part as a guide at the Brussels World's Fair. One almost hesitates to begin a piece such as this, for the pitfalls are legend and there is tendency to write no more than a boresome travelogue. But, there are those who may be interested in what happens when one sets off to the largest world's fair in 20 years and the various anecdotes connected therewith. After this digression, I promise to ensconce any further urges into farthest corner of my room and try to ignore them. No promises.

Looking back through the Tar Heel of last spring, I see that my last column concerned feeding Siamese cats in my home while wating for the final congressional appropriation which was necessary before receiving final word of my acceptance as an official representative of America and the American-Way-of-Life in Brussels. Actually, I was taking a position as a glorified question answerer, most of the latter being "Where is the bathroom?"

Approximately 180 representatives of young America (ugh) sailed for Europe aboard the S.S. America on the 28th of March of last year. Among the 180 youths, there were wildly distorted conceptions of the future which lay ahead of us in Brussels. The other 50 didn't give a damn; they merely wanted a free trip to the continent. I still don't know whether to classify myself among the latter or not.

I must admit that the cross section was well crossed. There were guides from such places as Vermont, Georgia, Texas, Washington, Puerto Rico, and Hawaii. Awaiting our arrival in Belgium were 25 other guides who had been employed on the continent: Germans, Swiss, Portuguese, Dutch, etc. As soon as we boarded the ship, the coteries began to appear. Many of them lasted only to the end of the voyage, others to the end of the fair.

The counseling staff assigned us had prepared a comprehensive program of indoctrination which was supposed to activate our every moment. The well-laid plans were waylaid and the pooh-bahs were outflanked. Well, after all, whoever expected to keep 180 boys and girls in a classroom (even though the classroom was the ballroom in first class accomodations) while sailing to Europe. And besides that, the Captain informed us that we had the roughest trans-Atlantic crossing that he had experienced in 10 years. This was a fact of which we had no need to be reminded; many of the guides didn't see daylight until we arrived in Cobb, Ireland six days later. Seasickness was the order of the day and I lost several potential friends by eating two bowls of strawberries with steak and eggs for breakfast every morning.

Our crossing was probably as inebriated as any other, but one incident very nearly caused a congressional investigation. Several of us (I'm guilty) decided to have a little "let's sleep on the deck all night and see the sunrise" party. Besides having exceptionally rough seas, the weather was nippy and we naturally carried along several bottles of foot-warmer. About three a.m., one couple decided that they could no longer brave the elements and went below to warm up. Instead of going "properly" to their respective cabins, the innocents ended up in the Cabin Class bar and fell asleep on one of the couches therein. That morning they were discovered in said scandalous state by a puritan twosome from South Platt, North Dakota or thereabouts. Their indignation was heard by all before noon and a threat was made ot write several congressmen of the incident. "Are these the youths who are representating our country at Brussels?" After many apologies and official assurances by the high command that this wouldn't happen again, the puritan's fury was mitigated and an armistace was declared. We were more careful next time.

We arrived in Cobb a day late on the 4th of April. If one had ever read skeptically of the mist over the Irish lowlands in the early morning, their doubts were allayed that morning for it was as picturesque as reported. The sick ones edged carefully around the decks, looking anaemically cheerful. The rest of us ran higgledy-piggledy from port to starboard and bow to stern trying to make as much noise and chatter as possible. Irish brogues were prevalent until we approached the French coast the next morning.

We docked at Le Havre quite early on April 5, the day before Easter. Several of us began the day by shouting greetings in French to some workmen who were having croissants and wine for breakfast in a shabby building close by. Those who had never before been to Europe were ecstatically pleased with the thrill of seeing la France. Many of us who had lived on the continent previously were muttering promises to ourselves and each other about "never going home this time" and "I'll be in Paris by the middle of next week." There was a final shipboard breakfast, instructions by the commanding officers and tragic farewells to the few instructors who were returning immediately to New York. We left the ship and entered France.

Debarkations are always hectically confusing and ours was no exception. Loud voices and lost luggage about sums it up.

We finally boarded several busses for an all day journey to Brussels, singing songs in French accompanied by Hawaiian ukeleles. Our arrival that night was met by a large corps of newsmen who had expected us four hours earlier. They were very nearly as tired as we were, but everyobdy smiled cheerfully for the cameramen and answered their hundreds of questions. As we entered our apartments on avenue Stienon, we saw the blinking, geometric design of lights on the Atomium, the symbol of the Fair. This was our home from April 5, 1958 until October 19, 1958, the official end of the festivities.

Editor:

Last Sunday night, Dr. Francis Hooper paid a visit to Chapel Hill to perform in the Petites Musicales Concert. Dr. Hooper along with Mr. Efrim Fruchtmann and Mr. Wilton Mason gave a very interesting and refreshing performance of Baroque music. Mor MOST of the three hundred people who attended the concert, the music and its performance was quite satisfactory; however, Mr. Arthur Lessing was one of the few who were quite displeased with the performance.

In Mr. Lessing's case, it seems that his dislike of the music was so intense that it interfered with his ability to make a proper appraisal of the artistry of the performers. In his article, I could not always decide who he was criticizing, as first he would mention the irritating style of the composer and then the frightfully unintoresting performance of the artists. Throughout the article, he continually mixed in the obsoleteness of the instruments and the "inconsequential musical material" with his degrading evaluation of the artists.

Commenting on Dr. Hooper's playing of the recorder, Mr. Lessing said that the performance sounded like "a Boy Scout playing the National Anthem on his home-made whistle." This statement was indeed unealled for and showed Mr. Lessing's inability to give an analytic criticism. In calling the reader's attention to the "petite performance and irritating nasal sounds" of Mr. Fruchtmann's instrument, Mr. Lessing, whom I have heard is a cellist, failed to mention that the viola da gamba is an extremely difficult instrument to play and very hard to keep in tune. In addition to Mr. Lessing's brilliant criticisms, I marvel at his profound musical knowledge. The reviewer stated that Handel's Sonata No I was originally written for the flute and not the recorder. However, most musical historians consider that task of discovering which instrument the original was scored for, extremely difficult, and some say the work might even have been scored for an oboe.

I think that I can say without too much contradiction that many people enjoyed the same enthusiasm for the concert as I; and in the future, I would advise Mr. Lessing to remain at home or out in the invigorating Chapel Hill air when Baroque music is to be performed.

This past weekend, The School of Business Administration was visited by one of today's foremost journalists, Harry Ashmore, editor of the "Arkansas Gazette." Mr. Ashmore first gained nation-wide prominence by his courageous stand on the Little Rock integration controversy. Despite the opposition's attempts to boycott his paper, Ashmore remained firm in his fight for equal rights.

This reason, coupled with his uncompromising journalistic editorials, enabled him to receive the coveted Pulitzer Prize for Journalism. Since it is not an everyday affair for this university to play host to a man of Mr. Ashmore's stature, it was to be expected that the student body, together with the School of Business Administration, would be permitted to have an opportunity to hear his lectures.

Unfortunately, it seems this rare privilege is afforded only to cartoonists (Walt Kelly) and the like. While Mr. Kelly's cartoon strip holds a certain amount of fascination for everyone, I hardly think that his imoprtance in current affairs can quite compare with that of Mr. Ashmore's.

In Friday's "Daily Tar Heel" it was disclosed that the meeting was "closed to the public because of the small size of the room used." However, it was never explained why roomy Memorial Hall was not utilized for the occasion.

If such is the case, then why in the name of almighty Pogo did the School of Business Administration invite Harry Ashmore in the first place? For tea and crumpets? Why were only certain people permitted to be present at the press conference held afterwards? Do the moguls who run this Academy for the Sons of Gentlemen feel Mr. Ashmore's talk would go unappreciated by the majority of the student body? Probably so, but if only a few students could have benefited, I believe the sacrifice would have been worth it. Although the university has at various times encouraged students to attend such gatherings by inviting leaders in the fields of music and literature, this is one instance when the students were denied entrance. If the university feels our intellectual capacity is limited to the fields of "Pogo" and "Peanuts," then its usefullness has long been exhausted.

And so, as Harry Ashmore heads his weary bones back to the Ozarks, we, the forgotten students of Carolina, wave a belated farewell to our secreted visitor.

CIVIL RIGHTS

North, South Blast Bill

would have made the program even less palatable to the south.

In some respects, the Eisenhower program duplicates a civil rights measure offered by Johnson as well as one introduced by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill) on behalf of a bi-partisan group of liberals. But the administration program goes beyond either of these bills in some respects.

This is what it would do:

1. Make it a federal crime to use force or threats of force to obstruct court orders in school desegregation cases. The punishment would be up to two years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Eisenhower said this would plug a gap in present law and provide "a valuable enforcement power on which the government could rely to deter mob violence and such other acts of violence or threats."

2. Make it a federal offense—with a maximum penalty of $5,000 fine and five years imprisonment—for anyone who bombs or tries to bomb schools, churches or similar instiutions to flee across state lines. This would open the way for the FBI to step in.

3. Provide financial and technical help to make it eaier for states and communities to make the change-over from segregated to integrated schools. The cost for the next two fiscal yearsi s estimated at $4,895,000. The bulk of the money would have to be matched by the states. Grants would pay for extra professional people—supervisors, administrators, but no teachers.

4. Let the government educate children of military personnel who had been attending public schools that were closed in integration disputes. The government would be able to take over schools built with the aid of federal funds, although it would pay rental on them.

5. Require preservation of federal election records and authorize the justice department to inspect them. Eisenhower said a gap in the 1957 civil rights law, designed to safeguard voting privileges, needs to be plugged because some state and local authorities have refused to allow inspection of voting records.

6. Give a basis of law rather than presidential executive order to a government committee which polices non-discrimination clauses in government contracts. The Committee, now headed by Vice President Nixon, would become a commission with somewhat broader powers, such as authority to hold hearings.

7. Continue the civil rights commission for two years beyon its September expiration date.

Good Response Expected For Parent's Day

The undergraduates of N. C. Delta of Sigma Phi Epsilon are expecting more than 50 parents and friends Sunday for the chapter's first annual Parents' Day.

Tucker Renfrow, the chapter activities chairman, said that the day's events would be the biggest and best ever held at the house with the Red Door, 207 West Cameron. He said the afternoon's program will include speeches by fraternity officers, both local and national, an open house, and lunch for the guests.

Attending will be Mr. and Mrs. Sam Magill, Ray Jeffries, chapter faculty advisor Dr. Charles Henderson, chapter counsellor Curtiss Daughtry, Sig Ep grand secretary Bedford Black, and Sig Ep district governor Elwood D. Clinard.

The parents will be told the details of the chapter's operations with regard to the alumni and its financial structure by Bob Goodwin, president of the Alumni Board. Bedford W. Black, grand officer and newly-elected representative from Cabarrus county, will describe the national operation.

Rush chairman Phil Nash will tell the parents about the local chapter and its policies, traditions and events. Special emphasis will be given the social picture, including invitations to the pledge dance, which will be held Feb. 14.

Woollen Gym seats only about 5,000 fans, necessitating the rotation of available basketball game tickets among the student body. Since enrollment is rapidly increasing at the University, this seating problem will become more acute as the years go by.

As well as providing relief for the basketball game seating problem, the new coliseum could be available for large indoor gatherings such as commencement ceremonies.

Other business discussed at the Council meeting included the date for Homecoming (football) Game which is scheduled for the October 31 game with Tennessee.

University Athletic Director Chuck Erickson said that the Council decided that further negotiation will be made to insure that the football games and basketball games next year will be covered by broadvision (video over WUNC-TV, audio over commercial radio networks.)

Emotional Disturbances Are Main Health Concern

Some 200 persons from throughout North Carolina, interested in occupational health, were told Thursday at the School of Medicine that emotional disturbances affect more people than all other illnesses put together.

The speaker was Dr. Alan McLean, psychiatrist for the International Business Machines Corporation of New York. Dr. McLean was speaking before the one-day third annual Governor's Conference on Occupational Health.

"Far more workers lose their jobs because of personality problems than because of a lack of skill or technical knowledge," Dr. McLean said. "Projections to the future from the recent past indicate that one of each 12 of us is destined to spend some part of his life in a mental hospital. Most of us, so elected, will fulfill this destiny during our working years—an obvious loss to our industrial productivity. Indeed, we recognize that there is more absenteeism because of emotional disorders than because of the common cold."

Dr. McLean explained that this increasingly recognized threat to its smooth operation has caused industry, and more recently psychiatrist, to take a more searching look at the emotionally uncomfortable and frequently disatisfied worker. This worker brings his disturbance into the plant with resultant disarmony, production lags and interpersonal skirmishes.

The psychiatrist said the cost to industry of disruption resulting from emotional disturbances among employees, supervisors and executives runs into hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

"In the business world," according to Dr. McLean, "the psychiatrist's main job is the simulation of mental health, more than the treatment of mental illness. I think of the psychiatrist in industry as working in the field of preventive psychiatry. Psychiatry contributes to management additional understanding of individuals at work, that management may in turn handle its people better."

It was pointed out by Dr. McLean that psychiatrist hired by management—whether on a daily basis, on a half-time basis, or as a full time employee—is apt to divide his activities into three parts.

First, he will usually spend the lion's share of his time in a variety of clinical activities, seeing individual employees when they have emotional disturbances.

Third, and perhaps most important to management, Dr. McLean said, are the useful insights the psychiatrist can provide management through the application of mental health research—a look at the various aspects of the business which may adversely affect the health of the employees.

Streaking Tar Heels Meet Duke At Durham Tonight

Carolina Carries 13-1 Record Into Contest

By RUSTY HAMMOND

DURHAM — Two of the year's most surprising teams, in addition to being two of the most heated rivals in the country, tangle here tonight when Carolina's once-beaten Tar Heels invade Duke Indoor Stadium to take on Duke's sophomore-laden Blue Devils.

The Tar Heels, ranked second nationally by both major polls, come into the contest with a phenomenal 13-1 record. Carolina's latest triumph came Wednesday night when they polished off defending ACC champ Maryland 64-57 in Chapel Hill.

Both Hot After Exams

Both squads have swept through three straight opponents since emerging from the exam lay-off. Duke smashed Maryland, conked Pitt, and beat South Carolina.

In addition to the Maryland win, the Tar Heels have whipped South Carolina and Clemson since exams.

Duke's newest gun, 6-6 Carrol Youngkin, outscored Pittsburgh All-American Don Hennon 35-31 in the Devil victory. But the Duke high scoring ace is another soph, Howard Hurt, who is 4th in the conference with a 14.8 average.

Carolina's York Larese, another figure in the parade of sophs, poured in 32 points against the Terps to gain the season high for the Tar Heels. Larese is second high man in the ACC with a 15.4 percentage (before the Maryland game) and has over a 50 per cent accuracy mark.

All of the potent Tar Heels are averaging in double figures, and the group as a team leads the conference in team offense.

Heels Lead ACC

Carolina is the ACC loop leader with a perfect 8-0 record. The Tar Heel win over Maryland pushed Duke into third place with a 5-4 mark. The Devils are 9-8 overall.

The Blue Devils last year conquered the Tar Heels both in Durham and in Chapel Hill, using their "Iron Five," all of which graduated.

Tonight's battle will be the first meeting this season of the two teams. Duke's entire starting lineup is composed of sophomores.

Last year's game between Duke and Carolina at Durham ended in a near riot when the Carolina players had to be escorted from the floor after the game by police.

Wednesday night, just after his Tar Heels had beaten Maryland 64-57, Coach Frank McGuire was asked if he though they had improved much since exams. "Well," he said, "I really don't know. We've won three straight and I've been satisfied, but we haven't really been challenged yet.'"

Later on, another writer asked, "Do you think you'll get that challenge when you play Duke Friday night?" McGuire didn't even hesitate in answering "yes."

Both he and assistant coach Dean Smith have scouted the Blue Devils extensively this year, and they agree on the results." Their strongest points,'" said McGuire, "are rebounding and shooting. They have a real good shooting team."

Doug Moe, who was on the doubtful list before the Maryland game due to an injured foot, was slightly under par for the Terp game. Moe scored only 4 points. In McGuire's words, "He was about half as effective as he should have been."

Moe will be much needed tonight, and we hope he'll be in top form. He had two great nights down at Charlotte before the injury shackled him Wednesday night.

The opponents for tonight, Duke's young Blue Devils, should present exactly the challenge that McGuire predicted. They have come on fast after a somewhat shaky beginning. For instance, when they played Maryland at College Park they got slaughtered but did an exact about face in Durham two weeks ago.

★ ★ ★

The Devil starting line-up is last year's freshman team intact. That same squad whipped the Tar Babies regularly. The thing is, they have now played together so much that eventually they will cause some real trouble—maybe tonight, maybe in the ACC tournament.

Their latest and greatest effort came when they smashed powerful Pitt at Durham, with Carrol Youngkin outscoring all-American Don Hennon 35-31.

The Dukes are now, and always have been, extremely tough to beat on their home court. Two years ago they knocked off mighty Kentucky in Durham, and last year they stopped potent West Virginia.

In the opinion of Frank McGuire, a team has to win "on the road" to be a great team. Such was the case with the Miracle Team of 1957, and such seems to be the case with this edition of the Tar Heels.

They beat State College, ranked number 1 at that time, right under their noses, and have also whipped such powers as Northwestern, Notre Dame, and Cincinnati while on the road.

York Larese, who gunned in 32 points Wednesday night, shapes up as one of the best shooters in the entire nation. Larese, in addition to his high scoring aveage, is hitting above 50% of shots taken. He has a soft, but deadly, touch from anywhere outside; this opponents have learned the hard way.

From the New York Times comes word that departed State stars Mark Reiner and Stan Niewerowski will probably not return to school. They were, according to the Times, disappointed with State as a school. This is a blow that Ev Case's crew will have a hard time recovering from. Case had thought they would probably return in time for classes, but such was not the "case."

After tonight's game at Duke, the basketball team will be idle over the week-end, so we'd like to suggest students take in some other athletic events. Here Saturday will be a swimming meet with Florida, with at Easey's crew seeking to retain their 26-meet win streak. Saturday night in Woollen Gym, Sam Barnes' wrestlers entertain West Virginia, a team Carolina has never beaten.

These events will be interesting, and everyone knows a team performs better with a little support. So, why not go down and support the other Carolina teams the way basketball is supported.

Anyone interested in becoming a football manager for the coming season is asked to get in touch with either Allan Daniels at 8-9032 or Wilkes Colman at 8-9093.

DANGEROUS DEVIL—Howard Hurt, 4th highest scorer in the ACC, is a dangerous man from the outside. Hurt leads his Blue Devil mates against the Tar Heels tonight in Durham.

Mural Basketball At Mid-Point

As the Intramural Basketball season turns the corner and heads for the home stretch, it is apparent that there will be many team that will be fighting down to the wire for first place position in the league.

At mid-season all of the defending champions are battling for the crown, but are up against stiff competition.

In the 6 Dormitory leagues 12 teams are still undefeated. These are: Winston 1, Cobb A, Parker 2, Avery, Graham 1, Cobb C. Manly, Stacy, Joyner 1, Winston 2, Mangum, and Ruffin 1.

There are also 6 leagues in the Fraternity White division. In these leagues at mid-season there are 10 undefeated teams. Namely, they are: PiKA 3, Sig Nu 1, Zeta Psi 1, Phi Delt 2, Kap Sig 1, Chi Psi 1, SAE 1, DKE 2, Phi Delt 1, and Chi Psi 2.

There are 8 teams representing the 5 leagues in the Fraternity Blue division. These are: SAE, Zeta Psi, Lamb Chi, Beta ATO, Phi Delt, Kap Sig, Sig Nu.

Finally, in the Graduate division there are only two leagues. In these two leagues there have emerged 4 undefeated teams at mid-season. These are: Med Sch 3, Hist. Sch, Med Sch 4, and Law Sch 1.

A total of 34 teams have gone through the mid-season undefeated, thus illustrating that there is going to be some fast and rough basketball through the remainder of the season.

Tar Babies Battle Blue Imps

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Tar Baby cagers end a frantic week of activity tonight in Durham when they take on the Duke freshmen prior to the varsity contest. For Dean Smith's frosh tonight's engagement marks their fifth game in the last seven days and leaves them with only four more dates for the rest of the season.

The Duke freshmen are the only Big Four squad which the Tar Babies have not faced. Unlike State and Wake Forest who the Tar Babies play three times, the frosh face Duke but twice with the final meeting being scheduled for February 28.

Wilmington Latest Victim

Wednesday night the Tar Babies came within one point of matching their seasonal high as they overpowered Wilmington Junior College 99-85. The Carolina frosh reached the 100 mark in their first game of the year when they defeated Hargrave Military Academy.

Against Wilmington the freshmen were led in the scoring column by Don Walsh who set a seasonal high for individual shooting by tossing in 33 points. Walsh got 12-22 from the floor, many on driving layups, and 9-10 at the foul line to give him his total output.

Poteet Gets 24

Walsh's backcourt mate Yogi Poteet rebounded from the poor evening he had against State Tuesday when he scored but one point and racked up 24 markers against Wilmington. Jim Hudock also had a good night as he hit on 9 of 14 from the floor and added 5 from the foul line for 23 points.

When the Tar Babies take their 7-3 mark against the Blue Devils they will find themselves in the unaccustomed position of possessing the superior height. Duke's tallest man is 6-5 center Dale Wittner. Supporting Wittner, the Blue Devils have several 6-4 and 6-3 forwards.

The Duke frosh were defeated in their last outing by Wake Forest who humbled them 88-44. In their two meetings to date the Tar Babies and Wake Forest have split, Wake winning the first 77-59 and Carolina the second 64-60.

Outing Club Formed Here

"We, the undersigned, desiring to secure the benefits and pleasures from outdoor activities such as camping, hunting, fishing, boating, hiking, and to further the name of the University in all our activities, do hereby constitute ourselves the University of North Carolina Outing Club and do enact this constitution as our governing law."

This passage is the preamble of the newly written constitution of the UNC Outing Club.

The Outing Club activities are to begin with a membership meeting which will be held on February 9 at 7:00 in room 303 Woollen Gym. At this meeting the newly proposed member will receive their membership cards. These cards have the new seal of the Outing Club imprinted in them.

The seal or official emblem consists of a pine bough encircled by the letters UNC Outing Club, which is done in Carolina blue.

The guest speaker for this meeting will be Dr. Sam Knight. He will talk informally on camping. Having traveled extensively through the United States, Dr. Knight is well advised on camping.

Prior to Dr. Knight's talks, a short business meeting will be held to elect officers, take in members, and ratify the new constitution. Also at the meeting some preliminary plans will be made for the Regata at Buggs Island with a water skiing tournament to be held. Other plans will also be made for the Spring Semester.

There have been 35 applications made for the Outing Club, and may be obtained at the Intramural Office. The UNC Outing Club will be affiliated with the Intercollegiate Outing Club Association.

A Campus-to-Career Case History

Still under 30...and he supervises 400 people

In the telephone company men with ability move along quickly into important supervisory positions. Take the case of David C. Karlen, for example.

Dave was hired by the New York Telephone Company right after graduation in June, 1954. For seven months he received rotational training to familiarize him with the various departments of the company. Then Uncle Sam borrowed him for 25 months.

He returned in February, 1957, and completed his training. In June, he was made Traffic Superintendent of some small telephone exchanges outside Utica. He gained valuable experience in handling people, planning work loads, and many other supervisory duties.

In June, 1958, Dave moved to Plattsburg — also as Traffic Superintendent, but with far greater responsibilities. Here, he is directly responsible for seven telephone offices over 4000 square miles. Fourteen management people and 400 operators are under his supervision.

"A campus interview started me on my telephone career," says Dave. "The opportunities with the telephone company sounded terrific — and they have been. What's more, you get excellent training to prepare you for new job assignments."

Dave Karlen graduated from St. Lawrence University with a B.S. degree. He is one of many young men who are finding rewarding careers in the Bell Telephone Companies. Find out about opportunities for you. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he next visits your campus. And read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office.

Legislature Passes SP Bill

By STAN BLACK

The Student Legislature made the first move in a projected reorganization of student government when it passed Jim Crownover's (SP) bill establishing a Campus Affairs Board.

The Board, as constituted in the bill passed Thursday night, will consist of 10 members and a chairman appointed by the president of the student body. Its chief functions will be the selection of chairmen and members of the numerous temporary and semi-permanent committees dealing with campus affairs and the supervision and coordination of the work of these committees.

Student Body President Don Furtado, in commenting on the establishment of the Board, said, "This new group is one of the first moves in our necessary reorganization of student government.

"As our campus expands, it becomes necessary to consolidate some of the many committees under some coordinating chairman in order that communication between the various elements of the student body continued without loss of efficiency." and the executive offices may be

In other action Thursday night the Legislature finally killed the Levy bill for letters to the governors of Arkansas and Virginia.

Norman Smith (Ind.) was elected President Pro Tempore of the body by acclamation to fill a vacancy created by the resignation of Gary Greer from the Legislature. Another vacancy was filled by the election of Ann Lucas to the chairmanship of the Rules Committee.

New business included a bill introduced by Harold O'Tuel on behalf of Norman Smith on behalf of Davis Young on behalf of the sophomore class to appropriate $30 to the sophomore class for administrative needs. A bill to prohibit elected student government officials from holding seats in the student legislature was also introduced by O'Tuel for Norman Smith.

Dave Jones (SP) introduced two bills, one for appropriation of $200 to the University Club for planning and publicity and one authorizing the club to sell advertising in anticipation of the publication of the 1959 "University Club Handbook."

Bob Thompson introduced a bill to appropriate $20 for the purpose of printing bills for the Legislature.

Students To 'Lobby'

Members of the Committee on State Affairs will carry out a project began last year of informing legislators about University needs, such as increased faculty salaries and a new student union.

Norman Smith, chairman of the Committee on State Affairs, said yesterday members of the committee had been invited by several legislators to attend the Feb. 16 session of the General Assembly.

Smith also announced that several committee members will participate in the WUNC-TV "Ideas" program Wednesday at 10 p.m. to discuss their activities. Student Body President Don Furtado will join the committee members on this show.

The appearance of committee members and Furtado on "Ideas" will be the first time students have participated in that program. Program moderator will be Elmer Oettinger.

Doug Moe Leads Heels With 32 As Carolina Makes Comeback

By RUSTY HAMMOND

DURHAM — Sparked by sensational sophomore Doug Moe, who poured in 24 points in the second half, and wound up with 32, Carolina came from as much as 11 points behind to whip Duke's young Blue Devils 89-80 here last night.

Moe, who was moved to pivot early in the second half, just couldn't miss as he ripped the cords with lay-ups and turn shots.

Duke left the dressing room at half time the owner of a nine-point lead at 42-33. In the initial half, the Heels couldn't do anything right, but Duke could do no wrong.

Carolina led only twice during the entire first half, at 17-15 and 20-19. Duke jumped off to a quick lead, and built it to 7 at 11-4. Then Carolina rallied to tie things up at 15-15, 17-17, and 19-19.

With 6:00 left on the clock, and the score knotted at 25-25, Howard Hurt hit two jump shots and a free throw, and Carroll Youngkin and Jack Boyd hit one basket each to boost a nine-point spread at 34-25. In the streak, the Devils outscored the Tar Heels 9-0.

Carolina came roaring back on to the floor after half time with Moe leading the way. After Shaffer's follow shot made it 44-34 Duke, Moe took personal charge. The blond youngster racked up 11 straight points to pull his mates within one point, then Shaffer's two free tosses put the Heels ahead for the first time in the half at 53-52 with 14:15 left.

Carolina then spurted to a 63-58 margin, but the Dukes came right back and on two quick baskets by Hurt went back into the lead 66-64. The lead changed back and forth until Duke led for the last time at 69-68 on John Frye's jump.

From there the Tar Heels hit a hot streak and valted to a 75-69 lead, Moe getting three of the six points. The Heels then built their lead steadily as the Duke big man Carroll Youngkin fouled out.

Larese's lay up and free throw gave Carolina its biggest margin at 85-74, and from there it was all over but the shouting.

The most amazing thing about Moe's performance was that he played the entire second half with four fouls on his back.

Moe was held to only four points in his last appearance, largely due to an injured foot.

Freshmen Choose Cabinet

Twenty-four freshman were selected by the freshman class officers to serve on the Freshman Cabinet upon completion of interviews Thursday afternoon.

They will meet with the class officers Thursday, Feb. 12, at 6:30 p.m. in room 203 of the Alumni Building to discuss what areas the Cabinet will work in at first.

Clark Named To Board

Dr. Henry T. Clark Jr., administrator of the UNC Division of Health Affairs, was re-elected to the board of the American Nurses' Foundation on Feb. 3, in New York.

Agnes E. M. Anderson, R. N., of Orlando, Florida was elected president.

The American Nurses' Foundation is a membership corporation established by the American Nurses' Association to support and conduct research in nursing. Officers and other board members are elected for two year terms.

Sophomores To Sponsor Scholarship

In an Executive Cabinet meeting yesterday afternoon, the officers of the sophomore class decided to direct their future efforts towards the establishment of a scholarship fund.

Sophomore President Davis Young said that the scholarship would be named for a prominent North Carolinian, but declined to disclose his name.

He said that as soon as certain details are ironed out and the University Administration has had a chance to approve the undertaking, the name of the person for whom the scholarship is being established will be revealed.

Several fund raising ideas are being checked at this time. Young announced that solicitation for the scholarship will be conducted on a statewide basis as well as here on campus.

He said that on Tuesday night, Durham newspaper editor Bob Pace will meet with the officers and tell them of his ideas for raising funds for the project.

In conjunction with this, the Executive Cabinet has made a request to the Student Legislature for an appropriation to be used for publicizing the scholarship fund.

The bill for this was introduced Thursday night in the Legislature by Representative Harold O'Tuel (SP).

In other business at the regular meeting of the sophomore officers it was decided to check into the possibility of having an outdoor dance in the spring, the proceeds of which would be directed to the previously mentioned scholarship fund.

Young also announced that letters have been sent out to one sophomore in each residence hall on campus. These people will meet on Tuesday, Feb. 24, with the officers and will act as liaison agents to the rest of the class members.

Young further announced that Charlie Graham (UP) will act as an assistant to the president and will have the status of a class officer. Explaining this he said, "After talking with Charlie, I have decided that his services will be in-

Joseph Sloan Accepts Art Dept. Chairmanship

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

Joseph Sloane, who was chairman of the Art Department at Bryn Mawr College for 20 years, has accepted the corresponding position at UNC. He replaced Kenneth Ness, who was serving as acting chairman, approximately two weeks ago.

In addition to his work at Bryn Mawr, his experience in the art world has included being assistant curator of the Cooper Union Museum in New York, instructing in the Department of Art and Archaeology at Princeton and teaching at Rutgers University.

He is a past president of the College Art Association of America; on the advisory council of the Department of Art and Archaeology at Princeton and a member of the New Committee of the American Council of Learned Societies, a committee to study the relation of secondary schools to universities.

Besides his work as chairman of the Art Department, Sloane is teaching one graduate seminar this semester.

Sloane "couldn't be more enthusiastic" about the UNC Art Department and Ackland Art Museum. He said that very few schools in the country have the physical equipment to compare with UNC. He is very pleased with Ackland being a departmental museum.

When asked about his own artistic talents, Sloane answered, "Terrible!"" He added that, although he is primarily an art historian, he is equally interested in both sides of the department and feels that the department has many able artists on the staff.

Sloane, his wife and one of their two daughters are now living in Chapel Hill. The older daughter is a sophomroe at Wellesley.

Student Cleared Of Cheating

'Cheating Ring' Investigation Ends With Not Guilty Verdict

By CURTIS GANS

One student, charged with complicity in a cheating establishment, was cleared Thursday night in a Men's Honor Council trial that lasted two nights.

The student, a roommate of the ex-student who is alleged to have sold keys to faculty offices, declared himself innocent, and that he had no knowledge that any real wrongdoing was taking place. He thought, at the time, the whole matter was a joke.

He commended Attorney-General Dick Robinson for his fairness in the handling of the case.

Principal Gone

The student who had engaged in selling office keys is no longer in school.

Evidence was presented which showed that two freshmen heard about exams being for sale reported to the Honor Council, and were asked by one member of the Honor Council to pursue investigation by attempting to purchase examinations.

Apparently no examinations were ever produced, but on the night before a Spanish examination, the student gave a key to the two freshmen, although the defendant said that he did not know about his roommate's action.

The first night of trial was devoted to presenting the prosecution argument, while the defense was carried over into the second night. Attorneys for the defense were Dave Biren, member of the Attorney General's staff and Ken Friedman.

Ex-Student Key

It was apparent from the trial that the ex-student was the key to the whole mysery, and that the case would never finally be solved until he could be contacted. It was also clear from both the verdict and the facts brought out that the student on trial was not in violation of either the letter or spirit of the code.

The defendant pointed out how he and other students faked an exam robbery, once they ascertained that those attempting to buy exams were connected with the Honor Council. Both the defendant and the other students were not in he same place that night as the defendant's roommate.

Titan Launching Goes Smoothly On Third Try

CAPE CANAVERAL, FLA., — (UP) —A powerful Titan ICBM roared skyward yesterday after two earlier failures to get the big war rocket off the ground.

The 90-foot Titan, which could play a key role in U. S. plans to match Russian intercontinental range ballistic missile claims, made its fiery launching debut at 4:22 p.m. (EST).

The liftoff appeared to be successful to observers at the Cape. Twice before, on Dec. 20 and last Tuesday, Titan ignited on the pad but on both occasions the engine died a split second before liftoff.

The two-stage missile rose straight up for minutes before arching overhead and streaking toward the southeast. A long plume of white fire flowed in the missile's wake.

The Titan is the first of a new series of "second generation rockets" which will bolster the nation's missile arsenal. The Air Force says its newest ICBM should be more powerful and less complex than the present Atlas which has been in the flight test stage for more than a year.

The Titan's range has been estimated by missilemen as high as 9,000 miles.

For the initial test, the 36-foot second stage of the rocket was inactive. Several thousand gallons of water were carried in place of fuel.

The Martin Co., builder of the rocket, considered the shoot a triumph as soon as the missile blasted skyward. It was learned that 90 per cent of the test objectives were accomplished once the missile left the pad.

More than 300,000 pounds of thrust was generated by the first stage engine as soon as the crucial countdown hit zero.

If all goes well in the program,

21 Appointed To Symposium Committee

Twenty-one new members were chosen Thursday for the Carolina Symposium Committee. The new members were selected from a field of 50 applicants.

Chairman Al Goldsmith said the applicants were so outstanding that the selection process was most difficult.

"Those who were not selected should not be discouraged. The interviewing committee felt that all who applied had the qualifications for work with the Carolina Symposium. There will be a need for more Symposium workers next fall.

"I would like to extend my most sincere congratulations to those who were selected," Goldsmith said. "With such students running the 1960 Carolina Symposium I do not see how it can be anything but the best Symposium yet."

The new Symposium members are: Bob Baynes, Earl Leitess, Charles Pittman, David Grigg, Dave Evans, Claudia Lipscomb, Maxine Greenfield, Norman Smith, Mardi Bardwell, Mary Margaret Durham, Gordan Street.

RING SALE

Although the sale of Carolina class rings officially ended Thursday, Danny Lotz said yesterday he will take any ring order from students who contact him in his dormitory, 101 Teague.

Lotz, chairman of the ring sale for the Order of the Grail, said the next big sale will be held in Y Court around April 1.

During the two-day sale this week, more than 330 students ordered class rings, Lotz said.

UNC Symphonic Ensemble To Present Wind Concert

The UNC Symphonic Wind ensemble, Herbert Fred conducting, will present a concert in Hill Hall Friday, Feb. 13, at 8 p.m.

Appearing as gues soloist with the 44 woodwind, brass, and percussion players will be Gordon Finlay, solo cornetist with the United States Navy Band.

Organized by UNC band director, Herbert Fred, the all-student ensemble consists of nearly every wind instrument employed by the modern symphonic orchestra and band. In addition to the usual complement of woodwinds, a bass clarinet and a contra bass clarinet are used. All the brass instruments are included, and five percussion instruments are represented. One string bass will be included.

Finlay occupies first chair with the U. S. Navy Band and conducts the band's Ceremonial Detachment. He accepts many conducting assignments each year and has composed numerous marches and cornet trios which the band features extensively in its tours.

A native of Portland, Ore., the cornetist studied music at Oregon State College and at the Universities of Oregon and Idaho. He has been director of instrumental music for Salem, Ore.; director of band at Oregon College in Monmouth; and supervisor of music in Nyssa, Ore.

In addition to his duties with the Navy Band which he joined during World War II, Finlay has continued his interest in music education through frequent appearances as guest soloist or conductor at insrumental clinics. His appearance here is through the courtesy of Burrage Music Company of Raleigh.

The Feb. 13 program, which marks the opening of a three-day Band Clinic in Hill Hall, includes the following works written or transcribed for wind ensemble: "American Overture" by J. W. Jenkins; "Symphony for Band" by V. Persichetti; Overture to "Marriage of Figaro" by Mozart-Slocum; "Commando March" by S. Barber; Finale from "Symphony No. 1 in G Minor" by V. S. Kallinikov; "Hungarian Melodies," a cornet solo by Vincent Bach; and "Tulsa (A Symphonic Portait in Oil)" by Don Gillis.

The Weather Will Change, Stick Around

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

If you don't like the weather in North Carolina, just stick around a few minutes—it'll change.

That old saying has been ably demonstrated by Chapel Hil weather the last few days, and just to prove its point, more changes are in sight, according to the weather bureau at the Raleigh-Durham airport.

The warm air which began moving into Chapel Hill Thursday is apparently going to move right out again and the weather bureau is predicting a drop in temperatures along with the clouds.

Cosmopolitan Club

The Cosmopolitan Club's International Dinner is a sell out.

Dinner chairman Sipra Bose reported Thursday that around 182 tickets have been sold to the dinner today at 6:30 p.m. in the basement of the University Baptist Church.

Food from foreign countries will be included on the menu.

Orientation Interviews Still On

Three Carolina students have applied for Orientation Chairman, Student Body President Don Furtado said Friday. Other applications will be received through Tuesday in the student government office.

Jim Crownover, Hugh Patterson and David Parker have already applied for the position, Furtado said. Both Patterson and Parker have previously served on the Orientation Committee.

Interviews with all applicants will be conducted Wednesday afternoon by Furtado, former Orientation Chairman Herman Godwin, former women's Orientation Chairman Katie Stewart and Student Body Vice President Ralph Cummings.

Furtado will announce the appointment at Thursday's meeting of Student Legislature, which will act on the appointment.

UP To Fill Legislature Vacancies

The Student Legislature is shrinking.

The University Party will fill vacancies left by resignations of four UP representatives to the governing body at its meeting Tuesday night in Roland Parker I and II at 7:15.

Positions are open in districts where the following have resigned: Doug Kellam, Town Women; Larry McIver, Town Men's III; Bob Turner, Town Men's I, and Jimmy Williams, Town Men's II.

Anyone interested in representing one of these disricts has been invited to the meeting Tuesday night.

UP will also discuss the date of nominations and forthcoming campaign policies as well as revise the nominating procedures.

STUDENTS ASKED TO DONATE

Hospital Needs Blood

The North Carolina Memorial Hospital needs blood—and Carolina students have been requested to donate.

Most of the blood will be used for heart operations in which the "artificial heart" is used.

These operations are of the type that the patient's own heart cannot operate during the surgery and the blood must be pumped through their body artifically, according to Dr. Richard M. Peters, associate professor of surgery in charge of thoracic (heart and lung) surgery.

Most of these patients are children, although there are some adults. Approximately 15 pints of blood are needed for each of these operations and the blood must be donated the day of surgery.

Dr. Peters explained that in a community the size of Chapel Hill it is difficult for a family to find that many donors of the correct type. This is one of the reasons the students have been asked to donate blood.

Another reason is that, while many hospitals have lists of "professional" donors, few families can afford the $250 that the blood for the heart operations would cost.

"Students are ideal donors," said Dr. Peters, "because they are not likely to have contacted the diseases that make it undesirable to use their blood."

Before blood is donated it must be typed. Students who wish to donate may be typed at the hospital on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons until 3:30. The hospital will send them identification cards.

If the hospital needs them to donate blood they will be called several days beforehand. "The blood will be taken early in the morning and they should be out of here in about 30 minutes," said Edward K. Tuohy, supervisor of the blood bank.

Students who weigh under 110 pounds cannot ordinarily be blood donors, according to Tuohy. However, those who weigh between 100 and 110 may be needed to give small amounts (less than a pint) for babies and burned children.

People who have had a transfusion within the last six months may not donate.

The legal age limit for donating blood in North Carolina is 18. Those students who are between 18 and 21 must have their parents' permission. Permission cards may be obtained at the Blood Bank.

Legislature

The Student Legislature Thursday night held a meeting notable for many things. It was notable for the lack of parliamentary knowledge on the part of its entire membership, for its lack of courage on the Levy bill, for its concern with the less important, and for some member's desire not to let free and open debate be allowed.

In general, one wonders when one looks at this session where the Student Legislature has fallen to, and whether it will ever have the strength to resurrect itself from the depths to which it had plunged. Perhaps on future issues of educational importance, it will have more courage and assume more responsibility towards the whole of society than it has thus far demonstrated. Maybe it can be done, but it is probable that the observer will have to wait until next semester.

A Coliseum

The Chancellor displayed excellent judgement concerning a new coliseum-armory building by leaving this out of the budget request. It is especially noteworthy in the context of having every sportswriter in the state breathing down the University's neck, as well as pressure being generated by alumni groups.

Everyone knows Woollen Gymnasium is obsolete, and everyone knows that with the predicted growth of the University that soon Memorial Hall will be inadequate as an auditorium. Equally true is the fact that as long as Carolina continues to have excellent basketball teams, the demand for the limited supply of seats to the games will be greater and greater.

However, for once somebody has put things in this University in perspective—that this is primarily an academic institution existing for the students and faculty with the alumni and state leaders taking a secondary position. With this standard of values in mind, it is imperative that the University put things related to academic affairs and to student welfare uppermost in their budgetary thinking.

Hence, when one looks at the mass of temporary five inviting buildings on the campus and the inadequacies in space in such departments as geography, geology, and psychology, it becomes abundantly clear that these needs are of primary importance. When one looks at the diminutive size of the present Student Union, at its poor location with respect to the mainstream of the campus, and to its lack of recreational facilities, one can be quite sure that this takes priority.

When one looks at the difficulties University architects have to live with in planning new dormitory facilities and when one sees that within these limitations they are able to do only a very little about sound control, the need for better dormitory construction at a higher per student rate with less self-liquidation becomes all too evident.

When one can compare faculty salary ranges with that of other schools of quality in the nation and when one compares teacher-student ratios, one is forced into the conclusion that greatly expanded resources are necessary so that North Carolina can have the faculty it wants.

The editor is not opposed to a coliseum. Indeed, he would like to see one, as a toast McGuire, as an opportunity for athletics to pay its ways without taxing the students anything, for the facilities that would benefit the student body and alumni in seating, and in providing a place for minor sports. But at the present time there are so many things that are more important, and these will have to take priority.

It may or may not be a consideration in the next biennium as to whether the coliseum should be built from state funds. In the meantime, private capital should be secured. Perhaps it can all be privately financed. While this is going on, those alumni who think that the way the University can be noted throughout the country is through its athletic prowess, ought to peddle their childish toys someplace else.

Hooray!

Everybody went out into the cold weather last Tuesday and voted and now Chapel Hill is soon to be a legal home for all kinds of delicious beverages.

Gone will be the days of:

"So would I, but we haven't got a way to Durham."

And:

"The Zeta Theta fraternity served mixed cocktails consisting of champale and draught beer, due to the fact that none of the brothers could get to wet territory this afternoon. The party was an awful flop."

And:

"Mommy, when are we going to have Vat 69 again?"

"Shut up, and drink your beer."

Of course, there will be a few unhappy advocates of Temperance who will stalk around under their dark umbrellas to protect themselves from their wet surroundings. They will proclaim that Chapel Hill has become an alcoholic sin center, but the fact remains that all the taxes wayward college kids have been paying to Durham will now go to build better schools for Chapel Hill children.

And even DOCTORS recommend certain ABC store products for the prevention of neuralgia, neuroses, and halitosis. Everybody knows that.

So, all in all, most people in the area are happy for one reason or another over the new law.

However, as one gentleman of the old school put it: "You college kids have it too easy. I hear they're even giving you all legalized liquor now. In my day things were more of a challenge. You lived in terms of the risks you took. There was the risk of getting caught in the speakeasy on Saturday night. And then, with the kind of whisky we had, there was always the risk of going blind."

Would anyone like a drink? The ice is in the kitchen and the drinks are down at the corner ABC store.

Registration

P. W. Carlton

Registration comes but twice a year, thank goodness. At these periods students become animals and teachers are fiends from Hades sent to torture the unfortunate victims of their machinations.

On the day of registration, the wise Carolina man girds himself for the ensuing conflict. Item: 1 pint of vodka in flask for the left hip pocket; 1 pint of scotch in flask for the right hip pocket. (The second bottle keeps the load balanced and is handy for drinking a "toddy for the body" with some harassed colleague. Around the waist is slung a money belt crammed with Daddy's loot, for use as bribes and such incidentals as tuition and fees. Some of the intrepid mob wear small earphones, for the purpose of arousing sympathy among officials engaged in the registration process. These are actually attached to cunningly concealed transistor radios, which help to pass the tedious hours in line. Others fill their pockets with chicken breasts, biscuits, tomato soup, etc., so as to maintain peak operating efficiency.

The students fearfully approach the building where their fate for the semester will be revealed. Choosing one of the lines which start up Raleigh street in front of Alexander dorm, the unhappy souls quiety wait as the stream of humanity inches down to the gym. As they approach the front door of the gym—front door—hey, registration goes on through the side doors. Wrong line—this one is for tickets to a basketball game. Well, that's one hour shot, let's try for three, ruminate the chagrined group as they amble around to the proper line. Eventually gaining admission to the building proper, the would-be registrees are awed by the sight of low-hanging clouds of cigarette smoke, the rumble of conversation and the fluctuating body of protoplasm therein.

At one row of tables, wearing shoulder holsters and smoking black cigars, advisors hold kangaroo court, dealing impartial justice to all comers. Biology majors wind up taking 10 hours of Music, English majors are forced to take gross anatomy and Embryology. Dramatic Art personnel are assigned to highly edifying courses in truck farm management and steel mill supervision. Eventually, through pleading and cojoling, most of these mistakes are rectified. Of course an occasional imprudent soul is gunned down by infuriated advisory personnel. This is the exception, rather than the rule, however.

Students sign papers and documents by the bushel. A few are taken in by the cunning of a navy recuriter and, while attempting to sign automobile registration, find themselves enrolled for a two-year cruise on the U.S.S. Coalbucket, DD [31¼. Eventually the nefarious practices of the old salt are discovered and he is ushered quickly outside.

As the weary student attempts to exit from the smoky madhouse, he must run the gauntlet of solicitors from various campus organizations, all of whom want his money. The Garden Club, Alcoholics Unanimous, Arboretum Occupiers Propagation Society, A.F.P.W.C. (all for P. W. Carlton) etc., etc. One spies an occasional Indian fakir plying his trade, complete with turban and bed of nails, (all painted an appropriate Carolina blue, of course,) and one or two bootleggers who are taking orders for their products. It is said that Percy Flowers got his start at UNC taking orders for the daily delivery of white lightning.

Finally, the exhausted student body trickels out the rear door and staggers toward medical aid at the Tempo Room. Some fall down in the street and let Volkswagens frustrate themselves by attempting, unsuccessfully, to run over their prostrate forms. (This practics is known as Bug bugging.)

Only eight more months until fall registration, men. Courage! With luck, we'll all flunk out before then.

Student Amorality On The University Level

Cortland Edwards II

(This is part one of a two-part series on morality, sexual behavior of the college male and female, and the importance of love in sex.)

Every year more and more students are foregoing the pleasure of participating in intellectual organizations or pastimes and are escaping their responsibilities as students by joining strictly social organizations.

As a result of this there is more drinking, more carousing, more parties, and much much too much emphasis on having a good time.

This behavior has had its effect on the moral standards of our generation and has turned many people into neurotics instead of adjusted college students.

As a result it is being proclaimed that college students are much more immoral than ever before.

This is not true!

Students are not more immoral at all and their behavoir is in accordance with the current standards of morality of this generation.

The adverse opinions on immorality are not based upon the current standards but rather on the old Christian ethic of morality that the Puritans brought over with them on the Mayflower. In other words, students are not more immoral, but rather the current American standard of morality is too low! It is set at a middle class level and inspires too few people.

A few of the coeds on campus have gotten together, formed a Standards Committee, and with typical Puritanical outrage they have taken it upon themselves to stop the other coeds from "sinning" and to teach them how to be "Ladies!"

Another group, which is on the opposite end of the pole is pushing for "freelove!" This group is composed mostly of fellows (however there are more than a few coeds who agree with them) who consider sex as a mere means of pleasure.

So now we have two more groups or factions represented on the campus — the Abstainers (or Purists) and the Free Lovers and they are both DEAD WRONG; not only in their thinking, but in their outlook and in their actions.

Those purists who feel that sex is a "necessary evil" (taken from our Christian heritage) and that it should be engaged in only by married couples for the purpose of having children, "reduce the function to its narrowest and most rudimentary level, stripping it of all its psychological values, and placing us once again on a level with the animals (Lewis Way)."

Martin Luther once said, "He who wishes to restrain the impulse of nature and to allow it free play, as nature will and must, what does he do but this: to insist that fire shall not burn, that water shall not wet, that man shall neither eat, drink, nor sleep."

Those people who believe in "sex for sex sake" and believe that women should be able to enjoy it regardless of whom their partner is, are also reducing sex to a single function — a purely physical function. This is just as bad as reducing it to a purely procreative function.

"Mere physical sex," says Way, "which is unaccompanied by the proper psychic satisfactions, increases, if anything, the sense of frustration. Sexual license is the result of frustration, not the cure." Love is the missing factor in both of the above groups.

Although both of the above groups are composed of immature people, my major complaint lies not with these people but rather with a larger group - perhaps even equally as unstable. This group is composed of the non-virgins, semi-virgins, and prostitutes - both male and female!!! We shall call them Indiscriminators, because they are generally indiscriminate with whom they make love. Even this is a minor form of prostitution.

Furthermore, our complaint lies not in their sexual experimentation, for this is quite natural - even if it should have occurred between the ages of 12 and 17.

What we do abhor, however, are the reasons most girls give for submitting to a man, and the reasons most boys give for the taking advantage of them! Some of the reasons are "curiousity," "too much alcohol," "expected to," "to belong," "why not!" "to prove my masculinity," "to prove my femininity," etc. Assanine reasons, all of them. Notice that LOVE was not and is not even considered!

Whether a girl is a virgin or not makes no difference to me, but her attitude towards love, sex, and marriage does. Likewise, whether a boy has intercourse with his girl or not makes no difference, but his reasons and attitude do.

If two people are to have an affair, LOVE should be the prime factor. By love I am not referring to the "love of sex" or to that which the boy proclaims immediately after he is convinced that he can "make" his date — this is not love for the particular girl, this is only love of a sex object.

Love is not an innate instinct. It is a highly spiritual creation on the basis of the biological urge. In its exaltation it can bring us either a most profound feeling of belonging, of security, and of reality or it can bring us the bitterest feeling of disillusionment.

Love "is an exclusive passion of one person for another; a passion which makes the lover desire this person only, while he finds other persons more or less indifferent; which may arouse all sorts of emotions; and which may bring genuine satisfaction without ever reaching the stage of actual sexual pleasure (Rene Guyon)."

"Love is," according to Lewis Way, "a balance between the urge to receive protection as if one were a child, and the urge to give it as if one were the parents. The fact of being cherished is a proof of one's value, and the protection over another is a confirmation of one's strength.

"Thus a woman wishes to depend upon her lover, but she also wishes at times to mother him. A man desires to protect the woman, but also at time to play and be comforted like a little boy. For both partners the love relationship is a mixture of strength and tenderness."

Without the accompaniment of love, sex becomes a sordid and animalistic thing and one's name becomes a little number on everybody's list to call up some night. This is not "right" but it is the American way.

At the present time, the general opinion of coeds is not very high and appears to be going lower. Unfortunately, few people realize that this opinion is not necessarily based upon the behavior of the coeds but rather upon the attitudes of the average male student!

We, personally, find that the "average" college coed is by far one of the nicest and prettiest women we have had the pleasure of associating with. Very seldom have we run into so many idealistic, open, and unaffected women as we have met at the beginning of each new semester.

Unfortunately, we can also see them change as they go from independent status to sorority status, from an Individual to a member of the InGroup . . We can see them giving in to group pressures, losing much of their identity, and finally, graduating with a dislike of men and a fear of marriage. This is very sad.

After seeing these things happen so many times we have begun to ask ourselves' 'WHY!" And most of the causes can be boiled down to the boys on the campus with whom the girls associate.

The major difficulty lies in the fact that most of the boys have not matured emotionally or sexually by the time they get to college. This is not to say that all the girls have, but it is a fact that girls mature a lot quicker and a lot earlier than do boys. The important thing we want to stress is the fact that socially the average guy here in college is just experimenting, out to have a good time, and out to prove his masculinity.

The comment "Coeds aren't interested in anything but getting husbands ' is heard over and over in the dorms and frat houses, but perhaps a more accurate generalization would be that "College boys aren't interested in anything but getting the privileges of marriage without being saddled with the responsibilities!"

We know that the average student looks at the coed merely as a sex symbol than as a future mate or as an equal or as a Being in her own right. In fact, in a survey done in 1957 less than 5 per cent of those University of North Carolina men that got married or engaged picked Carolina Coeds!!! The hometown virginal girl was always chosed above anyone else.

Ask a frat man who he would choose to bring to an important formal event — a coed, an import, or a hometown girl? Statistics have given his answer by showing that by far the majority or men pick the hometown girl as the one they spend their money, time, and attention on. It is the hometown girl that the Carolina men want to marry — not the Carolina coed!

Ask the same men which they would prefer taking to that frat party, when the alcohol runs free and the lights go out at eight o'clock? His answer of course, would be the "Coed!"

However, his answer is not because the coed is any more immoral than the hometown girl or the import, its predominantly because the college man just doesn't give a damn for the coed as a person and he acts as if she were on the campus just to serve him. The respect for womanhood is saved for the hometown girl!

A Letter

EDITOR:

Anthony Wolff's review of the Spectrum is spotted with bad diction. This review also contained ten very illiterate grammatical errors. There were a large number of errors of punctuation, some of which, apparently, were typographical. It would be tedious to describe he illogical and sometimes contradictory nature of the thought in this article. It would be picayunish too. After all, everyone, I'm sure, gets Wolff's point—the only advantage of an unrestrained writer.

What grade shall we give guilty Anthony Wolff on this paper? It doesn't matter. A better question is whether or not he is really capable, really competent to criticize artistic efforts. Can one write in his unfortunate and error-laden manner and at the same time be literate and able to recognize or criticize literary art?

To consider this latest thing of Wolff's as his credentials for the office of critic, is to be forced to disqualify him.

It is incidental, in connection with my writing you, that I am afraid that with few exceptions, the quality of Spectrum is low.

Justice Dept. Seeks End To Alabama Race Injustice

MONTGOMERY, ALA., — (AP) — Voter registration officials in troubled Macon County were accused in federal court yesterday of a systematic denial of voting rights to Negroes "for many years."

The Justice Department, acting under the Federal Civil Rights Act, filed a petition in U. S. District Court here asking for an injunction to put a stop to the alleged racial discrimination.

It was submitted to the same judge, Frank M. Johnson Jr., who recently ordered voter registration records in Macon and two other Alabama counties turned over to the U. S. Civil Rights Commission after state authorities had refused to produce them.

The suit charged that voter registrars in the county where the famed Negro School, Tuskegee Institute, is located have "persisted for many years" in denying Negroes the right to votes olely because of their race.

Specifically, it accused board members of:

1. Using "separate and discriminatory" facilities to accommodate prospective White and Negro voters.

2. Failure and refusal to function as a registration board. (At times in the past, the county has been without a board as long as 18 months.)

3. Keeping irregular and unreasonable office hours and using "other evasive schemes" to keep Negroes from registering as voters.

4. Setting up different and "more stringent" standards for Negroes than for White applicants.

5. Failure to register qualified Negro applicants.

Negroes who testified at the Civil Rights Commission hearing here Dec. 8 complained that the board at Tuskeegee furnished more adequate facilities for prospective White voters; refused to meet at times required by law; refused to notify Negroes whether they had been accepted or rejected, and subjected Negroes to tests which were not given to White applicants.

They said, for example, that Negroes were required to copy article 2 of the U. S. Constitution word for word.

The suit filed today said Macon County last Dec. 1 had 3,016 White voters out of a total of 3,100 White residents of voting age, but only 1,110 Negroes voters out of an eligible 14,000.

Macon county's population counting all age groups is nearly 6-1 Negro.

The suit listed the names of 20 Negroes who complained they were denied the right to vote. Twelve of them are college graduates.

E. P. Livingston and State Rep. Grady Rogers were named defendants in the suit even though they announced their resignations as board members in the wake of the civil rights investigation in December.

The Justice Department contended they must remain in office under Alabama Law until their successors have been appointed and installed. No successors have been named.

That was an apparent reference to section 22 of title 27 of the Alabama Code which says "registrars may hold office for four years from the time of their appointment and until their successors are appointed."

The same law gives the state appointing board specific authority to remove the registrars at any time "with or without cause and without giving their reasons therefore."

There was no immediate comment on the suit from Rogers or Livingston, who is a brother of Chief Justice Ed Livingston of the Alabama Supreme Court.

But reaction was swift elsewhere at the state capitol. Gov. John Patterson sent immediately for a copy of the suit to study it.

Planetarium Will Begin Special Show

For the convenience of school children visiting the N. C. General Assembly in Raleigh, the Morehead Planetarium here has opened a 4 p. m. demonstration Wednesdays through Fridays, it was announced today by Manager A. F. Jenzano.

Morehead Planetarium programs for school children are already scheduled at 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. on those days. And, the 4 p.m. show was added in order that children visiting either the State capital or the University may have ample time to see the Legislature in session and the Planetarium program.

"We have found in the past," Jenzano said," that more children came to the University of North Carolina campus here during the Legislature. Quite often they have been disappointed in having to sacrifice either the program or the Assembly because of their schedules. We hope the additional Planetarium performance will better serve them."

Reservations for all school programs are desirable.

The current Planetarium demonstration, "Scouting the Skies," will be followed on February 24 by "Easter, the Awakening."

To Victors Go Spoils - In Appointments

RALEIGH — (AP) — To the victors belong the rewards. So was it Friday when House Speaker Addison Hewlett appointed house committees. Choice assignments went to Hewlett supporters. Backers of his opponent, Rep. Carl Venters were left out in the cold.

Hewlett acted with almost unprecedented speed in announcing the House Committee assignments only two days after his election as speaker.

The top committee chairmanships went to Rep Clyde Harris of Rowan, who will head the important Appropriations Committee and Rep. H. Clifton Blue of Moore, who will direct work of the equally vital Finance Committee.

Of the Venters backers, only one, Rep. John W. Umstead Jr. of Orange, received what could be described as an important committee chairmanship—Mental Institution's. Umstead, who is chairman of the State Hospitals Board of Control, has long been a crusader for an improved mental hospital system. He headed the same committee in 1957.

Venters, who headed the Appropriations Committee in 1957, was given Chairmanship of the Health Committee.

The Hewlett appointments brought important chairmanships to several young legislators while some veteran lawmakers who had held top spots in the past, were shunted to vice-chairman spots.

Among the top committee chairmanships were:

Rep. Gus Zollicoffer of Vance, who will direct Constitutional Amendments—the committee that will handle court reform proposals and other constitutional revisions.

Rep. Itimous Valentine, head of Judiciary II Committee, which Hewlett headed last session. Another Hewlett supporter, Rep. Thomas Turner of Guilford, will head Judiciary I.

Rep. George Watts Hill Jr. of Durham who will direct the Higher Education Committee.

Rep. Ed Wilson of Yancey, will chairman Manufacturers and Labor, which will consider a 75 cents hourly minimum wage bill introduced Wednesday.

Rep. W. Brantley Womble of Wake got the chairmanship of the important committee on roads and Rep. Ashley Murphy of Pender was a repeater as head of agriculture. Another repeater was Rep. Roger Kiser of Scotland as chairman of the Public Welfare Committee.

Rep. John Hargett succeeds Rep. Ed Yarborough of Franklin as chairman of Education and Rep. Carson Gregory of Harnett will direct the Committee on University Trustees.

Rep. John R. McLaughlin of Iredell got the Banks and Banking chairmanship while Rep. Marcellus Buchanan of Jackson was named head of Conservation and Development. Courts and Judicial Districts went to Rep Leonard W. Lloyd of Graham, and Elections and Election Laws to Harlon Holcombe of Yancey.

Holcombe's committee will consider proposals to eliminate the civilian absentee ballot.

Other committee chairmanships included:

Rep. Frank Snepp of Mecklenburg, State Government; Rep. Thomas Dill of Edgecombe, Counties, Cities and Towns; Rep. Charles Hostetler of Hoke, Insurance; Ed Kemp of Guilford, Local Government; Rep. Hugh Johnson Jr. of Duplin, Wildlife; Rep. Dick O'Neal; Jim Bowman of Brunswick, Propositions and Grievances.

Martin hopes to make its missile operational within a year. When ready, Titan units will be assigned to underground launching sites practically immune to enemy counter attack. The Atlas was developed to operate only from surface stations.

There were three major missions for today's flight:

To check out ground support equipment, to test the launch sequence controls and gain instrumentation data on the performance of the first stage engine.

This first Titan was aimed at an impact area only 300 miles down the Atlantic missile range. On longer range flights later, Titan will reach speeds as high as 17,000 M.P.H. before blazing back to earth from space.

The missile's two stages did not separate on this first flight because of the dummy upper stage. The complete rocket splashed into the Atlantic.

The launching came three years to the day after the Martin Co. first began the Titan development program.

THE GIRL I LEFT BEHIND ME

It happens every day. A young man goes off to college leaving his home-town sweetheart with vows of eternal love, and then he finds that he has outgrown her. What, in such cases, is the honorable thing to do?

Well sir, you can do what Rook Sigafoos did.

When Rock left Cut and Shoot, Pa., he said to his sweetheart, a simple country lass named Tess d'Urbervilles, "My dear, though I am far away in college, I will love you always. I will never look at another girl. If I do, may my eyeballs parch and wither, may my viscera writhe like adders, may the moths get my new tweed jacket!"

Then he clutched Tess to his bosom and planted a final kiss upon her fragrant young skull and went away, meaning with all his heart to be faithful.

But on the very first day of college he met a coed named Fata Morgana, a girl of such sophistication, such poise, such savoir faire as Rock had never beheld. She spoke knowingly of Frans Kafka, she hummed Mozart, she smoked Marlboros, the cigarette with better "makin's". Now, Rock didn't know Frans Kafka from Pinocchio, or Mozart from James K. Polk, but Marlboros he knew full well. He knew that anyone who smoked Marlboros was modern and advanced and as studded with brains as a ham with cloves. Good sense tells you that you can't beat Marlboro's new improved filter, and you never could beat Marlboro's fine flavor. This Rock knew.

So all day he followed Fata around campus and listened to her talk about Frans Kafka, and then in the evening he went back to the dormitory and found this letter from his home-town sweetheart Tess:

Dear Rock,

Us kids had a keen time yesterday. We went down to the pond and caught some frogs. I caught the most of anybody. Then we hitched rides on trucks and did lots of nutsy stuff like that. Well, I must close now because I got to whitewash the fence.

Your friend,

Tess

P.S. . . . I can do my Hula Hoop 3,000 times.

Well sir, Rock thought about Tess and then he thought about Fata and then a great sadness fell upon him. Suddenly he knew he had outgrown young, innocent Tess; his heart now belonged to smart, sophisticated Fata.

Rock, being above all things honorable, returned forthwith to his home town and walked up to Tess and looked her in the eye and said manfully, "I do not love you any more. I love a girl named Fata Morgana. You can hit me in the stomach with all your might if you like."

"That's okay, hey," said Tess amiably. "I don't love you neither. I found a new boy."

"What is his name?" asked Rock.

"Frans Kafka," said Tess.

"A splendid fellow," said Rock and shook Tess's hand and they have remained good friends to this day. In fact, Rock and Fata often double-date with Frans and Tess and have heaps of fun. Frans can do the Hula Hoop 6,000 times.

Blue Imps Nip Tar Babies Duke Players Excell 74-70

By ELLIOTT COOPER

DURHAM—The Tar Babies came mighty close to beating the Blue Imps last night, but it wasn't close enough, and the Duke frosh rallied in the final minutes to defeat the Carolina frosh 74-70.

Throughout the entire contest neither team led by more than seven points. The Tar Babies led most of the first half before Duke jumped ahead in the closing minutes to ake a 37-32 advantage at half time. In the second half the Blue Imps led all the way with the exception of one time when the Tar Babies led by one point.

The game was tied several times in the waning moments of the second half before the Blue Imps went ahead 70-68 on a shot by Bob Stephenson.

With 4:10 left on the clock a foul shot by Jim Hudock tied the score at 64-64. Buzz Newhort and Bill Hubbard then exchanged baskets to tie the score again. Another exchange of field goals by John Cantwell and Ken McComb sent the score to 68-68, the last tie of the night.

For the Tar Babies Hudock was the high scorer with 20. He was closely followed by Don Waldh with 17 and McComb 16.

The winners were led offensively by Cantwell, who was the game's top man with 22. Other double digit men for the Blue Imps were Newhort with 18 and Fred Schmidt and Stephenson both had 12.

The loss to the Blue Imps leaves the Tar Babies with a 7-4 mark overall on the season, with four games remaining on the schedule.

Afer Stephenson's go ahead basket, Walsh fouled Cantwell and the 5'9" guard converted both his tries to build the Duke lead up to four. At the 45-second mark Poteet fouled Cantwell in an attempt to gain ball possession, and once again the Blue Imp backcourtman converted twice to give the winners their last two poins. McComb followed this with a tap-in, but here time ran out on the Carolina frosh.

Duke: Schmidt 12, Newhort 18, Johnson 3, Cantwell 22, Stephenson 12, Rakins 3, Butler 4, and Guthrie 2.

Grapplers Host West Virginia

Carolina's varsity wrestling team will be seeking to climb above the .500 mark for the first time this season here tonight when they tangle with tough West Virginia in Woollen Gym at 8:00.

The frosh team will meet Fort Bragg in a preliminary contest at 7:00.

3-3 Record

The Tar Heel grapplers own an even 3-3 record up to this point in the season. Last year they finished up with a 6-4 slate, the first winning record in 8 years.

Tonight's match may be one of the toughest of the season for Sam Barnes' crew, as West Virginia is the perrenial Southern Conference runner-up. Another factor involved is that a Carolina wrestling team has never beaten West Virginia.

Renewal of Series

Tonight's match is the renewal of an old series that was discontinued some years ago. Coach Barnes stated that "It will be one of our toughest matches."

Carolina, after dropping its first two matches, has rallied to tie things up record-wise. The Tar Heels have whipped Davidson, Wake Forest, and State; while losing to Washington and Lee, Virginia and VMI. Their conference record is 2-1.

The freshman so far have compiled a winning 3-2 slate.

Niewierowski Rejoins State

RALEIGH, Feb. 6 — (AP) — North Carolina State basketball coach Everett Case received good news Friday with the announcement that sophomore Stan Niewierowski, 6-4 of Brooklyn, N.Y., registered and rejoined the team. He quit school about a week ago after the fall semester and went home. He said at the time he was unsure about the course he wanted to take.

Niewierowski had been taking recreation. After discussing it with his folks he decided to major in business administration. When he left he also said he felt he was not being used enough on the basketball team, but that this was a minor point in his leaving.

Friday was the final day for students to register for the new term. Another sophomore, Mark Reiner, quit school the same time as Niewierowski but no word has been heard from him.

Mural Basketball Dinner Is Sellout

As the Intramural Basketball season turns the corner and heads for the home stretch, it is apparent that there will be many team that will be fighting down to the wire for first place position in the league.

At mid-season all of the defending champions are battling for the crown, but are up against suit competition.

In the 6 Dormitory leagues 12 teams are still undefeated. These are: Winston 1, Cobb A, Parker 2, Avery, Graham 1, Cobb C. Manly, Stacy, Joyner 1, Winston 2, Mangum, and Ruffin 1.

There are also 6 leagues in the Fraternity White division. In these leagues at mid-season there are 10 undefeated teams. Namely, they are: PiKA 3, Sig Nu 1, Zeta Psi 1, Phi, Delt 2, Kap Sig 1, Chi Psi 1, SAE 1, DKE 2, Phi Delt 1, and Chi Psi 2.

There are 8 teams representing the 5 leagues in the Fraternity Blue division. These are: SAE, Zeta Psi, Lamb Chi, Beta ATO, Phi Delt, Kap Sig, Sig Nu.

Finally, in the Graduate division there are only two leagues. In these two leagues there have emerged 4 undefeated teams at mid-season. These are: Med Sch 3, Hist, Sch, Med Sch 4, and Law Sch 1.

A total of 34 teams have gone through the mid-season undefeated, thus illustrating that there is going to be some fast and rough basketball through the remainder of the season.

Indoor Track Season Gets Underway

The 1959 UNC indoor track season rolls off to its official start tonight as a bridgade of Tar Heel runners, jumpers, and weightmen invade the Old Dominion for the annual VMI relays at Lexington.

Coach Joe Hilton will take a squad of 17 boys led by Captain Wayne Bishop who last year won the Most Outstanding Performer award.

Bishop is expected to be the sole UNC varsity entry in an open running event. He will enter his specialty, the two mile which he captured here last year. The Tar Heels will also enter a 2-mile relay team of John Sylvester, Bob Foxworth, Bing Somers, and Cowles Lipfert, and an 88-yard relay of Bob Eubanks, Charlie Sowers, Lyndon DeBorde, and John Fox.

In the field events, Ward Sims will participate in the pole vault, Don Kemper in the shot, Lyndon DeBorde and Charlie Sowers in the hurdles, and Wally Graham in the high jump.

The freshmen will be represented by a mile relay team composed of Don Jeffries, Ward Purrington, Dave Peltz, and Dennis Rash. Rett Everett will run the ¾ mile.

Risk 26-Meet Streak

Tankmen Face Tough Florida

The unbeaten and untied Carolina Tar Heels, swimming variety, put a phenomenal 26-meet winning streak in jeopardy here today when they lock horns with Florida's Gators in Bowman Gray Pool at 2:00.

The Tar Heel swimmers are 6-0 for the year, and the owners of a tremendous 26-meet streak that dates back to 1958.

Their last outing was the closest in many a day when they had to really hustle to scrape by tough little ECC 44-42.

Coach Pat Earey, mastermind of this talented crew, said yesterday "It will definitely be our toughest meet of the year, and will probably determine whether or not we go undefeated. They (Florida) have good balance and depth, featuring a host of returning veterans and some talented sophomores."

Gators 3-1

The Gators are 3-1 on the season, losing only to the University of Miami. They have a good distance man in Calkin, 2 outstanding divers, top-notch Taeishei in the butterfly and a whole host of talented sprinters.

The best of the sprinters seems to be soph Pollock, aided by backstroker Ruggie and breaststroker McDonald.

Last year the Tar Heels defeated the Gators here in Chapel Hill, but that was with a team including 7 all-Americans. The only all-American left is sprinter Brent Nash.

Carrying the burden of Carolina's streak on their shoulders will be soph flash Harry Bloom, backstroker Bob Hunter, sprinter Nash, butterfly ace Randy Dodson, breaststroker Kit Melcer, and drivers Dick Cashwell and Jack Rudy.

The Tar Heels will no doubt depend heavily on the expert relay teams to furnish the needed points to keep the phenomenal skein going.

North-South Game Set At State

The North-South All-Star basketball game, which was a real thriller last year, is tentatively set for Reynolds Coliseum March 28. Promoters are busy lining up the best college seniors for the all-star attraction.

Invitations have been sent to Bob Boozer of Kansas State, Johnny Cox of Kentucky, Mike Mendenhall of Cincinnati, Bailey Howell of Mississippi State, Tom Hawkins of Notre Dame, Ron Loneski of Kansas, Cal Ramsey of NYU, John Green of Michigan State, John Cincebox of Syracuse, Don Hennon of Pitt, Joe Ruklick of Northwestern and Alan Seiden of St. John's, in addition to the top senior performers in the ACC.

Pharmacists Are Startled By Explosion

A sudden explosion gave pharmacy graduate students a scare Saturday afternoon about 3:30 when a refrigerator used for storing chemicals blew up in the downstairs hall of Howell Building.

The explosion resulted in a brief flaming followed by smoke which filled the building with chemical fumes. The local fire department arrived after the flames had been put out with fire extinguishers in the building.

Dean E. A. Brecht of the School of Pharmacy couldn't be reached for comment, but Dr. Sigurdur Jonsson of the Pharmacy School said probably the only damage was in the mess to be cleaned up.

The cause of the explosion has not been determined.

A Dutch statistician currently studying at UNC will address the regular Statistics Colloquium here Monday at 4 p.m. in 206 Phillips Hall.

Prof. Harold Hotelling, in announcing Corsten's talk, noted that the speaker will explain "how to apply analysis of variance when observations are cross-classified in two or more ways and in other difficult cases. He has devised a rapid general iterative method for dealing with these multiple classified tables and has proved that it always converges."

Integration To Continue In Virginia

RICHMOND, Va., — (AP) — More racial integration in Virginia's public schools next week appeared inevitable yesterday as a federal judge refused to stay an order admitting nine Negro children to three white schools in Alexandria.

In Baltimore yesterday, Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff of the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals heard a last-ditch plea from the Alexandria school board for more time in which to prepare for integration.

Sobeloff turned down the plea after telling the school officials he would grant a stay only if the board could show how the lower court's desegregation order "would cause you grave and irreparable damage."

Sobeloff, who rejected a similar petition from Arlington authorities 11 days ago, lectured school boards for seeking "guidance from the courts" and further delays in school desegragation edicts.

"School Boards," the chief judge said, "should work out some plan to comply with the sense of the law. It shouldn't be how you can stave it off but how you can comply."

Organization Of Pep Rally On Agenda

Planning a pep rally to honor UNC's nationally rated baskeball team will be the chief item on the agenda when the University Club meets Tuesday night at 7 o'clock in Di Hall, New West.

Feb. 17 has been chosen as the date of the rally but no plans at to time or location have been decided by the club.

"I would like to have it about 6:30 in Y-Court, but details have to be worked out with the coaching staff and South Building before those two decisions can be finalized," said University Club President Dave Jones.

"We have undertaken this project with a great deal of enthousiasm, and all signs indicate that Carter Jones and the cheering squad, Jo Carpenter and the majorettes, as well as all club members will work hard toward making this a memorable event."

Cliburn-Jaycees Episode Is Explained By Bob Cox

A fuller explanation of the Van Cliburn-Jaycees episode incident to the off-again-on-again award among the "Ten Outstanding Young Men" was made here this week by Bob Cox of Chapel Hill, who is national president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. Cox was in North Carolina for the Chapel Hill Young Man of the Year award.

Cox revealed that Cliburn had actually stated his acceptance of the award and sent a telegram saying he would be present for the occasion and that his parents would accompany him to Miami for the event.

Furthermore, it is not true, as stated, that an award may not be made in absentia. The Jaycees did make such an award this year. But in the case of Van Cliburn, he at first accepted with the understanding that he would be present, and then sent word that he could not be present owing to a conflicting engagement, said Cox.

Cox made the announcement in the form of a letter to all local, state and national officers of the Junior Chamber of Commerce. "I hope that the misconceptions can be overcome," he said.

He said that an award was made to Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, political scientist, who was out of the country. "Dr. Kissinger presented circumstances deemed sufficiently extreme to warrant his receiving the award in absentia," said Cox. "He was on an important mission to West Germany to attend high-level conferences on the Berlin Situation."

CHRONOLOGY

Pointing out that there were 55 finalists for the 10 awards, Cox gave a chronological account of the events leading up to the Van Cliburn issue, as follows:

"Oct. 15 — deadline date for receipt of nominations. The nomination of Mr. Cliburn, with his signature affixed, was received ahead of this date.

"Nov. 26 — After judging results had been tallied, an air-mail registered letter was sent to Mr. Cliburn's New York address notifying him he was among the selection and asking that he wire acceptance and reconfirm attendance at the awards ceremony as per the signed nomination blank.

"Dec. 4 — Executive Vice President Ben Swanson, in New York for a meeting, contacted Mr. Cliburn's agent to inquire about his acceptance and attendance which had not been received. The agent explained that Cliburn was on tour and asked that we send a duplicate of the Nov. 26 letter to Mr. Cliburn in Kilgore, Texas, and a copy to her explaning she would handle the matter .Her request was carried out this same date and the registered letter was accepted in Kilgore.

INVITATION ACCEPTED

"Dec. 9 — I talked by telephone with the person in Kilgore who assisted with Mr. Cliburn's nomination and was assured that Mr. Cliburn would be at the awards

Henderson's Book On Shaw Continues To Have Impact

A little over a year ago a book entitled "George Bernard Shaw: Man of the Century" won for Dr. Archibald Henderson the 26th annual Mayflower Society Award for the best non-fiction volume in 1957.

It was the highest honor which can be bestowed by North Carolina, but critical approval was only beginning at that time. The praise for this book eclipses all other acclaim.

The occasion marked the third time North Carolina literary awards have been received by Dr. Henderson for his works on Shaw. In 1911 he won the Patterson Memorial Cup for his book, "George Bernard Shaw: His Life and Works" and in 1932 he was awarded the Mayflower Cup for "Bernard Shaw: Playboy and Prophet."

Dr. Henderson's works, in addition to the celebrated Shaw and Mark Twain biographies, include histories of North Carolina, the University of North Carolina and the Old Southwest.

Not only is Dr. Henderson a prolific writer—he is a man who associated with Einstein and who is an authority on mathematics and liter-

Daily Tar Heel News Post Given Flinner And Fisher

An "Under New Management" sign will go up in The Daily Tar Heel office tomorrow.

Chuck Flinner will take over the post of co-managing editor, joining Stan Fisher who has shared the position with Charlie Sloan since the end of November.

Sloan is resigning in order to have more time to study and work on the North Carolina Chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalism fraternity.

Flinner is a junior in the School of Journalism. He has had experience as a photographer and engraver on his hometown paper, The High Point Enterprise.

Fisher is a sophomore. He plans to major in journalism.

In announcing Flinner's appointment Sloan said, "Chuck has done a good job of learning the hectic daily routine of managing editor, and I'm sure he will turn out an attractive and news-full Daily Tar Heel.

"Stan has a few weeks' more experience in the job than Chuck, and with his help the co-managing editor system should work out well," Sloan added.

"In a way I hate to give up the managing editor's desk," Sloan said, "but at the same time it will be a relief to get away for awhile from the tension and hustle of getting out a daily newspaper. I know the 'slot' is in capable hands, and I am looking forward to reading The Daily Tar Heel as an outsider."

Editor Curtis Gans confirmed the appointment of Flinner and Fisher, commenting, "Fisher, who has been working in the managing editor's chair for the past few weeks, has already shown that he can do a capable job, and I believe he will continue to do top level work.

"Flinner has shown the potential ability that I feel he will be able to realize as managing editor."

Speaking of Sloan's resignation, Gans said, "I'm sorry to see Charlie go, for I feel he is one of the most competent journalists in the University. I know he will make a good newsman in the professional world, once he graduates in June."

The managing editor's job is to lay out the page, write headlines, and help plan each day's news slate. He also doubles as wire editor and occasionally must help on the news staff by writing stories.

Under the co-managing editor system, Flinner and Fisher will each work an average of three days a week. Both men said they plan to try to write at least one news story a week "to keep in practice."

Enrollment Drops 365 For Spring Semester

There are 4,208 men enrolled and 1,483 coeds this semester, according to enrollment figures released last week by the UNC Central Office of Records.

The UNC enrollment for the spring semester is 7148, a decrease of 365 students in the number who were enrolled last fall.

Although the spring semester usually has fewer students than in the fall, spring 1959 has increased by 426 over the same semester last year and even has 110 more students than in fall 1957.

95 students are from 35 foreign countries.

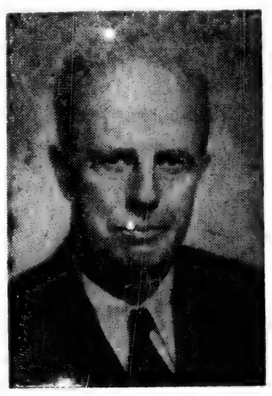
Men veterans outnumber women vets 1,436 to 21, according to the Central Office of Records statistics.

The enrollments for the various schools and colleges include: General College, 2,322; College of Arts and Sciences, 1,385; School of Business Administration, 432; School of Education, 434; School of Journalism, 42; Graduate School, 1,125; Law School, 235; School of Library Science, 60, and School of Social Work, 56

In the Division of Health affairs, the enrollments are: School of Dentistry, 216; School of Medicine, 271; School of Nursing, 195; School of Pharmacy, 226, and School of Public Health, 149.

Traveler Pickett Speaks Tomorrow

After many years of travel in Europe, Asia and Africa, Clarence Pickett will report on his missions in a talk at Carroll Hall, Monday night at 8 o'clock.



CLARENCE PICKET
. . . traveling for peace

His report will be given under the topic: "The Challenge of World Community in the Atomic Age."

The Carolina YMCA and YWCA and the Friends Meetings of Chapel Hill and Durham are sponsoring the Pickett lecture. He has been associated with the Friends Service since 1913 when he became one of their ministers and the secretary of Young Friends activities in America.

As executive secretary of American Friends Service Committee from 1929 to 1950, Pickett also worked with the Division of Subsistence Homesteads; the Resettlement Administration in Washington, D. C.; the Farm Security Administration and the National Housing Agency. It was also during this time that he traveled extensively in Europe on various assignments. He lived in Egypt, Israel and Palestine.

Between the years of 1950 to 1955 he served as honorary secertary of AFSC. In this capacity he devoted special attention to endeavor to discover areas in which AFSC could help improve the climate in which East-West relationships were carried on.

During five sessions of the United Nations Assembly, Pickett served as a member of the six-person international Quaker team at the U.N.

Pickett's national and international work continued in the fall of 1952 when he was appointed a member of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization.

WUNC Radio Staff Meeting Scheduled Tomorrow At 4

WUNC, the University Radio Station, will hold a meeting for prospective staff members 4 p.m., Monday in Studio A of Swain Hall.

Positions on the WUNC staff are open in announcing, writing, promotion, engineering, traffic and music. There is also a need of artists for the station's promotion department.

At the Monday meeting D. W. Knoepfler, director of radio, and Jack Mayo, student manager of WUNC, will give applicants a brief description of the operation of the various departments of the station.

Persons attending the session will then meet with the heads of the department in which they are interested.

WUNC is a non-commercial FM radio station operated entirely by students on a voluntary basis. It is heard over a wide area in central and eastern North Carolina.

Student Party Schedules Talk On Legislature

An open discussion on the Legislature for the remainder of the year is the main thing on the Student Party agenda for their 7 p.m. meeting Monday in Roland Parker 1 and 2.

At this meeting four vacancies in the Legislature will be filled. The vacancies are in Dorm Men's I, Dorm Men's II, Town Men's III and Town Men's IV.

According to Jim Crownover, SP floor leader, Monday's discussion will probably have major emphasis on the proposed revision of the student government.

Other topics will be the changing of the judicial set up, whether or not compulsory athletic passbooks are good or bad, raising student activities fee to meet the rising costs, formation of a foreign student board, forming an unlimited cut system (at present time there are no uniform regulations) and traffic and parking problems.

Carolina To Play Host To High School Bands

UNC will be host to 140 high school musicians and band directors for the sixth annual North Central All-State High School Band Clinic being held here Feb. 13-15.

Highlight of the three-day gathering will be a band concert open to the public on Sunday, Feb. 15, at 4 p.m. in Hill Hall. The program will be presented by the 117-piece high school clinic band and will be conducted by Herbert L. Carter of East Carolina College.

Instructor Herbert Fred of the UNC Department of Music is chairman in charge of the clinic.

Cult Of Responsibility

It is often that one hears the rejoinder "It's a free country," when someone is told that he may not do something, but is is somewhat horifying how shallow the concept of freedom is in the minds of most Americans.

Perhaps on the U.N.C. campus, the idea is even more limited than in society, although the campus is an ideal place for freedom to flourish.

Students are allowed from an administrative standpoint a wide latitude of freedom in thought and action, and they are allowed to select their own government.

Yet, for all the latitude which the students have, they persist in binding themselves with the absurd. It seems characteristic of student leaders here and other places, that once they assume the robes of office they become "responsible" which is a somewhat generic term meaning paternalistic. They become crusaders against "evil" which is a somewhat generic term for something they think is unacceptable to society, and pass legislation for the "protection" of the student body. "protection" is a somewhat generic term for bondage. And all the while, they spend time politically covorting around the campus selling their souls for the sake of the next office that they are aspirants for.

Meanwhile John Doe in the lower quad or even more so Jane Doe in the Women's sections of the campus finds himself or herself bound hand and foot to the Middle Ages. In the area of Women's regulations, this becomes peculiarly obvious. Girls must conform to accepted norms of dress and conduct. They are not allowed to keep a messy room or keep a coke bottle more than a few hours, no matter what affinity they might have for green glass. Moreover, they are under penalty of fine, and if the fine is not paid they are under penalty of being kept in for the duration of the time that their debt is unpaid. They are bound to hours and times, to the memory of the corect dates, to making sure that they keep up with a particular clock's idiosyncracies.

Indeed, they are hemmed in with rules largely of their own making, since the Women's Residence Council makes these rules, and see to the enforcement of these. Many of these rules are unfair, but the students will not appeal their constitutionality since they are afraid of losing their status and the government of fear continues, and the students become instead of more independent, something that they ought to be once they get out into the world, more dependent on authority symbols. This process continues as long as they elect the officials they do, and as long as these officials take it upon themselves to see evil in every action that is not according to what they conceive or as the accepted norm.

So, what one sees is a great conformity in a place where freedom should exist and where freedom is theoretically allowed to exist. The conformity which is perpetrated by the students is but one conformity that is generated in college. Another is the conformity of the professor's opinions which are taken as gospel at least until the next quiz, so that students do not think any longer but simply are an edited tape recording of what the "authorities" say, "authorities" being a somewhat generic term for anyone who can materially affect one's security. And the pattern continues until at the end of four years, no one thinks for himself, no one has an idea, and the concept of freedom goes down the drain for lack of support.

Basic to this concept of freedom is individual thought. It means that individuals are free to make a choice of what to wear, what to say, what to do, what value system to adopt, and so many other things. This type of choice is something that is given in a free society to a person at birth, and is developed through his years of maturity, or at least ought to be. Yet, the fundamental dependence of man on the "expert", on the father symbol, or what have you binds him in such a way that he really is never free.

The purpose of this University is to get people to think, to ask questions about their environment, to doubt their former Gods, and in short to find themselves. Once finding this self they ought to have the opportunity to pursue that self, in terms of its principles and beliefs in an atmosphere of freedom and tolerance.

But until students, their leaders, and the educators realize that in this concept of freedom the real hope of the individual lies, most of American society will remain dormant, dependent, and dead. It is up to these leaders to kindle, stimulate, and stir. This is their true responsibility, and if they live up to this responsibility society might change so that there would be no need for "responsibility" in the "let's get rid of evil" rationale or perhaps their view on "responsibility" would change. Until the students realize their rights and stand up for their rights, the mass decay of man's purpose of fulfilling himself will continue. This day seems to be far away.

The World News In Review

Josie Morris

Federal spending, an intercontinental ballistics missile, a successful integration beginning on one of the grassroots states of massive resistance, and a Presidential civil rights program highlighted this week's news.

The President presented a civil rights program designed to speed integration, including a novel facet of token financial assistance to help states integrate. Notable for its absence is a provision to provide for federal forces to intervene in civil rights violations.

Democrats from the North called the program weak, while Southerners said that program was too strong, and that the aid was but token aid.

Titan Launched

A Titan ICBM was launched successfully from the Cape Canaveral launching pad Friday, and completed its 300 mile flight landing close to target.

The Titan, a more powerful weapon than the Atlas ICBM, has been under development for several years.

In Alabama the Federal Civil Rights Commission, an adjunct of the Department of Justice, filed suit for alleged violations by Alabama election officials in denying Negroes the right to vote.

The suit follows several months of investigation highlighted by a state judge's refusal to turn over voter registration records to the Civil Rights commission.

Pilot Denies

In Cuba, an American pilot, 31 year-old Robert Nye, confessed plotting to assassinate rebel leader and head of the Cuban government Fidel Castro, according to Cuban authorities.

Nye, however, back in the United States denied ever having confessed. His mother released through news sources fervent pleas for her son's fair treatment claiming that she knew him incapable of planning such an act.

The balanced budget was dealt several blows this week as Democratic majorities pushed through bills in excess of the President's requests. A housing aid bill and an airport construction bill were the prime bones of contention, and by week end Eisenhower and the balanced budget seemed to be fighting a losing battle.

Virginia Integrates

As police and public officials waited for riots to break out, Virginia's public schools integrated peacefully Monday.

Seventeen Negroes in Norfolk and four in Arlington enrolled in the previously segregated schools.

Around noon came a call from a woman saying that a bomb had been planted in Stratford Junior High timed to go off at 1:30 p.m.

Immediate investigation revealed no such bomb. Officials, concluding the call to be a hoax, did not dismiss school.

The closest thing to a bomb were fire crackers set off by three white boys.

In Washington, President Eisenhower stated that Virginia's peaceful integregation was a fine thing. On Thursday he asked a divided congress to make it a federal crime to block racial integration of schools under court orders.

Alexandria, another Virginia community, will learn in a day or two whether a feueral court will decree admission of 14 Negroes to its public school system.

Khruschev Invites

Another invitation was extended this week to President Eisenhower from Nikita S. Khrushchev to make a visit to the Soviet Union.

Khrushchev also challenged the United States to participate in making West Berlin a free city under United Nations responsibility.

(However, the West has refused to consider this plan.)

Khrushchev's invitation came after Prime Minister Macmillan of Great Britain announced that he was planning to make a visit to Moscow Feb. 21.

Macmillan expressed hope that his visit would take some of the chill out of the cold war. With the blessing of Britain's NATO Allies, he expects to stay a week or 10 days.

"My principle purpose will be to try to dispel misconception and establish some basis for better understanding," said the prime minister.

Macmillan, a shrewd salesman, will be speaking only for Britain in his contacts with Soviet leaders, but his mission to Moscow is a sort of scouting trip for all allies.

Russian Lead

In the field of nuclear weapons Marshal Rodion Malinovsky of the Soviet Union declared that the West's nuclear weapons are outdated by long range sharp shooting Soviet ballistic missiles that no anti-aircraft defense can stop.

In Washington, Secretary Neil McElroy stated that he did not believe the claim to pinpoint accuracy. He went on to say he was not perturbed by Malinovsky's speech, adding that the Russians have developed a more powerful thrust for rockets, but as for ICBM's "we have enough thrust to send them 5,500 miles or into Russia."

McElroy also said that by December the United States would have roughly as many intercontinental ballistic missiles as the Russians.

His statement came as a result of members of the House Armed Services Committee voicing concern that Russia may be pulling away from the United States in the missile race.

Convoy Halted

In Berlin an incident occurred which United States Army authorities viewed as the most serious pressure on allied lifelines since Moscow launched its campaign last November to get the Western powers out of West Berlin.

The Soviet Army ignored three strong protests and held up the passage of an American military truck convoy bound from isolated Berlin to West Germany for 53 hours. The Russians demanded an inspection of the cargoes. But Findley Burns Jr., political adviser to the U. S. Army missions in East Berlin said the Russians were not allowed to inspect the inside of the trucks.

After the U. S. State Department, backed by President Eisenhower, delivered a stiff protest in Moscow against any interferance with Western allies, the convoy was let lose without being inspected.

Thus the U. S. won a point in its efforts to prevent the Russians from gradually clamping a strangle hold on the highway supply line to Berlin, isolated 110 miles behind the Iron Curtain.

Seventy-eight year old John L. Lewis, president of United Mine Workers, suffered an attack on Monday.

It was not clear if the attack was an embalus—defined as any foreign or abnormal particle circulating in the blood—or pneumonia.

"Ouch!"

Roundup

Dave Jones

Thursday night's session of the Student Legislature proves one thing . . . politics can be fun and exciting. It also shows tha without the aid of the few men on campus who actually know parliamentary proceedure a body can legislate . . . not without snags, but they can legislate.

To begin, the Speaker was at another meeting, the Speaker Pro-tempore had lost his seat because he had moved from Durham County to Avery Dorm, the Parliamentarian had lost his seat because he had moved from the Fraternity that he is president of to Avery Dorm. Therefore, Representative (Ind.) Norman Smith who was fourth ranking member of the body took the chair.

Acting Speaker Smith was subsequently, by unanamous action, promoted to Number two man in the Legislature. Another Unanimous action promoted Rep. Ann Lucas, from secretary to chairman of the Rules committee, making her number five in the line of sucession to the throne. She replaced an outgoing chairman who had lost his seat because he moved into Avery Dorm.

The confusion actually began when the Clerk, Rep. Ann Harvey . . . who has not moved to Avery Dorm and therefore is still clerk, called "Harvey . . . Representative Harvey!! Is Representative Harvey here?" Well she was there . . . I think.

Speaker Smith then read the resignations from the members who had moved out of their districts. There were eight of these and there were indications that there are more to come as Avery Dorm becomes more and more popular.

The first item under old business was the Faubus-Almond Telegram-Letter. The author had moved into Avery Dorm since he had written the bill. Its principal amender had also moved into Avery Dorm and therefore a motion to grant privileges of the floor to the author was necessary so that he could defend his bill.

Rep. Janie Walters objected. She did not want to hear what the unseated legislator had to say about his own bill. Now confusion became real. The Parliamentarian, the only person in the room who knew what to do now, couldn't speak because of reasons previously mentioned. After much pulling of hair and gnashing of teeth, Speaker Smith decided to put the question of who had a right to speak to a vote. A simple majority decided to hear the deposed legislator. His bill died a second time.

Also considered, and passed with unanimous support, was Rep. Jim Crowncver's bill to establish a campus affairs board. Here the confusion was put aside and a serious piece of legislation that is needed to make the job of Student Body President a little less back breaking passed.

Then after a few routine appointments addressed "Dear Ralph," Speaker Norman Smith, who said he felt like a peeping tom reading the absent Speaker's mail, turned to the introduction of new business. First item: A resolution authorising the University Club to sell advertising for its 1959 Handbook. Then appropriations . . . $200.00 to the University Club . . . $20.00 to the legislature to print more bills . . . and $30.00 to Davis Young's Sophomore Class Project.

After adjournment was called . . . not by the chief adjourner Norman Smith, but by someone else . . . We adjourned. I came up to The Daily Tar Heel Office, wrote this column which I will submit for publication to the editor of The Daily Tar Heel who also recently moved to Avery Dorm from Durham County, but who is still editor. I guess The Daily Tar Heel has different rules about where you can live.

State News

This week's State headlines centered themselves around the state capital in Raleigh. Governor Luther Hodges presented an ambitious "better living" legislative program to a joint session of the General Assembly Thursday.

Mainly a review and a recapitulation of reports made by various study groups, the speech was notable for some things it did not say:

1. The governor broke with tradition by failing to call for a statewide liquor referendum.

2. He underlined the paramount importance he attaches to the proposed revision of the state constitution and the court changes sought by the Bell committee by stating he will cover those subjects later in a special message.

In the 50-minute address Hodges placed his support behind the following:

—Civilian absentee ballots be abolished and party primaries be changed from Saturday to Tuesday.

—Polio shots be made mandatory "especially for younger children."

—The governor be given authority "under emergency conditions" to extend the payment of unemployed benefits by 13 weeks—to a maximum of 39 weeks.

—A 75 cents-per-hour state minimum wage be established because "employees deserve it, and the state's economic progress demands it."

—Pre-admission tests be given by all state-supported colleges by the opening of the fall term in 1961.

—Community colleges be expanded to help care for skyrocketing enrollments.

—Steps be taken to protect the Outer Banks, the "protective barrier for our sounds and inland cities and counties against a ravaging ocean."

—Better controls be imposed on welfare payments, especially to mothers of illegitimate children.

—A state "incentive fund" be set up to encourage localities to supplement state funds for public education, on the basis of their ability to pay.

The governor said he recognized that his program was an expansive one, but that it was based entirely on his desire to do the best he could for North Carolina and its people in the time he had left as governor.

Also from Raleigh came the news this week that Addison Hewlett Jr. of Newhanover had won the contest for House Speaker in North Carolina. Hewlett was nominated on a 63 to 51 vote over his opponent, Carl Venters of Onslow.

In the race for president pro-tem, Robert F. Morgan of Cleveland, a pro-administration senator, was nominated and elected over C. V Henkel of Iredell County. The vote being 26 to 21.

The Awful Truth

Why is ita lways "betrayal' if one of Us goes over to Them, but "conversion" ifon e of Them comes over to Us?

The woman who impresses her husband-to-be as "vivacious" before the marriage often seems "fluttery" after the marriage; and the woman who was courted for her "serenity" may later be upbraided for her "laziness."

Why do we attach the label 'radical" only to those extremists of the left, when the extremists of the right are just as radical," just as threatening to democracy—and even more numerous?

—From Sidney J. Harris, Majority Of One.

Postscript

Jonathan Yardley

The recent decision by the voters of Orange County was a hearty victory for the forces of orthodox Protestantism over those of backwoods fundamentalism. It is an accepted fact — or certainly seems to be — that most good Episcopalians and others of their ilk are always in the market for a thinking man's drink. The fact that the drink is now going to be ten miles closer is one of great encouragement to their tried souls — (or should I say our tried souls, since I profess total agreement with the victors).

More important, however, is the fact of the victory being one over narrowmindedness, false morality, and perverted values. The final, and logical, step in this progression is the lowering of the legal purchasing age from twenty one to eighteen. This is a rather far fetched hope, however, since the only state in the East liberal enough to see the necessity of this is New York and North Carolina, progressive though it may be, is in no hurry to be the second to see the light.

The reasons for allowing an eighteen year old man or woman to legally purchase liquor go much deeper than selfish desires on the part of our age group. The entire problem is inexorably involved with the curbing of delinquency and the maintance of respect for the law. The most common argument used for matters of this nature is a very old one: "If they've old enough to fight they're old enough to vote or drink or participate in all 'adult' activities." This is a good argument, but a lot of them have been fighting ever since they learned to use their fists, and some illogical person is bound to suggest distribution of alcohol to street gangs "Just to let them know we're for fighting."

The argument which seems most logical is more complex; to deny the young man the right to purchase his own alcohol when he is treated in almost every respect as a responsible citizen is to contradict oneself. This, to the mature teenager, is an insult and an impetus to law breaking. Laws and rules, they say, were made to be broken; what could be a more breakable law than this? There is still the friend who is of age, and there is always the lax storekeeper. Furthermore, the parent is less likely to be aware of his childrens' violations and is consequently less concerned.

If eighteen year olds are allowed the right to purchase liquor a number of virtues are going to be forthcoming: the law, now held unfair by many youths, will be seen as responsible and aware of their rights; the amount of liquor being sold illegally will drop tremendously; most important of all, the parents will be aware of the fact that their children can buy liquor and will as a result make much more effort to see that they consume it with some concept of the harms it can do when used irrationally. There might be fewer teenage accidents, and that will not hurt anyone. This is something for responsible people to think about.

* * *

Those of us who were able to see Playhouse 90's "Child of Our Time" last Thursday night witnessed an extremely moving drama. The story of a boy who goes through concentration camps, reformatories, and cruelties to find his lost mother in the chaos of World War II was a masterful bit of television writing and performance. Adapted from the fine novel of the same name, this play has much to say to all of us about the harshness of our twentieth century world. Noel Coward, in his song "Twenties Century Blues," rather aptly sums up the feeling of the story:

"Blues, twentieth century blues.
Nothing to win or to lose . . ."

Tanguy, the boy (excellently played by Robert Crawford), finds that the constant thwartings of his efforts to find his mother have left him with a nothing to "win or lose" feeling, and in the end, when he finds her and realizes that she did deceive him in the past and leave him to his fate in a concentration camp, his world is shattered. Like many of the less fortunate children of our era, he feels homeless and loveless, and to a great extent he is. This is world we helped make; it is our duty to ourselves and our fellow man to help undo it.

AGE LIMIT RAISED

Dentists' Aides Wanted

The age limit has been raised from 25 to 40 on the "earn as you learn" program for women dental assistants at the UNC School of Dentistry.

This is the third year the unique program has been offered by the UNC Dental School. It will begin on June 8 for a limited number of high school graduates.

This special training program is financed by the U. S. Public Health Service. Under this plan a student will not be required to pay for books, tuition or laboratory fees. At the same time, the student will receive a salary of about $30 a week while she is being trained.

The training program will be open to any unmarried high school graduate between the ages of 18 and 40. Inquiries must be received by the School of Dentistry not later than March 15. Women who have worked in dental offices are not eligible for the program.

This training program is to determine how dental assistants may best be trained by a School of Dentistry. Also, a second aim of the program is to train dental students how to use effectively the services of a dental assistant.

The one year training program will consist of two parts. The first part of the program will be three months of lectures, laboratory procedures and demonstrations, with limited clinical work at the UNC School of Dentistry.

After the basic three-month educational period, the remainder of the nine-month program will be devoted to on-the-job training. This will be given either at the Clinic of the School of Dentistry or in offices of private dentists.

"Dec. 11 — We received a telegram from Mr. Cliburn which read: "I count it a great and distinct honor in accepting this outstanding award given by the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce and along with my parents plan to be present for the awards ceremony the 17th of January."

"Jan. 2 — We received word by telephone from the Fort Lauderdale Jaycees that Mr. Cliburn's agent had contacted them and said that Mr. Cliburn had a concert commitment on Jan. 17, the date of the awards ceremony. We immediately contacted Mr. Cliburn's agent for verification. The agent verified that Cliburn was committed to the concert engagement and asked that the award be presented in absentia.

Henderson

ature. As scientist, historian, biographer, scholar, teacher and critic, he has won acclaim.

He joined the UNC faculty in 1899 and retired in 1947 as Kenan professor of mathematics, emeritus.

BEGAN STUDY IN 1903

Dr. Henderson began his study of Shaw in 1903, and since 1911 has written five biographical and literary studies of Shaw and his works. He has also contributed hundreds of articles and reviews about Shaw in the leading journals of the United States and Europe and in the leading newspapers of this country.

These works by Henderson have produced comment from top American and English critics, but no one book has prompted as much favorable criticism as his latest, "G. B.S.: Man of the Century."

William D. Chase, secretary of the Shaw Society of America, wrote, "There is one biographer (of Shaw) who for many reasons, stands head and shoulders above the rest . . . 'George Bernard Shaw; Man of the Century' is destined to be regarded as one of the foremost literary biographies of the English language."

HENDERSON PRAISED

In a New York Times book review, Brooks Atkinson wrote that no one can write another book without using Henderson's work as a source book. "Not only informative and many-sided but consistently entertaining," he noted.

Allan M. Laing, an authority on Shaw from Liverpool, England, commented, "The book is the crowning achievement of a lifetime of research and devotion. To read it is to know Shaw intimately and to appreciate to the full the justice of Dr. Henderson's description of Shaw as the Man of the Century.

DETAIL

"Exhaustive detail, carefully documented facts, ample and apt quotation, shrewd and balanced criticism, informed comment and fascinating new material make the new biography the most useful and thorough-going work on Shaw ever published or ever likely to be published."

John Barkham of the Saturday Review Syndicate described the book as "brilliant panorama of British intellectual life for the past three generations . . . probably the most detailed exposition of anyone who has lived in our time. It deserves a place alongside the writings of G.B.S. himself."

A review in the Richmond News Leader by Dayton Kohler called it "probably the most completely documented biography of the century."

'Y' Plans Publicity Program

The YMCA will inaugurate a program of extensive publicity of the duties and purposes of the organization in the coming weeks, according to newly elected President Randy Shelton.

Shelton announced Saturday that Y advisers Bill Carse, Miss Anne Queen and Claude Shotts will call a series of joint YMCA-YWCA meetings to "better correlate the functions of both organizations as they pertain to the various facets of student life."

Shelton, a senior from Winston-Salem, was elected president of the YMCA by acclamation for the remainder of the 1958-59 term by the Y Cabinet last week.

Forthcoming in the stepped-up programming will be a series of newspaper articles on various YMCA executive branches, advisers, committees and discussions of the aims and successes of the Y.

YMCA Publicity Chairman Ben Taylor, working jointly with YWCA publicity chairmen, will edit the series.

UNIVERSITY CLUB

The University Club will meet Tuesday at 7 p.m. in Di Hall, third floor, New West. Plans will be discussed for the pre State-UNC basketball game pep rally.

The Man Who Thinks for Himself Knows — ONLY VICEROY HAS A THINKING MAN'S FILTER... A SMOKING MAN'S TASTE!

Friday night an all-American was born. Doug Moe, Carolina's sophomore wonder boy, finally broke loose and Duke got the bad end of the bargain. Barring some unforeseen accident, we don't see anything to stand in Moe's way of reaching the coveted spotlight of all-American.

Moe's performance Friday night was one that had everyone gaping in open-mouthed wonder. Although only 6-5, he moved into the pivot early in the second half and from there was simply unstoppable. He almost singlehandedly pulled the Tar Heels from way behind into a commamnding lead.

The statistics, which give a little insight into his performance: 32 points, 24 in the second half. 13 rebounds, high for Carolina. He hit 12 of 18 from the floor. He connected on 8 of 9 from the foul line. He did a beautiful job on Duke's center Carrol Youngkin. He had four fouls early in the second half, but never fouled out.

Moe's 32-point total ties him for the one game high with York Larese, who got the same number against Maryland. Larese, too, has a good chance of making all-American. Whether either of them ever does or not, this is a cinch — Carolina has the two finest sophomores in the entire country.

★ ★ ★

Now arises the question that has plagued us all the entire season: Could Carolina beat Kentucky? The answer is yes. And we get a feeling that perhaps those two powers will meet before the season ends.

Although Moe stands out as the player in the Duke game, we can't overlook the fact that he had a lot of help. Somebody had to get the ball to him. Lee Shaffer snapped out of his slump by pouring in 22.

The win, in spite of Moe's sterling performance, was definitely a team effort. From a cold first half, the Tar Heels emerged in the second half as a basketball giant. We sincerely doubt if any team in the country could have stopped them in that second half.

Now all eyes turn to one day on the calendar: February 18. That is the date that Exeretf Case brings his Wolfpack to Chapel Hill for another crack at the Carolinians. There are two games between: Carolina visits Wake Forest the 12th and Loyola of Chicago the 14th.

Back to the Duke game, Carolina hit a blistering 52% of its shots in the second half and wound up with a 48% mark. The Blue Devils did even better, with 49%. The difference, statistically, was on the foul line. The difference, in reality, was Moe.

Carolina now seems to have a patent on the "one big star per game" method of winning. It was Moe at Duke, Larese against Maryland, Shaffer versus Notre Dame. And frequently the Heels use the "five stars per game" method of winning. From this comes the fact that all five starters are averaging in double digits.

The Tar Heel student body seemed to be well represented in Durham Friday night. Either there were a lot of students there or most of the neutral fans were rooting for the Heels. Toward the finish, the pro-Carolina faction was out-yelling the Duke students.

The Duke crowd seemed quite confident at halftime (with the score 42-33 in favor of the Blue Devils) that they would win. Such remarks as "Wonder what McGuire's excuse will be," and "Wonder how much we'll beat them by" were heard around the court. At one point the Duke fans even had the nerve to cheer, "Pour it on!"

Their enthusiasm started when the Blue Imps edged out the Tar Babies in a preliminary contest 74-70 and carried over into the start of the varsity game. When Duke led at 11-4 the roof shook a little, and at the end of the half it nearly came unhinged.

But at about 10 o'clock, when the final ballot was in, the Duke stands were cloaked in the silence of mourning. They have nothing to be ashamed of, though, for the sophomore-laden Devils put up a real scrap. They just didn't have the horses down the stretch.

Florida Beats Carolina Swimmers 50 To 36

26-Meet Win Streak Snapped By Gators

The Carolina swimming team's remarkable winning streak was suddenly snapped at 26 here yesterday when Florida's Gators showed up with too much power for the Tar Heels and emerged with a 50-36 victory.

The phenomenal win streak, which looked for a while like it would never be broken, started way back in 1956 under Coach Ralph Casey. It was continued last year and this year by Pat Earey, and was run to 26 in a row before being broken by the Gators.

This year's version of the Tar Heels, who had won 6 straight meets, is loaded with sophomores. 6 all-Americans left the team through graduation last year.

The Floridians had a 3-1 record going into the meet, having lost only to Miami. Last year Carolina easily defeated Florida here in Chapel Hill en route to another unbeaten season.

The Gators broke a 35-35 tie by capturing the final two events. After eight events, the two teams found themselves all tied up. But Florida's Karl Weidman put the visitors ahead by capturing the 200-yard breaststroke.

The Tar Heels still had a chance to tie, but Florida clinched the win as they set a new Florida University record of 3:32.4 in the 440-yard freestyle relay.

Coach Pat Earey said, "They just had too many sprinters for us."

Even sensational Harry Bloom, who came through with wins in both the 50 and 100 yard freestyle events, wasn't enough to turn the tide for the Tar Heels.

The Gators took 6 first out of a possible ten, but took many seconds and thirds to add to their total.

Florida's Joe Calkin also won two events, the 200-backstroke and the 440-freestyle.

The summary:

400-yard medley relay: 1—Carolina (Hunter, Mercer, Dodson, and Nash) 4:03.0

220-yard freestyle: 1—Calkin (F), 2—Simonton (C), 3—Langley (F) 2:14.9

50-yard freestyle: 1—Bloom (C) 2—Duganne (F), 3—Scales (F) :23.5

Diving: 1—Henne (F), 2—Woods (F), 3—Cashwell (C) 216.2

200-yard backstroke: 1—Ruggie (F), 2—Hunter (C), 3—Hamrick (C) 2:21.0

440-yard freestyle: 1—Calkin (F), 2—Zwicker (C), 3—Langley (F) 5:00.1

200-yard breaststroke: 1—Wiedmann (F), 2—McDonnell (F), 3—Mercer (C) 2:36.7

440-yard freestyle relay: 1—Florida (Duganne, Wahlquist, Scales and Pollock) 3:32.4

Baseball Card Is Released

Carolina today announced a 25-game baseball schedule for this spring, including an appearance in the fourth annual Florida State Invitational tournament in late March.

The Florida event, which is divided into two sections, opens on March 26. The Tar Heels will play four games in three days at Tallahassee. The other teams competing in their section of the tournament are Florida, Illinois, Florida State and Michigan. Tournament pairings have not been announced.

The Tar Heels will play two games before making their annual Florida excursion, opening the season on March 23 against Dartmouth here and meeting Connecticut the following day. Beginning April 1, Ithaca and East Carolina, both to be played here, will be the only non-conference foes the team will meet.

Coach Walter Rabb has already started indoor drills and plans to move the squad outdoors Feb. 17. Thirteen lettermen have returned, including his first string outfield of last season, Tommy Saintsing, John Burgwyn and Gerald Griffin. Lettermen pitchers returning include aces Wayne Young and Ben Harding. First string catchers Al Baldwin and Bruce Crump are both back.

Biggest problem for Rabb will be replacing three starting infielders on a Tar Heel team which won 19, lost eight and tied one, losing to Clemson in a playoff for the ACC championship. This sterling trio consisted of Captain Roger Honeycutt, Al Pons and Carson Oldham.

Good help is expected to come up from last year's fine freshman team, which won 16, lost five and tied one. Among these prospects are catcher Carroll Bolick (.305), second baseman Ferg Norton (.316), outfielder Russ Hollers (.333), and pitcher Jerry McNeill (5-0).

The Schedule:

March 23 — Dartmouth here, March 24 — Connecticut here, March 26-27-28 — Florida State Invitational Tournament at Tallahassee, Fla., Apr. 1 — Ithaca here, Apr. 3 — East Carolina here, Apr. 6 — at Clemson, Apr. 7 — at South Carolina, Apr. 11 — Wake Forest here, Apr. 14 — Duke here, Apr. 16 — at Wake Forest, Apr. 18 — at N. C. State, Apr. 24 — Clemson here, Apr. 25 — South Carolina here, Apr. 28 — at Duke.

May 1 — at Maryland, May 2— at Virginia, May 5 — N. C. State here, May 7 — at Duke , May 8 —Virginia here, May 9 — Maryland here, May 14 — State here , May 16 — Wake Forest (site undecided).

Carolina's varsity wrestlers dropped below the .500 mark again last night when powerful West Virginia beat them 19-8.

Perrin Henderson and Ron Purdy were the only winners for the Tar Heels the entire night. Henderson decisioned Turner 9-4 ad Purdy gained a close 6-5 decision over Duffield.

The loss dropped Sam Barne's crew to a 3-4 overall record, they are 2-1 in conference. West Virginia has a fine 7-1 record.

The only loss suffered by the Mountaineers this season was by VMI, a team that Carolina had previously beaten.

Only one pin occurred the whole night, but that was by West Virginia as Miller pinned Hurley in the heavyweight class.

The frosh lost also as they ran into far more than they could handle in Fort Bragg. The military group was manned by grown men, mostly paratroopers, and the freshmen bowed 31-3.

The frosh's only win of the night was when Pope Shuford decisioned DeVecohis in the 157-pound division.

The freshman record is now an even 3-3.

Chem Prof Gets Last Installment Of Grant

The final $7,500 installment in a "no strings attached" grant has been presented to UNC chemist Charles N. Reilley by the Research Corporation, a national foundation which encourages scientific research.

Dr. Reilley has now received a total of $22,500 from the Foundation, which he has applied or will apply to his research activities in analytical chemistry.

The initial grant in February 1957 was given with the emphasis on freedom of the scientist to apply the funds in any manner or for any purchase which would aid his research.

The funds have been used to hire post-doctoral research fellows, to pay undergraduate and graduate students for summer work and to buy equipment and supplies. Some of the money also enabled Dr. Reilley to travel to meetings of analytical chemists in various parts of the country.

Dr. Reilley's main research areas concern mechanism of electrode processes, metal complexes, electroanalytical chemistry and color principles.

A frequent invited lecturer on analytical chemistry, both in this country and abroad, Dr. Reilley is now secretary-treasurer of the Analytical Division of the American Chemical Society.

He is editor of a continuing series of books entitled "Advances in Analytical Chemistry and Instrumentation," is on the advisory board for "Talanta," a technical publication; and is section editor of "Treatise of Analytical Chemistry."

Debators Win Awards In Va. Meet

Four UNC debators won "excellent" awards at the Marshall-Wythe Tournament held last weekend at William and Mary College in Williamsburg, Va.

Participating in the debate from UNC were Clay Simpson, David Evans, Tom Long and John Brooks. Thirty other universities were represented at the tournament.

UNC's affirmative team made up of Long and Brooks won decisions over Pittsburgh, Wake Forest and Richmond. Simpson and Evans on the negative team beat Princeton, Rutgers, Naval Academy and Georgia.

Both teams finished with a record of seven wins and five loses.

The cessation of nuclear weapons development was debated at the tournament.

While the UNC debators were at William and Mary, they participated in a sight seeing tour, banquet, jazz concert and dance.

University Has Obligation To Grow Says Chancellor

Chancellor William B. Aycock said yesterday that he did not see that the University would put a maximum figure on enrollment, but added that he would take every measure possible to see that the University does not sacrifice quality for quantity.

He pointed out, in a Chancellor's Cabinet meeting devoted to the topic of admissions' standards and enrollment, that he felt the University had an obligation to the state to grow.

He said it was not sure, but there was a possibility that future increases in student enrollment would be proportionally larger in the graduate and professional levels with respect to undergraduate levels.

Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver explained that enrollment projections, which were fixed in a future prospectus of the University showing a rise to about 14,000 students in 1970, were based on several population studies in this state, as well as population studies which compared this state to other states. It was also pointed out that a diminishing percentage of high school graduates who went to college came to the University, a fact apparently accounted for by the increasing numbers of high school graduates who go to college in this state. As of now 22 per cent of the high school graduates who go to college, go to Carolina. Thirty per cent of the high school graduates go to college.

The Chancellor reported that admissions' testing eliminated some 10-11 per cent of the applicants to the undergraduate colleges this fall. He added that the admissions' test had become fairly well established, and that its use would be regulated as the University obtains more information about the results of testing.

He pointed out that the University was receiving a higher academically prepared group of students this year as evidenced by the amount of students admitted to advanced standing an by the comments of many of the faculty.

Admissions' standards, he explained, were flexible, however a student had to obtain a minimum score of 300 on verbal aptitude and 375 on mathematical aptitude or a combined 700 score to obtain admission. If a student was in the top half of his graduating class, he might be admitted by the Faculty Council even if his scores were lower than the prescribed figure.

According to the College Entrance Examination Board figures the median score on each test is 50, and 98 per cent of the students who take the test score above 300, while 84 per cent of the students who take the test score above 400.

Student Body President Don Furtado brought out the problem of graduate student instruction in the freshman level course by saying that students were not getting the necessary stimulation to learn.

Assistant Dean of Student Affairs Sam Magill pointed out that from his conversations with the new resident counselors in the Lower Quad dormitories, Furtado's complaint seems to have been borne out.

Alexander Heard, dean of the graduate school, said that current figures indicated that of the 7,500 students on the UNC campus 10 per cent would go into college teaching while another 10 per cent would teach at other levels.

Top Geologist Is Scheduled For Institute

A geologist - geographer who heads Louisiana State University's Graduate School will visit here during the coming week to address a teachers institute sponsored by the National Science Foundation.

Prof. Richard J. Russell will arrive here Wednesday and that night at 8 o'clock will speak in 207 Venable Hall on "The Decline of Bayou Sale."

He will be introduced by Dr. William A. White, UNC professor of geology, who, like Russell, is a specialist in geomorphology.

Although open o the public, the program is scheduled primarily for participants in the NSF-sponsored Academic Year Institute for High School Teachers of Mathematics and Science.

Fifty select teachers are participating in the year's study program, conducted by the UNC Institute of Natural Science and directed by Dr. E. C. Markham, Smith professor of chemistry.

On Thursday night Dr. Russell will address local professional geologists on "Caribbean Beach Rocks." This event is scheduled for 8 p.m. in New East Building.

Before joining the LSU faculty a number of years ago, Dr. Russell taught at Texas Technological College. His professional services have included collaborating on soil conservation with the U. S. Department of Agriculture, working with the Louisiana Geological Survey,

Student Union Cut By Advisory Group

The Advisory Budget Commission left very little more than the basic operating costs in their recommendation to the General Assembly for the University of North Carolina.

In all the budget group recommended a total of $9,917,583 for the 1959-61 biennium, including only $484,952 from the "B" or growth budget. The Board of Higher Education recommendation for improvement was over $2,000,000 for the biennium, which was about half of the original administration request.

The entirety of the Consoldated University budget recommendation ran well over $27,000,000.

The Commission recommened a bond issue totalling $29,000,000 to be voted by the people of the state, and another $9,000,000 to be authorized without a popular vote. All of these monies are to be used for appropriations for capital improvements.

Notable by its absences was a student union from the capital improvements request, thus all but killing the possibility of a building at the University in the next biennium.

Funds for faculty salaries were drastically cut from the administration request, which called for about ten times the amount recommended by the commission.

All in all Public Health Affairs fared better than Academic Affairs in receiving aid from the Commission's recommendations.

Included in capital improvements were: $480,000 for a cafeteria, $240,000 renovations to laboratory facilities in Venable Hall, $210,000 for additions to the hysics building, $750,000 for a new botany building, $750,000 for a new geology and geography building.

$425,000 for an addition to Swain Hall, $485,000 for additions to Hill Hall, $750,000 for a new foreign language building, and $875,000 for new dormitories to house 700 students.

Noticeable for its absence "B" budget provision to aid the University library, which currently stand third in the South.

In addition the budget commission appropriated $75,000 for each of the two years of the biennium for the new computor which is to be housed in Phillips Hall.

In all the budget recommendations followed the lines of the "A" budget for current operating costs and projections in terms of population growth. Capital improvements were recommended along academic lines only, with the sole excepton of dormitory facilities and a cafeteria building.

In the field of capital improvements the division of Health Affairs fared less well, not receiving anything on their proposed building program which would have elminated much of what is currently housed in temporary structures.

Four Sent To Legislature In SP Voting

Four new members of the Student Legislature were selected by the Student Party in its meeting last night.

The elections were to fill vacancies caused by the resignation of party members from the Legislature. Elected were Swag Grimsley, Norman E. Smith, Mike Shulman, and Don Dotson.

Grimsley was appoined to fill a vacated seat in Dorm Men's I, while Smith was appointed in Dorm Men's II. In Town Men's III Mike Shulman received the appointment, and in Town Men's IV Dotson received the party's nod.

Following the elections, Student Body Vice President Ralph Cummings outlined for the group a program of reorganization of Student Government now in the planing stage. According to Cummings, the plan would classify all committees, boards, or official positions as either executive or legislative in function.

A special assistant to the president would generally coordinate all operations in the executive department. Groups under this jurisdiction would include Orientation, NSA Committee, Campus Affairs Board, Honor Council Commission, and similar bodies.

The vice president of the student body would oversee the operations of legislative committees and boards, while the secretary and treasurer would be in charge of their particular areas.

Speaker Pro Tem of the Legislature Norman B. Smith gave the party a brife picture of a similar reorganization being drawn up for the numerous judicial bodies on campus. Under the judicial plan the Student-Faculty Appeal Board would retain final appellate jurisdiction, but a Student Appeal Board would be set up to decide appeals from major offense convictions and constitutional issues.

Beneath this body would fall the councils dealing with violations of the Honor Code and Campus Code. Others in the hierarchy would be courts concerned with offenses in student residences, and below these would be minor judicial bodies such as the Traffic Council.

Good Will Orchestra Appears Wednesday

One of America's "good will orchestras" will appear in Memorial Hall Wednesday at 8 p.m.

The New Orleans Symphony Orchestra will perform in a concert sponsored by the Chapel Hill Concert Series and Student Entertainment Committee. The concert is free to UNC students.

The New Orleans Symphony is one of four outstanding orchestras of the nation sent abroad by the U. S. State Department as a part of America's "cultural exchange program."

The New Orleans contingent visited 16 South American countries and received warm acclaim wherever they went.

Alexander Hilsberg, the conductor, took the podium of the New Orleans Symphony in 1952 and after six years of careful selection and growth, the group is considered one of the finest in the world.

Other orchestras selected by the State Department to go abroad for concerts were the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, the New York Philharmonic Symphony and the NBC Symphony.

Critics have been generous in their praise of the New Orleans Orchestra, calling it "the fastest rising orchestra in the nation."

The Wednesday night concert will include such selections as: Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, Overture to "Colas Broughnon" by Kobelevsky, Interlude and Dance No. 1 from "La Vida Breve" by Falla and Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2, by Ravel.

Kenneth Scutt will be featured as flute soloist in Night Solliloquy.

Book Buyers Have Boom In Club Sale

"Business is booming," one member of the Graduate Club exclaimed in reference to the club's book sale Monday in the smoking study of the Library.

Some people are buying just one volume; others are buying as many as 30.

The low-priced book sale started Monday and will continue through Wednesday unless business demands it to continue. Books may be purchased from 2 to 9:30 p.m.

The 10,000 books on sale represent almost every field of academic study and knowledge. Many novels, plays, books of poetry are also included in the collection.

For the convenience of the buyer, the Graduate Club has sorted out the immense mass of books, and all books are categorized on the room's shelves according to subject.

These books were made available to the club by the Library so that the profits of the sale may go toward buying some furniture for the graduate study in the stacks of the Library.

Members of the Graduate Club are available to help anyone in selecting his books.

Secretary Dulles Takes Leave To Have Operation

WASHINGTON—Secretary of State Dulles is taking a leave of absence to undergo a hernia operation and to recuperate further from a recent intestinal illness.

This was announced last night by the White House, which said the leave would be "for a short period."

Dulles will enter Walter Reed Army Hospital here today for the operation.

The arrangement was disclosed shortly after the 71-year-old Dulles had conferred with President Eisenhower in the White House living quarters.

Dulles, who returned only yesterday from talks in London, Paris and Bonn regarding the Berlin crisis, told Eisenhower in a written communication:

"My doctors advise that I should have an operation for a recently developed hernia; and I have not wholly thrown off the effects of the inflammation of the colon which occurred last December."

During Dulles' absence, Under Secretary of State Christian A. Herter will fill the top state department position.

However, Herter now is on vacation and C. Douglas Dillon, Deputy Under Secretary for Economic Affairs, will fill in until Herter returns.

In 1956 Dulles was operated on for the removal of a cancerous portion of his lower intestine. Last December, when the colon again became inflamed, doctors said there was no connection. They said there was no indication of any flareup of the old cancer.

Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said at the White House tonight, when asked whether Dulles plans to return to his job:

"He not only has every intention (of returning) but is going to return."

Dulles' letter to Eisenhower, however, made it clear that the secretary may be away from his desk for some time even after completion of convalesence.

In asking to be relieved temporarily, Dulles spoke first of a need for time, after his operation, for physical recuperation.

Then he added that he also would like to have some time "when, free from other responsibilities, I could concentrate on the complicated and grave problems raised by the Soviets' threats regarding Berlin and the Allied response thereto."

Dulles' former cancer condition was brought up in the discussion between newsmen and Hagerty.

Hagerty said, however, "There is no sign whatsoever of anything malignant" in connection with Dulles' current trouble.

The text of Dulles' letter to Eisenhower:

"February 9, 1959

"Dear Mr. President:

"I should like your permission to turn over to Under Secretary Herter, or in his absence, to Under Secretary Dillon, the duties of Secretary of State for a short period.

"My doctors advise that I should have an operation for a recently developed hernia; and I have not wholly thrown off the effects of the inflammation of the colon which occurred last December. I should accordingly like to devote a few weeks to physical recuperation, and also have some time when, free from other responsibilities, I could concentrate on the complicated and grave problems raised by the Soviet threats regarding Berlin and the Allied response thereto.

"I would be available for consultation with you and my associates and would expect, after a few weeks, to resume fully the duties of the office.

"I regret the circumstances which lead me to ask for this respite, but I have full confidence, as I know you have, in my associates in the Department of State.

"Faithfully Yours,

"John Foster Dulles."

It was late in the day—5 p.m. EST—when Dulles called at the White House.

Instead of going to the President's office in the West wing, as he usually does, the Secretary went to the main entrance of the mansion and conferred with the President in his oval room study on the second floor.

In reply to questions, Hagerty said Dulles plans to enter Walter Reed about 10 a.m. today. The Press Secretary had no information on how long he will be hospitalized.

Hagerty added that Eisenhower intends to open his news conference this morning with a tribute to Dulles.

Sen. Styles Bridges (R-NH), Chairman of the Senate Republican policy committee: "I hope that his absence will be of short duration and that he soon can assume full command again."

Bardot Topic Of Phi Meet Tonight At 8

A resolution to popularize and/or beautify physical education, graduation ceremonies, the Philanthropic Society and the UNC campus through the "proper" use of Brigitte Bardot will be debated by the Phi tonight at 8 o'clock.

The bill states that many UNC students regard required physical education courses with distaste, graduation ceremoneis at the University often are quite boring, the Phi needs to stimulate interest in its activities and every possible means should be used to beautify the campus.

If the proposal is adopted the Phi will resolve that UNC shall confer an honorary Ph.D. in physical education upon the French movie actress, that her portrait shall be hung in the lounge of Graham Memorial and in Phi Hall.

Miss Bardot would also become an honorary member of the Phi.

The Phi meets on the fourth floor of New East.

'Sweeping Changes' Are Planned By UP

The "most sweeping" change in the University Party will be brought up at tonight's party meeting, according to Charlie Gray, UP floorleader.

When UP meets tonight at 7:15 in Roland Parker I and II, party leaders will introduce a "plan" to revamp the voting procedure for nominations.

The details of this "plan" were not released by UP leaders, who wanted to wait until the party members vote on the proposals tonight.

The plan will, however, bring equal representation to dormitories and fraternities within the party's voting procedure, Gray said.

The present method of selecting nominees for various campus offices is "block voting." This means that a fraternity or sorority (or dormitory) can bring as many members to cast their votes for one candidate.

Block voting has resulted in agreements among various groups to vote for each other's candidates.

Since the new proposal will affect all segments on campus, Gray said, the UP is interested in having students from all dorms, fraternities and sororities attend tonight's meeting.

Other items of business to come before the UP tonight include the date for making nominations to student government offices and discussion of campaign policies.

UP Interviews For Vacancies To Begin Wed.

The University Party has five vacancies to fill in Student Legislature. Students interested in applying for the vacant seats have been asked to come to Graham Memorial Wednesday after 2 p.m. for interviews.

The vacated Legislature seats include one in each of the following districts: Town Women's, Town Men's I, Town Men's II, Town Men's II and Town Men's IV.

UP Chairman John Minter and UP floorleader Charlie Gray will appoint students to the five Legislature seats.

Editorship Is Still Open To Applicants

Applications for editorship of the Woman's Handbook are open to junior coeds through Feb. 13. Interviews will be held Feb. 17.

Applications should be submitted to Doris Taylor at the Alpha Gamma Delta house.

Each spring the handbook is compiled and sent to new coeds and parents during the summer.

Last year the 40-page handbook was edited by Suzanne Mosteller.

IN RED SQUARE

Y Offers Seminars

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

See the Kremlin!

Walk around Red Square!

This possibility is being offered by the YMCA-YWCA this summer as part of their Seminars Abroad Program.

The Soviet Union is being included in one of the two seminars available to all Carolina students. This will include touring and meeting people in Leningrad, Kiev, Odessa, Yalta, Sochi, Kharkow and Moscow. A total of 23 days will be spent in Russia with a week in Moscow. Also will be a 24-hour steamship excursion across the Black Sea.

Both seminars will together cover France, Switzerland, Italy and Germany in one month. They will split up in Germany, and part of the group will go to Russia.

After completing the Russian tour this group will spend 15 days in Denmark, Germany, Holland and England. The non-Russian tour group will travel extensively in Denmark, Holland, Belgium and Great Britain.

The European-Russian tour will cost approximately $1400 to $1500 for 65 days. This includes all travel, lodging, meals, guides, concerts, theaters and tips. The complete European tour will cost approximately $1100 for 56 days.

Reservations have been made for both groups on a Pan-American jet flight from New York to Paris (seven hours) on June 5.

Plans for these tours are being completed by the YMCA's Seminars Abroad Program.

Each week this semester interested students are meeting to make all decisions and learn more about places to be visited. Faculty and other qualified people will be meeting with the students to give historical background and present conditions.

Further information can be obtained by attending the weekly meetings held Wednesdays at 4 p.m. in the Library's Assembly Room or by contacting Jim Carse, coordinator of the tour, at the Y.

Last summer 29 Carolina students participated in the first Seminars Aboard Program. Because of its success, the program is offered again this summer. The itinerary for the 1959 trips is being planned on the experience and counsel for those who participated in the 1958 program.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Barbara Burkhardt, Donna Linnette Gibbel, Sarah Louise Reese, Thomas Kirkman Smith, William Redin Dawes, Geoffrey Churchhill, Joseph arry Weisenfeld, Stephen Martin Gershenson, George William Rose, Wedie Foltes Mikhail, James Alexander Turner Jr., Fred Hicks Reed and Robert Edward Keller.

Telephone

There is nothing like the Chapel Hill Telephone system to make one wish for Southern Bell. In no system in the United States is there more difficulty in making communication by phone.

Often there is a total inability to get an operator on long distance calls for at least ten minutes. At other times, a busy signal signifies that the operator is not to be found. Wrong numbers are more than common, and crossing of wires, so that you are the breathless participant of five or more conversations at once happens quite frequently.

Moreover, administratively it is next to impossible to get private lines on the local system. Most phones are on a two to four party basis, so that the availability of private connections is almost nil.

The net result of this confusion to make one who might think favorably of state operated utilities in principle, long for private utilities. Surely private utilities offer an arrangement whereby local calls can be made for free. If so, the transition ought to come soon. Many people are tired of fooling with inept management.

Closed Study?

The Daily Tar Heel received a reliable report that a majority of the freshman coeds who currently are under the restrictive rules passed last spring failed to make the requisite C average during the fall semester.

Previously, under a system whereby all students had the same rules, identical to those currently operative for junior and senior women, 90% of the non-nursing freshmen women passed their courses and half of them were in the top quarter of their class.

Obviously, either the rules do not work or admissions standards have fallen miserably. However, according to Dean Katherine Carmichael, who in an interview last year supported the new rules, admissions standards have not fallen.

So that, it is quite clear that the oppresive rules that the freshman coeds must live within have not benefitted the academic progress of the freshman. It is high time, for the academic welafre and for the social welfare of the woman student, that these rules were removed.

Standards Committee

The Daily Tar Heel is looking forward to see the results of the Standards Committee meeting Wednesday. By then it should be determined whether it will be a female vigilante group, or a group concerned with campus-wide discussion of moral and ethical issues. If the group is the former, then it should be cut off at its inception.

However, if the true purpose of the committee will be to create interest and not to preach manners and morals, then it should meet no objection from any quarter.

Wednesday afternoon will tell.

New Dorms

Assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs Ray Jefferies showed several student representatives a dormitory at State College which was built at a smaller expense than the new dorms at Carolina, but is, to say the least, a better dormitory including such features as soundproofing.

Some of the features of this new dormitory can be taken into account when one thinks of new UNC dormitories. The students might just profit from such consideration.

Letter On Spectrum Criticism

Editor:

The obvious efforts of A. Wolff to be cute and pseudoish in his views, not criticism, of the Spectrum not only fail from a humorous standpoint but from a critical standpoint as well.

Montaigne once said that there were more books written about books than any other subject, I agree, I also think that critics in general maintain their profession as critics simply because they lack the ingenuity to say anything worthwhile and create a work of their own. I think this is a particularly true with A. Wolff. What has the "brilliant" A. ever written of "importance"? Is it necessary to have written something of importance in order to be a critic? No, definitely not. If it were we would only have about two critics left—what a blessing. But the criteria for judging what others have written become much more valid and significant if one has attempted a literary form himself.

Is it possible that A. Wolff's arty works were not accepted by Spectrum? Is it possible that The Carolina Quarterly too neglected the A's genius? What a pity for UNC that its only, true, genuine intellectual is so neglected. Perhaps A. Wolff does not consider either of the two magazines worthy of his masterpieces. Pity again, but doubtful. His last paragraph ends on the hope that better writers will submit to Spectrum next issue, implied throughout his article: I am a great writer and critic. My suggestion: If your work was neglected at first, try again. You consider yourself a good writer Mr. Wolff, well, here's your opportunity. I remember last year the A's comments on Eliot's "Cocktail Party," in effect: a worthless performance. I was amused to learn later that A. Wolff was not considered talented enough to be in the play (gold star for trying). I wouldn't have liked the play either, particularly the person who was nasty enough to play my part! But let me leave this disgusting, but true, argumentum ad hominum and consider A. Wolff as a critic.

"Don't Forget To Fasten Your Money Belt"

Even as a critic he fails. By stating that the majority of poems in the Spectrum were not worth mentioning, he defeats the purpose of criticism. Why say anything? Nothing about nothing is something? His comments on Mrs. Higgin's (not Miss) short story show his lack of understanding of the essential doctrine of the story. The $5,000 in no way could have been interpreted as a symbol. The message of the short story is entirely too obvious to point out to the readers of The Daily Tar Heel, I won't compromise Mrs. Higgin's well written short story, even to inform the misinformed A. Wolff.

The desire to perpetuate antagonistic "views" might be A. Wolff's purpose—H. L. Menckenish in nature. If this is the only writing ability he has, at least he should have a superficial knowledge of what he is criticizing. "Why do I bother to read such a column?" one might ask. Laughs and disgust and peace. I have been reading "Lil Orphan Annie" since I was six which is one commonplace after another with an average thought every other column (or tenth picture). I usually read A. Wolff's column late at night so I can sleep peacefully, i.e., with nothing on my mind. I might add that "Little Orphan Annie" is vastly superior.

My suggestions: Quit trying to be so damn cute; realize that this campus is not composed of Thomas Wolfes, and even if it were, their first efforts would not be "polished" or up to the arbitrary standards of art as you conceive it; quit trying to impress the world that you and you alone are the great intellectual; write something significant (not criticism or "views") yourself and if you have to criticize, at least read with intelligence and understanding and not miss what is the most obvious doctrine in a work of art.

Richard Padgett

(1.) Mr. Wolff never submitted any of his work to SPECTRUM.

(2.) Mr. Wolff never has his work rejected by The Carolina Quarterly. Mr. Wolff has served on the Poetry Board of that magazine for two semesters.

More Of Campus Views On Morality Problem

Cortland Edwards II

The girls at the University of North Carolina or at any coed school are caught between three unfortunate phenomena—the immaturity of the men, the mating gradient, and the loss of personal identity. All three of these are cultural in origin and it is almost impossible for any girl to combat these things alone. When a girl does have problems the most intelligent thing she could do is to chat with her minister or even better chat with the Student Infirmary Psychiatrist—that's what they are there for.

The mating gradient is simply the fact that women tend to marry men above them intellectually, socially, and economically while the men tend to marry women below them. For girls who go to college, the field for husbands is considerably narrower. In fact, it can be said that the more education a girl receives the less men there are that will attract her for a future marriage.

For the man who tends to marry below his level (for egotistical reasons) the coed represents those persons who are equal to or superior to him—and therefore, he will never consider them as marriage possibilities, only as play things. No man wants to marry a girl that gets "A's" in the courses he could only get "C's" in! He does not want to marry a competitor.

The social situation on any campus is quite precarious. With each couple that date on the campus we have an inherent frustration before they even put their coats on to go out. The boy wants sex and the girl wants marriage—so what do they do? They play games!!!

As one coed aptly puts it, "There are two major types of boys on this campus. If you (the girl) drink, then the first type takes you out and tries to get you drunk and then takes you out to Hogan's Lake, Kenan Woods, or the golf course. The second type is more subtle, he takes you to the movies, then as you're walking out of the theatre he says let's go get a cup of coffee, you agree, and then he proceeds to take you the long way to that cup of coffee, via Hogan's Lake, Kenan Woods, or the golf course!"

The game of course, is to see who holds out the longest! Usually the boy is forced to give in first, but not without being damned nasty about it. So he drops her and tries another. With enough 'scores' the boy adopts the philosophy that all girls are sexually available—depending on the time and technique. If he doesn't score he says to himself, "Oh well, she was a bitch anyway. I'll do better next time!" He still is not scarred by the experience.

Its not so easy with the girls involved however, for this type of experience almost always leaves a scar of some sort. Too many of these bad experiences with these immature boys and there can be permanent damage. It grows first of all, into a distrust for men, then a fear of marriage, and finally a deathly fear of all men.

The answer? There is no one easy answer!

However a good education would help. And a good understanding of the situation would help too.

First of all, both boys and girls should be taught that the most important part of life is LOVE. That sex should not be engaged in lightly and certainly not between strangers. In other words, sex should be individualized.

Second, it should be remembered that the most important part of having intercourse is not the purely physical function that it serves, but rather it is the sharing of mutual pleasure because of the two particular persons involved. If one wants intercourse merely as a function—then you don't need a partner!

Third, girls should remember that a man, regardless of what he says, considers it his inalienable right that his wife should come to his matrimonial bed as a virgin. This has been his Christian training too and it cannot be erased from the emotional part of him.

Fourth, along with the third factor girls should keep in mind the fact that no matter how "madly in love" he is with his girl, or how honorable his intentions, or even how long he has been going steady with her, five minutes after he has possessed her for the first time, his estimation of her goes down quite a few notches. The question then pops up "If I could talk her into it, how many others have?"

Fifth, the girls should remember that if they choose to use their sex as a weapon to get the man they want—then it can work both ways. Furthermore, if it is used, the most usual effect it has is that it chases the man away for good.

Sixth, it should be remembered that if a girl has submitted once to a man, regardless of the reason, this does not make her a fallen woman, a tramp, or anything else. Likewise, because one is no longer a virgin there is no reason why one should feel shame or guilt or the necessity to give into every man. Play it smart girls, present yourself as a virgin to every man you date. He cannot prove otherwise and he will respect you for it. If he knows you are not a virgin, he will no longer consider you as a particular woman but rather as his next conquest.

Seventh, it should be remembered that men are just as catty as women and most men brag about each conquest, what kind of girls they are, and what kind of time he had. If the girl is proud of her behavior then there is nothing to worry about.

Finally, if the coeds choose to assert their individuality to prove that they are equal to men and should have equal rights—they should remember that "The average man is not yet psychologically adjusted in his thinking to woman being his equal. He is quite selfish in his entire attitude. He, by customs of the past, wants a breeder for his children, a wife and a companion, a cook, a dishwasher and housekeeper, and in a great number of instances, a mother to take place of his mother, all wrapped up in one package (Wallace de Ortega Maxey)." Notice he doesn't want a college graduate!

In summary, we see that there are three most unstable groups on any campus: the Purists, the Free Lovers, and the Indiscriminators (those men and women who engage in sex for any other reason than for the enhancement of mutual love).

Wallace de Ortega says, "Conforming, coercion, subjecting, taking advantage of another, personal satisfaction without cooperative response, force or seduction are all acts lower than those performed by the non-human inhabitants of the animal kingdom."

We also know the basis for the instability of these three groups. The primary basis is the general immaturity of the male college students, the relatively low standard of morality, the mating gradient, and the girls trying to find identity as an equal of man or by participating in sexual liasons to prove their normality.

We feel that one solution to the problem lies in each girl understanding what men are, how they react to certain situation, how to adjust to a masculine oriented world, and what role each sex is to play.

In conclusion, we would like to say that if any girl wishes to have an affair with a man, she should not enter into it blindly. She should be cognizant of all the above mentioned factors. She should be in love with him and he with her. And most important of all, in the event that she should get pregnant she should be prepared to marry him; that is, they both should be willing to sacrifice their freedom and their polyganous tendencies. Without these conditions fulfilled there will be shame, bitterness, and disillusionment. With these conditions fulfilled our moral standards and practice will be above reproach and people will find happiness, fulfillment, and a meaningful existence.

On The Literary

Sidney Dakar

Mr. Wolff's comments on the "Spectrum" and its contributors were both amusing and informative. Due to the timely publicity statement, I was unable to purchase a "Spectrum" before all of them were sold. However, judging from most reports, the young authors fell a little short of perfection. The young, aspiring authors have plently of time, however, to improve themselves. This brings to mind an interesting phenomenon. Why do so many people desire to be writers?

Most of us have probably aspired at one time or another to be a great writer. I did until I made a careful study of the facts. It must be obvious to all that there are no hopes of monetary gain from my writings. Writing is, therefore, one of my quiet hobbies that I engage in when not persuing the more active one of "wining and wenching."

The illusion of fame and fortune though writing is held by quite a number of people. Most people, especially beginning writers, have two basic misconceptions about writing. The first is that fame and fortune come to writers. The second is that writing is an easy way to make a living.

The origin of the widely-held myth that fortunes are made by writers probably stems from the occasional press release about some movie company paying one or two-hundred thousand dollars for the rights to a book. We do not read about the thousands of scripts that are rejected. We do not read that the majority of people who try to write never sell their first story. Anyone who is interested in making money will be wise to stay out of the writing field. A mediocre person, and this includes the vast majority of us, can make much more in business than most writers make.

The second myth is that writing is easy. Insert one word and the statement will be true. Mediocre writing is easy. Good writing is one of the most difficult and time-consuming tasks. Good writing seems to be almost a gift of the few, and even these few must spend years perfecting this gift of perception. The odds are heavily weighed against any one person becoming a good creative writer, and anyone who believes otherwise is almost certainly going to be disappointed.

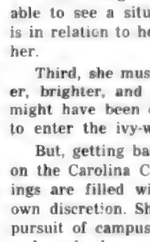
Another false notion about writing is that it can be studied as one would study engineering or medicine. This is obvious from the long lis of "how to write" books on the market, and from the large number of people who are studying journalism in hopes of becoming novelists. Journalism and good creative writing are only similar in that paper and pen are used in doing both. Journalism requires thinking; creative writing requires feeling.

One does not become a great novelist in the classroom. The great masters of French literature did not study how to write; they spent all of their time studying the people they wrote about. A great novelist must live with the ones he is going to portray. He must feel what they feel. How can he write about hunger if he has never been hungry? How can he write about deep feelings of insecurity, frustration, hate and love if he has never had the same feelings? He can't. Without these deep and tortuous feelings within the novelist's heart, his writing is empty and unconvincing.

Of course certain fundamentals must be learned before a novelist begins to put words on paper, but this is the smallest part of his task. Putting words on paper is in a sense a mechanical act. Any good secretary or innocent 18 year-old girl proficient in English grammer can take the rough sketch of a novel and make it grammatically perfect, but they cannot create a line.

Variations

Gail Godwin



Little by little, the many lines in the intricate system of Coed Discipline are becoming blurred.

Or, at least this appears to be the case, judging from the dictates handed down at recent weekly dormitory housemeetings.

The chief bone of contention lies in the differentation between Campus Code offenses and Honor Code offenses. Where the lines are drawn between the two is both debatable and unclear.

Carolina Coeds are getting to the place where they are afraid to speak out — even when they feel they are getting shortchanged. After all, who wants to spend every night for an unlimited period of time within four walls of a dormitory room? Who wants to sit for hours at the end of a long table in a hot stuffy little room in Graham Memorial and be grilled by one's contemporaries who have the power to suspect, suspend, and expel?

Every system in our society — whether it be governmental, social, economical — will sooner or later sprout certain flaws. These flaws are either apprehended by alert members of the system and altered accordingly; or the same flaws begin to multiply like an overactive amoeba or a well-developed cancer. Inevitably, the result is death of the Original System — as its first members planned it and nurtured it.

Today, February 10, 1959, a woman student at Carolina is not at all sure of the role she is supposed to play in the universtiy community of which she is a member.

Her mornings are filled with classes which are aimed at broadening her scope of understanding understanding of her universe, her world, her country, her state, and her own life. She is encouraged to think for herself. It is expected by those who love her that four years of life at the University will send her home fit to cope with everyday forces in a mature and responsible way. It is expected that she will step off the final platform with more than a diploma — she shall be a person in her own right. She shall be a modern, proud, twentieth century American woman who can assume her role as lady physicist, lady educator, lady politician, lady journalist, lady artist, or lady homemaker.

Now what steps are necessary to guide her in reaching these ideal goals? (Universities are still founded on ideals, in spite of all the negativistic and nothingistic tendencies surrounding them.)

First of all she must learn to think for herself, and by this is meant more than simply learning to say: "I think . . ." She must be able to say: "I think . . . because.'

Second, she must be able to see in perspective the conflicting forces around her. She must be able to see a situation and interpret it for what it is in relation to her and in relation to those around her.

Third, she must develop consistently into a richer, brighter, and more beautiful person than she might have been otherwise, had she not been able to enter the ivy-walled buildings.

But, getting back to our university woman's day on the Carolina Campus: Her afternoons and evenings are filled with activities usually left to her own discretion. She can dash madly around in the pursuit of campus offices; she can sit in her room and read; she can go out to the woods and neck; she can read or do her homework; she can sit in one of the campus restaurants and discuss love professors, literature, fraternities, weather, or money; she can exist in a vacuum and do nothing—and long as she or somebody pays her tuition.

But here the freedom stops. There are an infinite number of codes, regulations, and standards of conduct she is expected to follow as she is supposedly developing into a mature, responsible, and free-thinking young woman.

If she neglects to make her bed or if she leaves a bottle (type of bottle not designated in the rules) on the floor of her room for which she is paying a hundred dollars a semester — if she does such things, she is fined from 25 cents upward. It depends on how many days she allows her sheets and pillows to clump in an undignified hump. It depends on how many bottles she leaves on the floor.

She is expected not to lie, cheat, or steal, which is a reasonable expectation to be demanded of her. But she is also encouraged and indeed punished if she does not comply — to scout around and see what the other girls are doing and to promptly report their black deeds at once to the proper authorities.

She is guilty of a standards of conduct offense if she shows public affection in the parlor of the dormitory, on the streets of Franklin, Columbia, Rosemary, etc. Recently, it was announced to her at a dormitory housemeeting that: the Dorm Council and the Women's Residence Council are "really going to crack down on such things." (There was not even the stipulation included by President Messick of East Carolina College who permitted "short kisses" on the campus, but no "long, stimulating ones.'")

If she is one second late after closing hours, she looses her freedom for nine hours during the following week. From eight in the evening until five in the morning (strange?) she may not under any circumstances step outside the dormitory whether she has to: go to the library, get a breath of fresh air, walk a dog for a friend, look for her diamond bracelet which has been lost in the leaves, or simply go get coffee. Now, granted, the line has to be drawn somewhere, but need we be so technical? Even at the more restricted girls' schools (for example Peace Junior College in Raleigh, N. C.) a girl is allowed 15 minutes "grace" a semester. She can accumulate 15 minutes of lateness during the course of three or four months. This way fewer cars are wrecked, fewer legs are broken, and fewer female hearts burst from the exhaustion incurred from racing against the second.

Not to mention the fact that it has been admitted in one dormitory that the dorm clock is fast, but that "we just don't know what to do about it so we'll just have to be brave girls and accept our campus until someone permits us to set the clock back."

(To Be Continued Tomorrow)

WORLD UNDERSTANDING

Six Discussions Planned

The role of students in world understanding is the topic of a series of six discussions planned by the International Study Group of the Baptist Student Union.

All six sessions will be held at 9 p.m. every Thursday at the BSU Center on Rosemary Street.

The first two meetings (Feb. 12 and 19) will concern the barriers foreign and American students meet in understanding each other, as the language barrier.

The next two meetings will be on student efforts to coordinate international and American students' activities, as the local Cosmopolitan Club, so that the students can work together.

The concluding two meetings will concentrate on ways to overcome the barriers and ways to include more active participation in the international groups on campus.

Leading the discussions will be Alan Costa, representing foreign students, and Glenn Johnson, representing American students.

Costa, a Fulbright scholar from Brazil, is president of the Cosmopolitan Club. Johnson is a graduate student in political science.

Paddy Wall, chairman of the BSU International Study Group, said American students have a good opportunity to become aware of other countries' attitudes and problems with the presence of 95 students from 35 foreign countries on campus. But the opportunity is seldom taken advantage of because of various barriers, she said.

A Campus-to-Career Case History

"In my job, I get the variety and responsibility I wanted"

"Each new assignment brings me greater responsibility and more challenging work. I have the satisfying feeling that I'm getting ahead in management," says Charles F. Barefield, B.S.E.E., Alabama Polytechnic '56. "That's what I was looking for when I joined Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

"Following three months of interdepartmental training, my next training step was as a supervisor in the Plant Department. My assignments were varied to give me experience in handling technical and supervisory situations. In June, 1957, within a year after joining the company, I was appointed Plant Foreman supervising a group of men responsible for telephone installation and maintenance at Auburn, Alabama."

Six months later—in January, 1958—Charlie became Transmission Supervisor in Birmingham. "This assignment involves responsibility for accepting newly installed systems, analyzing performance and recommending modifications for improvement," Charlie explains. "I work with the many different groups responsible for engineering, installation and operation of telephone circuits. These circuits range all the way from wires to microwave radio.

"I have been getting the variety and responsibility I looked for," Charlie says. And he sees a bright future ahead for himself and Southern Bell. "The telephone industry is growing fantastically and chances for advancement go along with growth," he points out.

Many young college men like Charles Barefield are finding interesting and rewarding careers with the Bell Telephone Companies. Check into the opportunities available for you. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus. And read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office.

RELAY TEAM ALSO FIRST

Bishop Sets Mark In Winning Two-Mile Event At VMI Relays

By BING SOMERS

Slender Wayne Bishop, despite a slow track and little competition, cooly pitter-pattered his placid way to a new 2-mile meet record of 9:30.1, hauled home the Most Outstanding Track Performer trophy for the second straight year, and, overall, led the UNC indoor track team to a fine performance in the annual VMI Relays held at Lexington Saturday night.

Bishop grabbed the lead at the start, quickly shook Georgetown's game but out-classed Georgie Verdisco from his trail, and ran the 16-lap race just as he pleased. He passed the half at 2:20, the mile at 4:41, and was able to kick the finish. In doing so he broke the record for the event held by former UNC ace Jim Beattty.

One More First

The Tar Heels captured one other first place, it being in the 2-mile relay as Bob Foxworth, Bing Somers, John Sylvester, and Cowles Lipfert nipped a Navy foursome by five yards.

The sprint medley team almost got another one. Sylvester (440), Bob Eubanks (220), John Fox (220), and the tireless Bishop (880) eclipsed the meet record in their heat, then glumly watched Duke better both times leaving the Heels a close, disappointed second.

Frosh In Slow Heat

The freshman mile relay team of Don Jeffries, Ward Purrington, Dave Peltz, and Dennis Rash also suffered by being placed in a slow heat. They easily ran away from Duke for first in the second heat, but Maryland and Navy, battling every inch of the way, eeked ahead of the Tar Babies two heats later.

The 880 relay quartet (Eubanks, Charlie Sowers, Lyndon DeBorde, and Fox) finished third in their heat, fourth overall.

In the field events, outstanding among the UNC performances, especially at this stage of the season, were a 12'6" vault by Ward Sims and a 47'9" heave of the shot by burly Don Kemper.

University Party Approves Changes

By DEE DANIELS

The University Party passed unanimously last night "sweeping changes" in its method of nominating candidates for campus elections.

During the spring nominating conventions, each dormitory, fraternity, sorority and Town Men's IV shall be represented by five delegates and a sufficient number of alternates, all registered UP members, selected at caucuses by each group.

It is the responsibility of the delegates and alternates to screen all possible candidates of the residence or membership in order to determine those to be nominated by the delegation.

Each delegation, whose delegates must be present to vote, shall have only the number of votes equal to the number of delegates present. In case one of the delegates is up for nomination, an alternate will take his place at the convention.

Voting will be done by secret ballot and the chairman of each delegation will submit the votes to the convention chairman.

Delegation chairmen are to be chosen by and from the delegation.

Caucuses at which the delegates and alternates will be chosen will be presided over by a volunteer registrar from each fraternity, sorority and dormitory.

The registrar shall register UP members in his section and may call the caucus at his discretiin.

No fees or petitions are required to become a UP member this spring.

During the week of Thursday, Feb. 12, to Thursday, Feb. 19, the registrars will conduct their campaigns and elections. On the 19th, they will submit the names of all delegates and alternates to the Student Government office.

The nominating convention will be held Monday and Tuesday night, Feb. 23 and 24, in Gerrard Hall.

Interviews for persons interested in filling the vacancies left by the resignation of UP representatives to the Student Legislature will be held today in Roland Parker I between 2 and 5 p.m. According to John Minter, party chairman, representatives are needed from Town Women's, Town Men's I, II, III and IV and Dorm Men's I districts.

SPEAKER — Dr. D. W. Roberts is one of the numerous nationally known speakers who will appear on the program of the fourth annual North Carolina Conference on Handicapped Children. The conference will be held at N. C. Memorial Hospital Feb. 27-28. Dr. Roberts is executive director of the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, one of the nation's largest voluntary agencies serving the crippled. All sessions of the conference are open to the public.

Student Union Omission 'Disappoints' UNC Heads

By NORMAN B. SMITH

The omission of a long-needed new student union from the recommendations of the Advisory Commission to the N. C. General Assembly was disappointing to many administrative and student leaders.

In hopes that the student union can be restored to the budget by legislative action later in the spring, Student Body President Don Furtado asserted, "The case for the student union is still valid and as each day passes showing our present union to be more inadequate, the need becomes more obvious."

Severe blows were dealt the University operating budget also. Increased appropriations for faculty pay, library acquisitions and and research aid were drasticially cut.

PICKED 'B' BUDGET CEAN

"They picked the B budget (section dealing with enrichment and compensation for inflation) as clean as a supermarket chicken," said James Godfrey, dean of the faculty and academic affairs budgetary officer.

The Commissions' recommendations submitted to the General Assembly Monday represented a successful attempt to balance the state budget. This has resulted in substantial cuts to budgets submitted by most of the agencies supported by the state. Institutions of higher education suffered especially because all of them asked for large increases to meet the needs of skyrocketing enrollments expected in the next decade.

Only a 7½ per cent increase was granted to the University operating budget (excluding Health Affairs) which meant that $1,173,857 had to be chopped from University requests.

LIBRARY SUFFERING

The program suffering most acutely from the cuts appears to be the Louis Round Wilson Library. The Commission recommended that none of the additional funds for acquisition of new books be granted. This leaves expenditure for new volumes on a low level, Librarian Jerald Orne said. "In general we can't maintain our status under these conditions. We are in considerable danger of being passed by other institutions," Orne said. The University library is now ranked third among the libraries of Southeastern universities and 24th among the 41 members of the Association of Research Libraries.

Completely omitted also was a request to add $20,000 per annum to the aid to faculty research program. At the same time the normal increase of full-time researchers provided in a Budget (gauged only to compensate for additional enrollment) was cut by about 25 personnel.

An increase in the student-faculty ratio from the present 13.1 to 13.7 (students per teacher) was sanctioned by the Commission. Dr. Godfrey expressed the ideal ratio as being in the neighborhood of 10 students to one faculty members.

FACULTY PAY RAISES CUT

One of the largest increases asked by UNC, a $909,666 schedule of faculty pay raises, was cut to $233,177. These increases are to be assigned on a merit basis with the purpose of retaining key teachers, rather than being employed in across-the-board raises.

The administration here agreed that one bright spot in the Commission's recommendations was a grant of $735,089 (only slightly below requests) to extension and public services. The previous General Assembly totally omitted the Extension Division from the budget, making it necessary that that branch of the University rely on self-support and miscellaneous funds.

Surprising to many people was the inclusion in capital requests of a $480,000 cafeteria which had been requested by the University for consideration later in the decade rather than in the coming biennium. This building would be located south of

Provost Explains Program Absence

Dr. Donald B. Anderson, Consolidated University Provost, explained the absence of the regular Chet Huntley program this past Sunday night by saying that the University station wanted to give an unbiased presentation of all issues.

The program Sunday dealt with the role of the NAACP in the race problem, and was arranged as an answer to a special program entitled "The Second Agony of Atlanta," presented by Huntley during last week.

At the end of the program, Huntley, in suggesting methods of solving the integration problem in the South, pointed out that it would be beneficial if the extremists would get out and let the moderates do the job.

NAACP TECHNIQUES AGGRAVATING SITUATION

He added that the NAACP's legal technique's were not bring about the result intended and were aggravating rather than soothing the situation.

This program, being a special program, was not broadcast by WUNC-TV for lack of information about the programing content with particular emphasis on whether the program presented a definite point of view.

Anderson pointed out that since WUNC-TV is a University station, he wanted to be clear that it was not presening anything but a documented news presenation. He added that he was unable to get information about the program, so he did not authorize the station to use the program.

WILKINS DEMANDED EQUAL TIME

Following the program, Roy Wilkins, secretary of the NAACP, demanded equal time to reply to Huntley's assertions, and Huntley arranged his regular program Sunday night to include Wilkins.

Anderson explained that this program was not used because it would have represented only one side of the argument and the station's purpose was to be as impartial as possible.

EDITOR ON PROGRAM

However, also included on he program was Thomas R. Waring, editor of the Charleston, S. C. News and Courier and a segregationist was also on the program as an active participant. Waring was in favor of NAACP withdrawal and pointed to the original Huntley program and the massive resistance program as evidence.

Neither Dr. Anderson nor Elmer Oettinger, acting program manager of the University station, could recall any program carried by WUNC-TV that discussed racial issues. Oettinger said that he "knew of no reason" why one should not be carried on the station, but that to his knowledge, there had not been one.

'Challenge To South' Topic Of Brooks Hays

Brooks Hays, former Arkansas congressman, wills peak here Monday on' "The Challenge to the South" in Hill Hall at 8 p.m.

Hays began his service in the United States Congress when he was elected in 1942 from the Fifth District in Arkansas. Since that time he has been re-elected to the House every two years until 1958 when he was defeated by Dale Alford in a surprise write-in campaign.

During his years in Congress, Hays was a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, the Select Committee on Space Exploration and Astronautics and Select Committee to Investigate Tax-exempt Foundations.

The former congressman is currently speaking before various church, civic and college groups over the country. Hays will speak to students at Shaw University in Raleigh Monday morning before his address here Monday night.

Old License Tags Good 'Till Midnight Feb. 16

RALEIGH — (AP) — Since the Feb. 15 deadline falls on Sunday this year, Tar Heel motorists can drive with old license tags until midnight Monday, Asst. Motor Vehicles Commissioner Joe Garrett said Tuesday.

The Highway Patrol has been instructed to halt motorists who fail to have new license tags after next Monday at midnight.

Garrett said that through Feb. 6, a total of 841,000 license tags had been sold in the state compared with 816,000 for the same date last year.

Garrett urged motorists not to wait until Monday to buy their tags. "Each day they wait should see the waiting lines get progressively longer," he said.

Sorortiy Members Work For Pan Hell Charities

UNCLE SAM CHIPS IN $22,777

U. S. Boosts UNC Loan Fund

UNC students may now borrow money from a new $25,308 loan fund that includes a big hunk from the federal government.

Chancellor William B. Aycock has announced that the University accepted $22,777 from the national government for student loans. To this amount has been added $2,531 as UNC's contribution in meeting conditions of the federal grant under the National Defense Education Act.

The grant was the University's portion of $6 million allocated and universities all over the nation.

The total value of the present University student loan fund is slightly more than $975,000. Over half a million of this amount is in notes receivable, leaving about $450,000 for potential future lending purposes. This fund is separate from the $22,777 granted by the federal government and administered by the U. S. Office of Education.

The federal loans will be administered by the University through the same faculty and administrative officials who handle the regular loan funds.

The applicant for a loan must be an enrolled student who has academic promise and who can justify need for educational expenses. Effective Feb. 1, 1959, the rules governing maximum amount and terms of student loans have been made more favorable for those who meet the tests of eligibility for a loan.

Slight differences in the criteria for lending money under the federal program and under other University loan funds at Chapel Hill were specified by Dr. C. O. Cathey, chairman of the faculty committee on Student Scholars and Harold Weaver, manager of the loan fund.

The rules for administration of the loan funds are the same for University and federal loans, except for certain University loan funds with restrictions set by the donor which conflict with these rules. A substantial amount, approximately half, of University loan funds have restrictions requiring interest payment while in school and requiring sureties.

Conditions governing loans which apply to both the federal funds and some of the other loan funds in the University include:

1. Funds are available to students enrolled in the University who can show genuine need for financial help with their college expenses and who have "academic promise."

2. Borrowed funds may be used for tuition and fees, cost of books, instructional material and equipment, cost of room and board; transportation and necessary meals for commuters; reasinable expenditures for living quarters and for married students; other "reasonable expenses" related to obtaining an education or keeping a good student in school.

3. A loan for an individual student may reach, but not exceed, $1,000 in any calendar year, or $5,000 for four years or more. The amount of loan extended is based on the amount of need for educational expenses.

4. Loans shall bear interest rate of three per cent on the unpaid balance.

5. Interest is not charged while the borrower is in school on a full-time basis.

6. Students over 21 and competent to execute a legal contract may borrow without security and without endorsers. Students under 21 require sureties.

7. Loans are to be repaid according to regular, systematic repayment plans effected by mutual agreement between the borrower and the loan fund manager. The borrower is expected to submit a plan of repayment at the time he leaves school regardless of the maturity date of his note.

The special "differences" between the federal loans and the University loans are:

1. University loans are available the year around. Those enrolled for the summer session only are not eligible for federal loans.

2. University loans are available to entering students if the available evidence demonstrates "good" to "superior" academic ability, as well as to other enrolled undergraduates and graduate students who maintain good standards—C averages for undergraduates, P performance for graduates. Federal loans are available to entering students on the same basis as the University loans; however, in the case of federal loans to other enrolled undergraduates and graduate students, students have "priority" if they have "superior" academic background and express a desire to teach in elementary and secondary schools, or if their academic background indicates a "superior" capacity or preparation in science, mathematics, engineering or a modern foreign language.

3. Anyone who gets a federal loan must subscribe in writing to an oath or affirmation of his allegiance to the United States of America, and of his readiness to defend its Constitution against all enemies, and also sign an affidavit stating that he does not believe in, and is not a member of an organization that believes in or teaches, the overthrow of the United States Government by force or violence.

Inquiries about loans for education at UNC should be addressed to Harold Weaver, Manager Student Loan Fund, 4 Steele Building.

The Budget

Despite the fact that the Advisory Budget Commission succeeded in appropriating 74% of its expenditures for education, it was clear from the budget figures released yesterday that the Commission was more committed to a balanced budget without any extra taxation than it was to education.

It looks as if at present the University has lost whatever chance it might have had to assume a role of great prominence during the next biennium, for the heart and soul of the improvement budget was cut so much as to leave only monies for continuation of operating mechanism.

However, the Univesrity as any other mechanism will run down unless it is supplied with fuel and lubrication, and run down it is going to do. One cannot calculate until the spring what the lack of funds for faculty pay increases is going to do to the best qualified on the UNC faculty. One does not know what will happen as far as an interested student body without a new union. One will not know for awhile, what standing the University's library will have during the next biennium, but the drop in standing will become painfully apparent soon. And one is alerady aware what will happen with the ability to keep quite dormitories by the Commission's refusal to let the state spend more for dormitory construction.

Indeed, the whole area of improvements is small, so small that it represents just a feeble attempt at meeting population growth as cheaply as possible.

The School of Public Health is quite aware of the damage that is currently being caused by the failure of the state to provide them with new facilities, for the majority of their buildings are temporary structures highly susceptible to fire and are inconvenient as far as administrating any program.

Indeed, the only singularly good proposal to come out of the Commission was the recommendation to put the dormitories on a one-half self-liquidating basis, but what the students will be only half paving for is a far inferior ($1,000 per man) product than the average in the United States.

The upshot of the budget is that the University is going to go downhill despite all administrative efforts to reverse the roll of the ball, for the Advisory Budget Commission is not planning for the future, but is looking at the present and trying to maintain the status quo, which in a fluid society is almost impossible to do.

It is high time that the state thought seriously about rising taxes, and in this case corporation taxes are the obvious ones to raise. The population and industrial increase will be at a lesser proportion, but wealth without wisdom was not worth much at any time in history.

The Budget II

There are some questions to be raised about the Univesrity budget. The first and most obvious is the question of why the budget included a cafeteria, recommended only for the future prospectus of ten years, and why, in the face of impending faculty losses and harmed student morale, both faculty salary monies and student union facilities were left out. Perhaps this will give those who recommended this building food for thought.

Letters On Many Topics

Dear Anthony Wolff:

After reading your carping analysis of Spectrum, I find myself eager to read some of your literary works. Surely, they must be on the genius level.

Where, besides in The Daily Tar Heel, might I locate some of your published material?

Cherry Parker

Editor:

Just who in the hell does Mr. Anthony Wolff think he is, anyway? His authoritative "critique" (and I use the world loosely) sounds as if he thinks he's an established critique instead of a mere college boy studying journalism.

As an alumnae of Carolina, I am appalled at the arrogance of our Daily Tar Heel staff. Primarily, what is the paper's function?

Mary Anna Hahn

Editor:

I was in North Carolina during the last academic year for a period of study. Since my return, I have been one of the few persons in England to receive a copy of the new review, "Spectrum." Although it must now be some time since the criticism of this periodical died down, I feel I cannot let this publication pass by without some comment.

First, I believe one should not attempt to compare "Spectrum" with the "Carolina Quarterly." The latter is indeed an excellent periodical, but its articles tend to conservatism and it would not be too easy for a young student to gain entry into its ranks. Hence the need for a more adventurous periodical.

We should ask ourselves, what apart from learning, is the purpose of a university . . . it is largely a place in which to experiment. One of the greatest professors in England once said to me, "I could not care less whether or not you get a degree, so long as you * experiment . . . you'll never get the chance to do this later in life." University is not a job ticket, a guardian of traditions, a date paradise or a student car rank. If this is the case then, "Spectrum" eminently fits the bill. Here is an excellent opportunity for students to develop their own particular style in writing and drawing and to present their work to a critical and understanding public. Obviously, some writers imitate the styles of others on the way to finding their own . . . just as all great artists and writers have done at some time or other during their career. However, this is no reason for which one should condemn any periodical.

Turning to "Spectrum" itself, I must praise the organizers for their initiative and courage. The cover and printing are quite superb. Without singling out any particular contributor, I found the articles and poems generally well written, original (very important) and interesting. The drawings were also original. I have one criticism, there is a tendency to sadness bordering on despair throughout the work . . . is this a sign of our times?

times? Both I and other Englishmen found the advertisements to be among the most tasteful we have ever seen.

Now, if this review has aroused a furor of criticism (and I might say, near panic) among the weak in heart, then it has achieved its purpose. A univerity is just the place for differences of opinion, for discussion, criticism and a challenge of accepted traditions. And the editor did ask for comments!

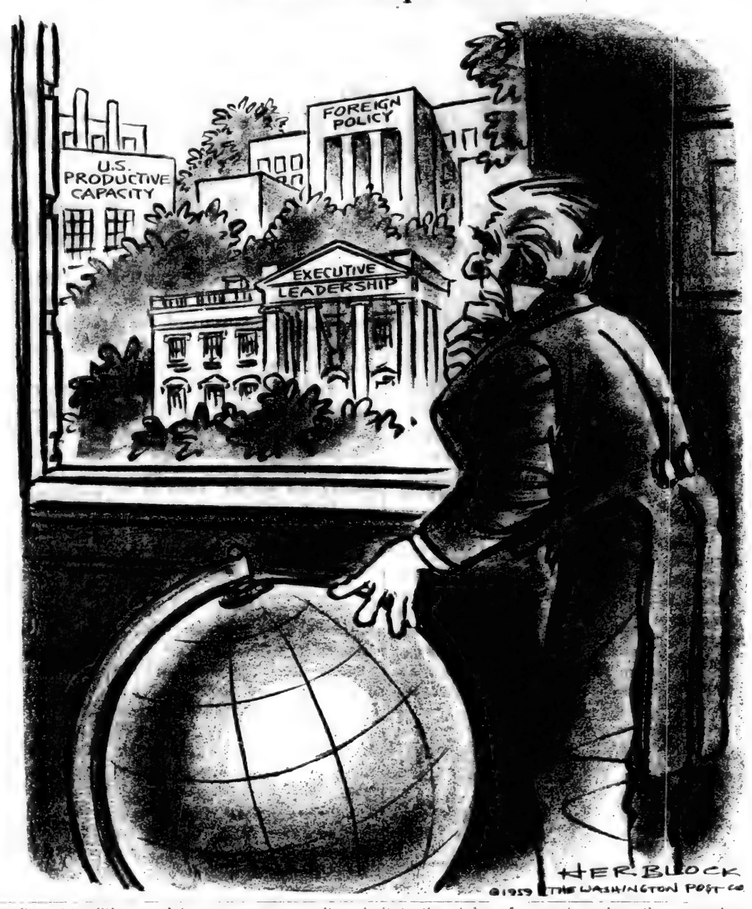
However, much of the criticism was irrelevant and personally abusive. It was typical of bourgeois and prematurely aged outlooks. This surprises us here as our impression of young Americans has always been one of experimenting, thoughtful, diverse, go-ahead and exciting young people, always ready to challenge the often seemingly out-worn values of Europe.

Sir, we in England welcome "Spectrum" as a sign of re-awakening among young Americans. In no community should any literary review have a monopoly—there must be differences of opinion or democracy will perish. "Spectrum" will obviously improve with time and constructive criticism. In the meantime, it should receive strong support in Chapel Hill.

Peter Coffey
London, England

* I would take "experiment" to mean, intellectual experimenting . . . the interchange of new ideas and the complete examination of all facets of society and life; thereby possibly finding an intellectual path or philosophy for oneself.

Underdeveloped Areas



Student Union

It was a blow to many, including the editor, to see that a new sudent union was not on the budget recommendations of the Advisory Budget Commission. It was hoped that this year of all others the University stood a fairly decent chance of getting this recommendation, but presumeably the Commission felt that students don't count in education.

A student union is vital to the progress of the University and to the betterment of campus atmosphere. It is vital as an educational adjunct in that through programming it can provide educational material which is not available in the classroom. It is vital as a non-educational outlet, so that those energies which would be released in disturbing other students can be released without this disturbance. It is necessary as a social outlet to provide facilities and programs for healthy coeducation, something that is totally lacking at the Univeresity now.

The budget commission's decision makes the problem more difficult in that this budget was supposed to include what was necessary for the next several years, and if a bond issue is floated, it will be with the view that there will not be one coming up in two years. Hence the prospects for a new union seem exceptionally dim for another six years, and by then the pressure on the administration for a coliseum — armory may be such as to make it next to impossible to refuse. So that, in this eventuality the University would not only be taking up monies for something by far less important, but will probably be taking up the space needed for the new union.

The net result of this is that action is needed now. The only possible action that is open at the present time is to ask for a building on a completely self-liquidating basis. It will take a fight even then to get the legislature to grant funds for a building, but with nothing to lose, the legislature will probably be susceptible to the request.

This would mean, of course, a $20 increase in student fees, but an increase is already necessary, and the proposal to self-liquidate dormitories. It is different because the Carolina concept of a union is a student union, one which the students administer with the aid of a professional director, a director who has proven himself already to be an invaluable aid to the progress of the present union. The students would probably be willing to accept the burden, if they knew it to be their building.

A student union can still be had, but it will take much work and effort. The result, though, will be rewarding.

Neither Black Nor White... Mostly Shades Of Grey

Norman B. Smith

And what's a life? — a weary pilgrimage, Whose glory in one day doth fill the stage, With childhood, manhood, and decrepit age. —Francis Quarles

Diluted patches of light crept slowly toward the center of the frayed, stained, dusty Oriental rug, diluted by the restless leaves of the elms in the stone-walled, almost grassless yard and the fly-specked, rain-spattered windows and the drawn lace-bordered net curtains.

Among the anemic potted ferns and unblooming violets, the faded samplers and prints, the ancient roll-top desk with pigeon holes filled with yellowed, outdated accounts, and in squeaking wicker rockers bedecked with soiled pillows in once-flamboyant floral patterns sat the two of them.

He (the young man revisiting for the first time his ancestral home had almost been compelled to make this call to the near-by old Hadley place where his father had worked long ago when the farm had been a productive one and not one as it was now of weeds and rotting barns, where his father had been taught to crave at the big table where only he among the hired hands was allowed to eat, and where his father, uneducated and unsure of himself, had made his first success and had gone from there fortified, audacious, capable of — as he had done — gaining a notable career.) smelled in the house a smell of mold, of uncleaned corners and closets, of mice or perhaps rats. He smelled her breath, too, reeking of unwashed dentures and simple, sorry meals of crackers with week-old cream and tea.

She and the house seemed old and useless, hanging on to the growing, young, fresh verdure of the spring outside only by a thread of reality, just that the house was situated there, anchored to the ground, not because there was any relationship left between the inside and the outside, only because the elements hadn't had time yet to reduce the old Hadley place to crumbling ruins and supplant the still solid walls and roof with scampering chipmonks and scuttling lizards and rambling vines.

In gray cotton stockings that sagged down about her ankles, down to scuffed high-topped shoes, beneath a loose, creased black suit with a button missing here and there and a zipper half-zipped she sat. Talking.

The patches of light propelled by the afternoon sun crept slowly toward the center of the room, slowly for him because he had been there a long time and it seemed longer, for youth is impatient with the ramblings (often repetitious) of an old mind that has lost its sensitivity, no longer being able to realize when a visitor is growing restless and is ready to leave.

"Old and tired, Old and tired,," the low, slow, monotonous voice issuing from between cracked lips that hardly moved in her wrinkled, warty old face with dull (like stagnant water in a cranberry bog) eyes slightly enlarged by rimless, convex spectacles, "Old and tired," the voice seemed to say with every triform of meaningless words it uttered.

The occasional phrases with continuity told him that she talked about her life of college teaching, library research, writing, avid reading, civic organizations, church work. "I gave up long ago trying to redo these things because I could see my physical strength fail me, and later I saw my mind tiring faster and not being able to grasp things like it used to, but now even my memory is leaving me. I talk in snatches, only snatches. I omit things and then I go back to search for them, only to leave them out again. I talk in patches, dispointed patches. My memory — my only record, my real self, for what is a person other than a collection of events and sensations that one has accumulated over the years? — is going. Then why am I here? Why do I stay here where I no longer belong? I am unneeded and I need nothing," he heard her say.

Two or three scrawled letters came to him and, then there were no more. She died in some home for old people after she had been there no longer han a month. The last of the Hadley's.

Now the old Hadley place is gone, torn loose so that a cedar veneer, picture-windowed split level house could be built there. Beware, oh dweller in the split level, for it is decreed that you too will grow to useless, decrepit old age, and both you and your house will be rooted or rotted out to make way for another spoke in the endless wheel.

On Dr. Zhivago

Cynthia Bivens

The sensationalism surrounding the publication of DR. ZHIVAGO has finally died down, but the comments on the greatness of this novel are not yet dead. Seldom does one book combine power with such sensitivity, and it is this sensitivity that gives DR. ZHIVAGO its fineness.

Sincerity is often undefinable, and yet it is a most important quality in any literary effort. Dr. Zhivago, being the main character and at the same time the prime substance of this book is undeniably a sincere creation. He would have to be. His thoughts, observations, and philosophies are Pasternak's own. Because of Pasternak's outspoken love for Russia, we understand Zhivago's patriotism, and the near absense of bitterness in his outlook, even as Pasternak points out, through Zhivago, the backwardness, the poverty, the cruelty and the constant senseless fighting so prevalent in their beloved state. Zhivago's faith and pride in the country he loves are perhaps the most sincere elements of his character. Still, this is not a blind faith, and his pride is not unyielding.

For those who read for plot interest only, DR. ZHIVAGO provides a story woven so intricately into the most unique substance that interest in the vivid characters seldom wanes. Even a character sketch of Dr. Zhivago would have been sufficient material for a book. The beautiful portrayal of Lara,, though, is too great a bonus to be missed.

Dr. Zhivago's observations and analyses are powerful and thought-provoking. Any aspect of life which intrigues him moves him to deep convictions. He once ponders: "How many things deserve our loyalty? Very few indeed. I think one should be loyal to immortality, which is another word for life, a stronger word for it." Later he gives his definition of history: ". . . centuries of systematic explorations of the riddle of death . . ." On art: ". . . art has two constant unending concerns: it always meditates on death and thus always creates life." Pasternak's poetry, which appears at the end of his novel is no less forceful. He comments in "Hamlet," a swiftly moving poem of four verses, "To live life to the end is not a childish task."

Zhivago, and certainly, Pasternak are conscious of the preciousness of life. One diesn't have to guess that the make-up of the Russian government as Zhivago sees it has no consideration of life and death. The print describing the ruthlessness of the new regime is bold and black. Zhivago's opinion of the revolution is clear. It was ". . . not the idealized intellectuals' revolution of 1905." It was ". . . the soldiers' revolution led by those professional revolutionaries, the Bolsheviks." That Pasternak witnessed the upheaval of Russia during the revolution is significant. When he comments in narration that "The laws of human civilization were suspended." (at the time of the revolution), we can be certain that this is one of the most meaningful observations in this novel.

This reader fails to see how anything could have been lost by reading this novel in translation. Obviously, the same cannot be said for the poetry appearing at the end of the narrative portion of the novel. While it retains meaning and depth, the beauty of the rhythm in Pasternak's native tongue, if it appeared in the original, has yielded to a rather unsteady flow in English. —Little matter, though, when such a message is to be gotten from the novel alone.

The force behind this entire novel appears to be Pasternak's love for his country, and it is because of this love that we have DR. ZHIVAGO, the story of Russia's greatness—and to be fair, her weakenness.

Gail Godwin

Recently, a girl went before Honor Council because her plane was five hours late and she got back to the dormitory five hours late.

Now, all these instances can be explained by the proper people. They point to a certain rule, use a few cross references, and come up with a smug: "So you see, it IS in the rules."

But what we need to ask ourselves is not whether a certain expectation can be found in printed form in some handbook, but whether this expectation will help our young woman to grow up to be a responsible individual.

Something is lacking at Carolina. Something that could be remedied if enough people who cared would get together and say: "Now, look here, this gobbledygook has gone far enough. If these little girls want to play Mother-God to the entire female population on campus, let them organize their own private Mother-God club, but don't let them become an integral part of a well-known university."

Because if something is not remedied, our Woman graduate will become a wishy-washy, cringing creature who will embark rather unsteadily in life hoping that there will be enough rules to cover everythnig so she won't have to think for herself.

If something is remedied, then maybe someday the University of North Carolina will be chosen—as it has not been lately — for an article on "Better Colleges in America" by one of our more respected intellectual magazines. For instance, take the recent Harper's series. A glowing report was given of Sarah Lawrence college, which ends in an observation reccommended to all people who care at this university:

"There is authentic generosity of spirit among Sarah Lawrence students, compassion, and a flair for enthusiasm all too rare among college students in these fattening fifties. The girls dare to yearn. In the drab landscape of student uniformity and prudence, they provide a vivid slash of color. Sarah Lawrence has that peculiar potency in shaping values that a recent study found sadly lacking in most colleges . . ."

Is the University of North Carolina witholding a vital slash of color from its women students?

Educational TV

There needs to be a reevaluation of the purpose and function of WUNC-TV. There is a question of its stated purpose and its present function in reality.

It purports to be an educational station, but its resources for education remain largely untapped. It, at present, presents programs devoted either to giving courses in a fairly formalized manner, to presenting certain athletic events, or presenting informative programs on abstract subjects, and to avoiding present major issues.

A clear case in point was brought to light by the Durham Sun, when it pointed to the University's refusal ot put on a program featuring Roy Wilkins of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and James Waring of he Charleston News & Courier. The refusal was based on the desire to present both sides of the issue, but it is clear from the program that both sides of the issue were presented, so that the argument does not hold water. Moreover, coupled with the fact that no program has been devoted to the problem of human rights in a time when the problem is perhaps most pressing, this refusal to show the Wilkins program makes the station look as if it is avoding controversial issues.

If it is avoiding the issues of the day, then it is not being educational, but is rather assuming the pose of an ostrich with its head in the ground. What happens in the present can be as educational, if not more so, than that which happened centuries ago. In fact, a message can hit with telling clarity if placed in a present setting.

As the Sun pointed out, it is indeed a shame that at this University, an institution supposedly devoted to truth, the television station would sidestep issues in order to avoid recriminations. If the station does not want to take a stand on he issue, then it had better prepare programs dealing with the issue. The idea of silence in an educational community is more eloquent than words.

There needs to be a reexamination of purpose of the station to see if it has validity. It would seem that it doesn't.

TV II

While the television station is re-examining, it might be a suggestion that the station use more of its time for student forums on current issues. Both the student body, the University, and the purpose of education might benefit from the programming.

We Goofed

In an editorial yesterday talking about the University phone system, the editor mentioned that things such as waiting for operators for twenty minutes made one long for Southern Bell. It happens th tathe long distance operators are Southern Bell employed and that a new set of fifteen connecting lines have been made on the system to Durham. So, the difficulty in getting long distance operators is at least partially the responsibility of the Durham system. The difficulty, however, has not been eliminated.

Budget Cuts Classroom Additions

the Institute of Government and east of Avery, Parker and Teague.

DORMITORY APPROVED

Approved by the Commission was another multi-story dormitory for men to be built in the same general area. (Another one, earlier approved, will be under construction soon.) This $875,000 structure designed to house 700 students would be financed half by state funds and half by self-liquidating bonds. Such an arrangement would mean that no rental increases as ocurred last fall would arise when the new building is financed. Of disappointment, however, to many here was the retention in this recommendation of a per occupant construction limit of $2,500. The University had sought to raise this limit to $3,000 in order to compensate for rising construction costs, to provide for soundproofing and to be able to include more student services and facilities in the dormitories.

CLASSROOM ADDITIONS CUT

Requests to provide additional classroom and laboratory space, as well as to repair and renovate old buildings on campus were cut substantially in the Commission's recommendations. Total capital construction request for the University was $13,370,636. This was cut by the Commission to $6,039,800.

The request for additions to Venable Hall was increased from $100,000 to $240,000. Sustained in full was a program to add a $485,000 addition to Hill Hall. Cut significally, but retained in part, were requests for an addition to Swain Hall, addition to the Physics Building, renovation of Saunders Hall and new buildings for geology-geography, botany and foreign languages.

Omitted completely from the capital schedule were renovations of Caldwell Hall, Murphey Hall and Phillips Hall. The new student union was omitted in full as well.

ON STUDENT UNION

President Furtado speaking of the union request said, "I feel that there has not been full realization of the role which a union program and union facilities can play in the educational community." He pointed out that Graham Memorial was almost hopelessly overcrowded, having been built in 1931 when the student body was 2,600 and then it was only one third completed. In asserting the need for a new student union many student leaders here point to the centers at State College and Women's College which are much more roomy and modern.

Capital construction in the Division of Health Affairs approved by the Commission included a new dentistry building and a new public health building. Requests for $4,791,800 were reduced by the Advisory Budget Commission to $1,056,800.

OTHERS FARE BADLY

Other institutions of higher learning in North Carolina fared badly in the Commission's report also. Capital budget at State College was reduced from$ 8,681,250 to $5,998,200 and at Woman's College from $2,028,700 to $722,500. Only 9.9 per cent of B budget operating increases were authorized for State College, and Woman's College actually registered a slight loss over the current year's expenditures.

Radio Club Station Licensed

W4WE are the call letters of Carolina's Radio Club Station licensed by the FCC last week.

The call letters are the same that a previous club held at Carolina in 1925. The early club collapsed in the mid-forties because of the instabilities caused by the war.

A regular schedule of operation for the station is expected to be announced soon, according to club president Jimmy Scott. It has begun limited operation with equipment borrowed from members and from the AFROTC MARS station, which is also operated by the club.

The club is sponsoring a Radiotelegraph-code course which will begin in two weeks. Members and anyone interested in joining the club or in taking the code course have been urged to attend the meeting Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

The meeting will be held in Classroom No. 5, AFROTC, Caldwell Annex, across from Ruffin Dorm.

The present club was formed in the spring of 1958.

Wallach Speaks On Abundance In Living

Scientific awareness of God's evernearness and power brings more peaceful living, safety, and abundance, said Theodore Wallach in a speech on Christian Science in the Playmakers Theatre last night.

Wallach is a former First Reader of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist in Boston, Mass.

"The accumulation of material resources does not give one true security any more than the accumulation of armaments gives real security to a nation."

He told his audience that the basis for all security—security from illness and suffering, from sin and failure, from loss and accident—is an understanding of God, divine life, truth and love.

Wallach is on a nationwide tour as a member of the The Christian Science Board of Lectureship. He spoke under the auspices of the Christian Science Society of Chapel Hill.

His subject was entitled "Christian Science: A Fresh Approach to Security." He was introduced by Morris Trevithick.

Commenting on the works of Christ, he affirmed that it was His spiritually correct view of man which healed the sick.

"Where others looked upon the diseased, the sinful, the improverished, he beheld the divine ideal, spiritual man, pure, strong, and free, representing the true wealth of divine love. In the presence of his Christly understanding of man's utility, or oneness with God, lo, evil disappeared," Wallach summarized.

THE PEN IS MIGHTIER THAN THE SMOOCH

Back in my courting days (the raccoon coat was all the rage, everybody was singing Good Morning, Mister Zip Zip Zip, and young Bonaparte had just left Corsica), back, I say, in my courting days, the standard way to melt a girl's heart was to write poetry to her.

I don't understand why young men today have abandoned this gambit. There is nothing like poetry for moving a difficult girl. What's more, poems are ridiculously easy to write. The range of subjects is endless. You can write a poem about a girl's hair, her eyes, her lips, her walk, her talk, her clothes—anything at all. Indeed, one of my most effective love lyrics was called To Maud's Pencil Box. It went like this:

In your dear little leatherette pencil box
Are pencils of yellow and red,
And if you don't tell me you love me soon,
I'll hit you on top of the head.

Honesty compels me to admit that this poem fell short of success. Nothing daunted, I wrote another one. This time I pulled a switch; I threatened myself instead of Maud.

Oh, Maud, pray stop this drivel
And tell me you'll be mine,
For my sweetbreads they do shrivel
And wind around my spine.

My heart doth cease its beating,
My spleen uncoils and warps,
My liver stops secreting
Soon I needs be a corpse.

When this heart-rending ballad failed to win Maud, I could only conclude that she was cruel and heartless and I was better off without her. Accordingly I took back my Hi-Y pin, bade her adieu, and have not clapped eyes on her since. Last I heard, she was working in Galveston as a Plimsoll line.

But I did not mourn Maud long, for after Maud came Doris—Doris of the laughing eyes, Doris of the shimmering hair, Doris of the golden tibiae! Within moments of meeting her, I whipped up a torrent of trochaic tetrameter:

Oh, my sweet and dulcet Doris!
I love you like a Philip Morris
With its mild and rich tobacco
In its white and scarlet pack-o.
I'd swim from Louisville to Natches
For Philip Morris and you and matches.

Well, of course, the dear girl couldn't resist a poem like that—what girl could?—and she instantly became my slave. For the rest of the semester she carried my books, washed my car, and cored my apples. There is no telling where it all would have ended if she hadn't been drafted.

So, men, you can see the power of poetry. Try it yourself. All you need is a rhyming dictionary, a quill pen, and a second-hand muse.

Larese Gains On Richter In ACC Scoring Chase

GREENSBORO, N. C. — (AP) —The battle is on for the 1959 individual scoring crown in the Atlantic Coast Conference with season-long leader John Richter of N. C. State now facing an immediate challenge from a pair of the ACC's sparkling sophomores—York Larese of Carolina and Howard Hurt of Duke.

While Richter was scoring only 17 points in two games last week, Larese hit 46 in a pair of contests and Hurt outdid both of them with 50 in two games. The result, according to ACC Service Bureau figures through games of last Saturday night, is that only 1.2 points separates front — runner Richter from third-place Hurt.

Richter is now averaging 17.2 points a game as compared to Larese's 16.4 and Hurt's 16.0. Richter and Hurt meet face-to-face in Raleigh tonight in what could prove a pivotal date in the scoring race.

Paul Adkins of Virginia, 14.7 points a game, and Lou Pucillo of N. C. State, 14.1, round out the top five scorers. Newcomers to the first 10 are Doug Moe of Carolina, who jumped from 12th to ninth on a 32-point effort against Duke, and George Ritchie of Wake Forest, who rose from 11 to 10th. Lee Shaffer of Carolina dropped from eighth to 11th and Ray Pericola of South Carilina fell from 10th to 13th.

Larese is the No. 1 field goal shooter with 93 goals in 190 shots for 48.9 per cent, just a shade better than the accurcy mark of 48.1 per cent owned by Shaffer and the 47.0 per cent figure owned by Carroll Youngkin of Duke.

Richter tops the individual rebounders with 14.2 recoveries a game with Wolfpack teammate George Stepanovich second at 12.6.

Ritchie has made 39 of 47 free throws for 83.0 per cent, easily best in the league. Bill Warren of Clemson is second with 37 for 46 and 80.4 per cent.

TRACKIN' THE TARHEELS

by RUSTY HAMMOND
DTH SPORTS EDITOR

Drag out those battered old blue license tags and those scratchy records that proclaim "Tar Heels, Number 1", cause that's the way its gonna be next week, brother, you better believe it!

Kentucky, who had sailed through easy opponents all season, finally ran into a basketball team. The results: Mississippi State 66, Kentucky 58.

The Associated Press poll was run too soon this week to take account of this game, but next week, after the writers have had time to think it over Carolina will be sitting on basketball's throne. That is, unless a few minds are lost in between now and next week.

The Wildcat record now reads 18-2; they previously lost to Vanderbilt. Their troubles aren't over yet, either, for they still have undefeated Auburn to face. The funny part of it is that Kentucky is only third in the Southeastern Conference, behind Auburn and Mississippi State.

Carolina, sporting a 14-1 record for the season and an unbeaten 9-0 record in the ACC, has two games this week before the next poll. Neither should affect things one way or another. The Tar Heels journey to Wake Forest Thursday night, and unless Bones McKinney really pulls something out of his hat, we can't see anything but another victory for the Carolinians.

Saturday night Carolina will travel all the way to Chicago to battle little known but well thought-of Loyola. It will be a basketball double header, and here's another oddity: Kentucky will play Notre Dame in the other game.

Though plenty of teams have compiled better records than has Carolina, none can boast such a slate against such fierce competition. Michigan State, the only team to beat Carolina, is currently in the top ten. Carolina beat two teams that were, at the time, ranked number one in the nation. Those would be Cincinnati and N. C. State.

The old adage that: "You can't have a championship team without a big gun" is rapidly being disproved by Frnak McGuire's boys. Imagine, if it's possible, a night in which all five starters hit their potential as shown this year.

★ ★ ★

Such a "dream game" would read something like this in the box: Moe 32, Larese 32, Shaffer 26, Kepley 24, Salz 19. The total: 133 points. This is all theoretical, of course, but it shows a little of the well-distributed scoring might of the Tar Heels.

It would almost seem like the members of the team draw straws before every game to decide who will be high scorer. Any of them can be, and all of them have. If any three, or even two, of them gets hot the same night, any team in the country will have a hard time staying in the gym.

A report from the ticket office that the State game is already sold out is at the same time gladdening and disappointing. We know, for instance, that there will be 4,700 Carolina students and faculty packed into Woollen Gym. That's good. We also know, however, that there will be some 4,000 students and faculty members locked out. That's bad.

Of course, that's the way it has to be when you play in a bandbox like Woollen Gym. When not even all of the students can get in to see the most important game of the year, its pretty bad.

So, the reply may be, the game's on television. Big deal. Who wants to watch a game on television and miss all the color and excitement and the thrill of being there. Nobody, especially not the students who deserve above anyone the right to see their team play, and in person.

WAA Badminton Tournament

Intramural Council Sets Grail-Mural Jamboree

By JERRY GARRISON

Final plans for the Grail Mural Jamboree have been made and approved by the Joint Intramural Council. They have set the date of the Jamboree for the 10 and 11 of March, and stated that the entries will be due on the second of March.

The program will be the same as last year's with the addition of swimming. Swimming was included to give the participates a better rounded slate of events, and also to increase participation. The swimming program will consist of two relays. The teams will consist of 4 men, and two from each organization will swim in both relays. One relay is the free style and the other is a medley relay. In the medley relay either the freestyle, breast stroke, butterfly, back stroke or other stroke may be used. The distance for the swimming relays is undecided at the present time.

Preliminary Heats

On the first day of action, preliminary heats will be run in all relays. The winners of the relays will advance to the finals on the second night.

The other events in the Jamboree are handball, half court basketball, badminton and table tennis. On the first night, the participates will be divided into 4 leagues of 6 teams to a league. The play in these leagues will be a round robin tournament. The winners in the first night of action will also advance to the finals on the second night. The finals will be played on a single elimination basis. The archery and foul shooting will be divided into two sections, and half will be played on the first night and the other half will be played on the second night.

Foot Relays

The foot relays will climax the final night of action. Anyone who participates in the other events may also participate in the relays, but other than the relays they may participate in only one other event.

The trophies for the Jamboree have been purchased by the Order of the Grail and they include individual trophies for all events, and larger trophies for the teams.

The Grail along with the Intramural Department urges each organization to have its best athletes to participate in the Jamboree so that they may have the highest quality obtainable. To do this they suggest that each organization hold some of the events within their group so that they may get the best men. The relays are to be tougher this year in order to add more spice to the program.

For the winners there will be a steak dinner after the Jamboree.

All-Time Record

Carolina's all-time basketball record is 746 wins against 321 losses for a .699 percentage. In the last 100 games the Tar Heels have won 84 while losing only 16 for an .840 mark. Against ACC foes they have won 309, lost 159 for .660.

Tar Heels Tangle With Deamon Deacs Tonight

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina, gunning for the number one ranking in the nation, tonight journeys to Baptist Hollow to battle old foe Wake Forest in a game that could come up with plenty of surprises.

The Tar Heels are the proud possesors of a 14-1 mark for the season in addition to an undefeated 9-0 record in the ACC.

Wake Forest, which has been somewhat disappointing, owns an even 8-8 overall record. The Deacs are tied for a slot in the first division with Maryland, being 4-5 in the ACC.

The teams have already met once this season, at Chapel Hill. In that one Bones McKinney pulled a deep freeze routine which had Tar Heel fans sweating until the Carolinians emerged with a 44-34 verdict.

Wake Forest has come on strong lately, disposing of two tought opponents. The Deacs whipped highly regarded George Washington 83-81 then turned on the power in the second half to edge Maryland 56-53.

Carolina has a string of four ACC victories achieved after the exam break, the wins coming over Clemson, South Carolina, Maryland and Duke in that order.

Last week the Heels staged a great second half ralley as they came from 11 points behind to whip the Duke sophomores 89-80 in Durham.

Top point-makers in the last two contests have been the sophomore standouts, Doug Moe and York Larese. Larese pumped in 32 against Maryland and Moe did the same against Duke .

Larese, second highest scorer in the conference, leads the Tar Heels with a 16.4 average. All of the Heel starters are in double figures. Larese is followed by Moe (13.2), Lee Shaffer (13.1), Harvey Salz (11.9) nad Dick Kepley (10.4).

The Demon Deacons are led by Dave Budd (13.7) and George Ritchie (13.1).

Although the exact strategy Coach Bones McKinney will try tonight is not known, it is almost certain he will have some sort of trick up his sleeve. When asked to comment on the subject, McKinney replied warily, "Just say we've got something in mind."

McKinney is high in his praise of Carolina. He said, "That Carolina bunch has plenty of talent. They have everything, great height, fine shooting and lots of savvy. That's why I say it's going to take a great performance by my boys to beat them."

Carolina stands a good chance of marching to the top position in the basketball polls next week if they can get by Wake and Loyola. They were ranked second this week.

Bardot Loses Ph.D. Award In Phi Fight

By HOBART T. STEELE JR.

A resolution to award Brigitte Bardot an honorary Ph.D. in physical education was overwhelmingly defeated by the Philanthropic Literary Society at its regular Tuesday night meeting.

The bill was directed at beautifying the campus, physical education and graduation exercises. Further provisions were to have portraits of Miss Bardot hung in Graham Memorial and Phi Hall. She was also to become an honorary member of the Phi.

John Brooks, president of the Phi, explained that the bill was presented to interject a bit of humor and give members a break from the usual bills on matters of national and international interest.

Rep. Clay Simpson, in his speech against the bill, said, "Brigitte Bardot is an immature child, she has never grown up." This observation brought several objections from the floor. Questions from the floor ascertained that Simpson meant that Miss Bardot was emotionally, not physically, a child.

Rep. Hobart Steele pointed out that just as Gov. Luther Hodges wants to bring outside industry to North Carolina, so the Phi was attempting to bring outside sex to the campus. He said, "we should patronize our native business just as we should utilize the vast potential of sex in our own coeds."

Rep. Glen Johnson, critic, said a high level of humor was evident in speeches as it should be. No award was given for the best speaker of the evening.

Guests for the evening included several members of the Dialetic Senate.

Sorority Workers Benefit Charities

Panhellenic charities will receive money through the efforts of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority members working at Robbins Store today.

The members will work in shifts in the store from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. In return for the work, Robbins will donate 10 per cent of all earnings made during the day to Panhellenic.

The other six sororities will work at Robbins at future days during the semester.

Coeds Granted Added Hour After Game

Coeds will have an extra hour to celebrate the Carolina victory over State College Wednesday night after the basketball game. But if the Tar Heels lose, dormitory closing hours will not be extended until midnight.

The late permission, if Carolina wins the game, was granted by joint resolution of the dean of women's office and the Women's Residence Council at a meeting of the WRC Tuesday.

Accumulative minutes late at night might be allowed coeds before they are campused. This possibility was discussed, but no action was taken by the Women's Residence Council Tuesday. The present coed rules state that a girl is campused for one night from one second to ten minutes lateness.

The Council announced that violations of regulations during a panty raid would be subject to House Council action. Only cases of an infringement of the Campus Code during a panty raid would be referred to the Women's Honor Council.

Katie Stewart and LuRuth Sutton will report to the council at a later meeting on the freshmen counselor system for next year. They will investigate the possibility of having orientation counselors double as freshmen counselors.

Lists of dormitory study rooms needs are being compiled, Council members were told. These needs will be turned over to Student Body President Don Furtado.

A leadership training program for new WRC members will be held early in April, it was announced.

Heart Hop Tonight Is For Local Boy

A Valentine Dance will be held at the American Legion Hut tonight from 9 to 1:30 so that a local boy who is paralyzed from the waist down may have an expensive operation.

The net profits from the dance, which is being sponsored by campus Policeman Edward "Scottie" Scott, will go toward the operation.

The tickets are $3 per couple and may be purchased from "Scottie" or at the local police department.

At least two other organizations have donated their efforts for the dance. The American Legion donated the hut and the University Print Shop printed the tickets free.

Doug Clark's combo will furnish the music.

Dance Recital Date Delayed Until Future

A Dance Recital set for Sunday has been postponed until an unannounced future date, the Women's Physical Education Department reported Wednesday.

Carolina Symposium To Name Chairman

The chairman of the 1960 Carolina Symposuim will be selected today at a meeting of faculty and student members of the General Committee.

Interdormitory Council Passes New Regulations For UNC Residence Halls

The Interdormitory Council passed new residence hall regulations last night including a proposal which would eliminate all gambling and drinking in the dormitories but permit the possession of alcoholic beverages.

The rules outside of the drinking provision remained largely the same as those posted on the back of dormitory doors. The rules will ultimately have to be approved by the administration.

A representative of the Chapel Hill Telephone Company told the group that the company was attempting to give the dormitories the best possible service, but that if phones continue to be damaged there would be a possibility that all phones would be taken out of the dorms.

He pointed out also that about $70 per month was being lost because students were using quarter size washers in an effort to get free telephone service on long distance calls.

He said that the company has ordered 200 Hear-Hear phones and are currently in the process of replacing all the old phones in the dormitories.

Edwards reported that the Dormitory Council Courts had not heard a single case, and that some dorms had maintained excellent conditions while others hadn't. He added that he hoped that the students would realize their responsibility for self-government without University control.

NASH HALL FIRE

The second fire in two years hit Nash Hall last night, as internal smoke brought firemen at 9 p.m. rushing to the scene to put the blaze out within three-quarters of an hour.

According to firemen on the scene, the fire was caused probably by faulty wiring, but damage to the building, a University structure on Pittsboro St., was slight.

Smoke was contained within the walls of the building, and the only damage, except that necessary in putting the fire out, was the burning of already rotting wood inner walls.

At no time was the building in any real danger as sparks and smoke were the extent of the blaze.

Faculty Members Raps Recommended Budget

By NORMAN SMITH

"The budgets as recommended by the Advisory Budget Commission will provide for the decline and degradation of the University of North Carolina. The acceptance of such budgets will lower standards here so much that it will require 20 years to restore the University to its present status."

These remarks were made yesterday by a member of the UNC faculty who said that he felt this attitude on the Commission's report reflected the attitude of the faculty as a whole. He asked to remain unnamed.

"It has been a deeply kept secret that UNC has been failing to live up to its academic reputation for the past 10 years," he said, "and the drastic cuts in requested budgets made by the Commission will serve to precipitate the decline which already has started."

William B Aycock, chancellor of the University, said that an official statement regarding the action of the Commission will be forthcoming "as soon as administrative officers have had time to completely evaluate the Commission's recommendations."

"A lot of things are there that don't meet the eye," Chancellor Aycock said. Concerning the omission of the request for a new student union and the inclusion of a new cafeteria which was not on the list of immediate requests submitted by UNC, Aycock said, "It is evident that they have placed emphasis first on feeding, housing and teaching the students at the expense of the student center."

The unnamed faculty member cited several situations which will result from the acceptance of the Commission's budget slashes:

(1) Young men who come here with specialized training and high expectations will not be able to continue educating themselves and will not be able to do research because of lack of funds and library resources.

(2) Those who continue to try to learn and do research will have to become increasingly dependent on the use of the Duke University Library, a priviledge that may be withdrawn at any time.

(3) At least four departments here may well disappear for lack of funds and faculty.

(4) Many young faculty members who would become chairmen, deans, researchers, and writers will be lured away by higher pay and more adequate facilities.

Bill To Unseat Executives Prepared

A bill, introduced by Norman B. Smith (SP), to prevent executive officers from holding seats in the Student Legislature will be discussed at he Legislature meeting tonight.

The governing body will meet at 7:30 in Phi Hall, 4th floor, New East.

The bill was amended by the Rules Committee yesterday to take effect April 7, 1959, if it is passed by Legislaure.

A resolution, presented by Dave Jones (SP) at the last session, authorizing the University Club to sell advertising in preparation for publication of the 1959 University Club Handbook was indefinitely tabled by the Ways and Means Committee.

Accordnig to Norman B. Smith, committee chairman, "The tabling of this resolution does not reflect any attitude of hostility toward the University Club on the part of the Ways and Means Committee. The action was only taken to relieve the legislative agenda of business that can legally be transacted within the University Club itself."

Also on the agenda will be a bill, introduced by Smith, to provide $30 for the sophomore class for its scholarship program.

IN THE GOOD OLD SUMMERTIME

Summer Program Announced

A full range of undergraduate, graduate and professional programs in seven schools and in 31 academic fields will be offered in the 1959 UNC summer session, according to Dr. Arnold K. King, director.

Inquiries from prospective students are running about 30 per cent ahead of this time last year, Dr. King said yesterday. UNC's Summer School is the oldest in the nation, the largest in the state and among the largest in the country. Enrollment will reach about 3,600 the first term, or about five per cent over last year, Director King predicted.

The first six-week term opens June 4, the second term July 15. About 240 faculty members will be teaching.

Dr. King announced programs "identical with those of the fall and spring semester" and carrying degree credits in the College of Arts and Sciences, Graduate School, School of Business Administration, School of Education, School of Law, School of Library Science, School of Social Work.

The summer session of 1959 has been planned to meet the needs of the following groups: (1) graduates of accredited high schools who are entering the freshman class, (2) regular undergraduate and graduate students who are meeting degree requirements at Chapel Hill, (3) visiting undergraduate and graduate students who desire to take courses for tranfer to other institutions (4) teachers and administrators who desire to meet certification regulations of North Carolina and other states, (5) other students who have special educational objectives and are not applicants for credit toward a degree.

Courses are offered in anthropology, art botany, business administration, chemistry, classies (including archaeology, Greek and Latin), comparative literature, dramatic art, economics, education, English, geography, geology, German, history, law, library science, mathematics, music, philosophy, physical education, physics, political science, psychology, radio, television and motion pictures, religion, Romance languages (including French, Italian, and Spanish) Russian, social work, sociology and zoology.

Particular attention will be given to the needs of students who are meeting the requirements of the Graduate School for the following degrees: doctor of philosophy, doctor of education, master of arts, master of science, master of busines administration, master of education, master of science in library science, master of social work.

In the School of Education, programs are aimed in three directions —the undergraduate certificate program for those planning to teach in public schools; certificate renewal programs for those teachers meeting certification requirements of the N. C. State Board of Education, and the students studying for graduate degrees in education. For the latter the major and minor programs are in the following fields: elementary education, secondary education, administration and supervision, educational psychology, history and comparative education, physical and health education, guidance and personnel work, special education, distributive education.

Dr. King announced that applications for enrollment in the summer session will be received from both men and women, and admision is through either one of three different place: (1) regular undergraduate students apply to the UNC Director of Admissions, Drawer 111, Chapel Hill, (2) graduate students admitted or re-admitted apply to the Dean of the Graduate School, Drawer 311, Chapel Hill, (3) those enrolling as a visiting student only, or those wishing to obtain further information about the summer program, should write to the director of the summer session.

In a catalog and brochure issued by the summer session office, Dr. King also announced additional facilities and activities under a heading "The time of your life . . . at Chapel Hill . . . Live, Learn and Advance This Summer Under Ideal Campus Conditions."

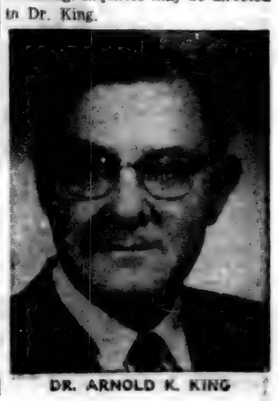
Among the facilities are featured the Louis R. Wilson Library, University Testing Service, Placement Services, Health Service, Communication Center, Morehead Planetarium, Ackland Art Center and Carolina Playmakers.

Among the off-class recreational opportunities are the Graham Memorial Student Union and special social and activity programs, the Woollen Gym, with two large swimming pools, tennis courts, athletic fields, golf course.

Besides the regular curriculum at Chapel Hill there are additional conferences, institutes and workshops convening in the University for various periods of time and among these are a clinic for piano teachers and students; a social work institute; in-school TV workshop; a summer institute for high school teachers of science and mathematics, supported by a grant from the National Science Foundation; programs for teachers in special education and numerous other special features.

Tuition for North Carolinians for each six-week course is $25, and for out-of-state students, $83.50. It is estimated that expenses usually range between $150 and $225 for tuition, fees and essential living costs.

Dr. King explained that there are a limited number of opportunities for students who wish to work their way through summer school. Loan funds also are available to those needing them. In addition, there are 30 awards of $100 each to teachers attending. Inquiries may be directed to Dr. King.



DR. ARNOLD K. KING

A Decision Needed

If there was anything that was evident from the Chancellor's Cabinet meeting on Monday, that some serious thinking needs to be done now about the purpose and function of the University before the pressures of time and population preclude a decision.

The decision is a basic one of what type of a school is the University is going to be. It is a decision of philosophic purpose within which all future planning must conform. It is a decision yet to be made.

The decision will be made by a group in which the Chancellor is the lowest authority, for the decision is one to be made by the Board of Higher Education, the trustees, and the Consolidated University officers. However, the view of the local administration will certainly be taken into consideration.

The problem goes deeper that the question of whether the University is going to sacrifice quality for quantity or whether there will or will not be a liberal arts college at the University. It is a problem of what the University is offering to its students and to the state. It is a question of the function of the other institutions in the state.

Indeed it is a question of whether the University will be a place devoted to learning for the sake of learning or learning for doing. It is a question of whether the University will be, if the editor might borrow a phrase from a member of the administration, a community of persons committed to the pursuit of truth, or whether this University will be committed to giving education in specialties so that student will be equipped for vocations of sorts.

This is at the heart of the issue of growth, and it is the central problem in the many problems to be discussed here during the next few days. It is an issue that must be resolved before it is too late to resolve it or before the University becomes so large that the second alternative is the only possibility.

The University is moving into the era of the eight story dorm, an era, if continued, which promises increasing fragmentation of the University community, and the question before the powers-that-be is whether this is desireable. During the next few days the editor will try to answer that question, but for the present suffice it to say that the former alternative, the alternative of a community of persons committed to the pursuit of truth, is the only valid commitment that this University with its traditions and with its historical position can make.

Appropriation Needed

Much as the editor has opposed class officers in the past, it appears that this year's class officers have come up with an idea that deserves attention, note, and commendation.

This idea is the sophomore class' proposition that a scholarship fund be set up for distinguished students who have demonstrated academic ability and extracurricular participation. The University is woefully lacking in scholarship funds, and this type of a scholarship is especially important. The Student Legislature ought to contribute tomorrow night the funds to kick the plan off. It is a worthy undertaking, and if all classes did something of this sort, they might be worthwhile having.

Give Blood

It has been reported that only 40 students have been typed to give blood to the hospital. The hospital currently needs blood urgently in order that operations may be performed on children patients there — operations which may well save their lives.

The hospital is open all day Tuesday and Thursday (including today) for blood donations. If you are over 21 years of age, do not hesitate to give, and if you are between the ages of 18 and 21, try to obtain your parent's permission. Your donation now may save a life.

UNC Students To Show Chinese

March Wind

I suppose it is time to be a Sinister Subversive again. This happy thought occurred to me just last Sunday afternoon while I was watching a documentary film on television, "The Face of Red China."

Since American citizens are forbidden to travel to Red China, the superb footage was shot by a German cameraman, and the running commentary was provided by an English reporter. Our own Walter Cronkite showed the advantages of freedom, American style, by asking silly questions.

What the Chinese Communists are doing really has to be seen to be believed. In every area—industry, agriculture, education, public health, etc. — they are making advances which are simply staggering. Ten years ago, China did not manufacture an aspirin tablet; today, they make antibiotics. Ten years ago, China did not manufacture a single tractor. Last year, they made 20,000 of the dammed things, and this year they will make 100,000. Six hundred million people have come out of the Dark Ages into the 20th century, and no can can predict what this will mean for your future and mine.

I could go on endlessly repeating these statistics, but it would be superflous. You get the point. This transformation of China is very possibly the most significant in all of recorded history. But what about the cost? Nothing comes for nothing, as the old saying goes.

It was precisely on this point that the TV presentation struck a jarring (and typical) note. With the camera panning a huge new steel complex, the narrator solemnly intoned: "Of course, the economic advance is paralleled by a decline in human rights." For a minute there, I thought it was Curtis Gans up on his soap box advocating FREEDOM, but not even Gans could be guilty of such asininity.

The idea that the old China—the China where men died in the streets of starvation, the China where women were sold into concubinage (attention Cort Edwards), the China where war lords lopped off peasant heads, the China where great floods and famines and plagues periodically took millions of lives, the China where opium was the biggest "industry" — the idea that this old China was some sort of citadel of "human rights" is simply incredible.

It is my guess that this prize specimen of idiocy was not perpetrated on the viewing audience just for propeganda reasons. I would guess that American policy makers are prisoners of their own myth. They really believe that the average Chinese citizen feels intensely his "loss" of "freedom," and is therefore ready to revolt when the proper opportunity comes. The technical phrase for this phenomenon (I just throw this in to impress you) is: "an ideological separation from the existential reality." And if you're among the many who've been wondering whatinhell is wrong with Dulles, that's it.

The idea that the Chinese citizen is being "regimented" (Of course he's being "regimented," and just what do you think is happening to you?) and "brain-washed" (Of course he's being "brain-washed," and just what do you think is the function of American television? Have you had your Bufferin today?) so that he will put forth the enormous effort needed for the transformation is a neat inversion of the "existential reality." The transformation into a modern society comes first; it is literally a life-or-death necessity. But the essential prerequisite for this transformation is a high degree of social cohesion, i.e. "regimentation," and the essential prerequisite for social cohesion is rational justification, i.e. "brain-washing."

This country of ours used to respect hard work. The Puritan ethic (which, incidentally, used a lot of "regimentation" and "brain-washing") made a fetish out of hard work. But now we are soft. Only a few American crackpots

If enough UNC students will indicate to The Tarheel an interest in challenging the Chinese peasantry on its own terms, I am sure that Editor Gans can be depeneded upon to set the necessary wheels in motion.

How about it?

In spite of all appearances to the contrary, I am convinced that UNC students are just as smart and tough as Chinese peasants.

Let's hear from YOU, you regimented, brain-washed "volunteer." work hard. And so, when we see an industrious people hard at work, we naturally assume that they are busy only to avoid the rigors of a totalitarian concentration camp.

This is not to say that the Chinese Communists do not have concentration camps. They do. It is to say that the average Chinese citizen is working very hard indeed these days because he sees the possibility that death (perhaps HIS death) by flood, famine or plague can be relegated to the barbaric past. When that little problem is taken care of, then, and only then, will Mr. John Doe of China turn his thoughts to habeas corpus and other such esoteric subjects. First things first. The earliest American settlers worried about food and Indians. Democracy, as we know it, grew slowly.

Now, for the most exciting part of the column. March Wind has another POSITIVE SUGGESTION! WHEE!

The symbol of the new China, of the great transformation, is the home-made blast furnace. There are perhaps 100,000 of these crude structures all over China, shooting little sparks into the night time sky, grinding out the iron ingots for processing in the Manchurian steel mills. It is estimated that within ten years these furnaces, in every peasant village and in every city park, will bring Communist China past Great Britain in steel production.

Western experts are inclined to sneer at this phase of the great Chinese effort. They say it is very childish, uneconomical, and the ingots are of poor quality. Perhaps the experts are right; perhaps they are wrong. (Experts are often wrong.) Why don't we find out?

Since we can't go to Red China without risking an American prison (The U. S. does not have concentration camps—except for special cases like the Japanese-Americans in World War II), LET'S BUILD A BLAST FURNACE HERE AT UNC.

Would that not be kicks?

We may have to fight those dammed Chinese peasants some day. Let's find out for ourselves, in the only way we can, just how much guts they've got.

Now I wouldn't know a blast furnace if I were in bed with one. And I suspect this is true of most UNC students who might be interested in the project. Therefore, a modicum of leadership and supervision by somebody who has been in bed with a blast furnace is essential. Also essential is a modicum of money for the coal, iron ore, bricks, etc. needed to keep the dammed thing going for say a week or two. Finally, volunteer manpower will be needed to actually operate the furnace (these volunteers may require a little "regimentation" and "brain-washing,").

As for the blast furnace site—I suggest a central location, e.g. in front of South Building. The fire insurance rates ought to be pretty good there, everybody at UNC will have a good view of the operation, and it will warm Chancellor Aycock's heart to see UNC students actually sweating.

"There Seems To Be Some Kind Of Fallout"

Soviet Congress

The New Republic

The 21st Congress of the Soviet Communist Party was not an epoch-making event like its predecessor three years ago, at which Khrushchev made his historic "secret speech." It has, however, confirmed both the personal domination of Khrushchev and the board outlines of the post-Stalinist policies pursued by him. The swelling chorus of adulation for the creative leader who initiated all the great political, economic and educational reform of recent years and defeated the knavish tricks of the "anti-party group" single-handed has finally ended what was left of the fiction of "collective leadership." But there has been no tendency to return to mass terrorism, to the use of the secret police as an instrument of everyday rule, or to the replacement of economic incentives by brutal compulsion; on the contrary, state force is to be increasingly disguised as the pressure of "social organizations," all, of course, directed by the party.

In foreign affairs, the diplomacy of coexistence will continue, along with threats and crises at well-chosen moments; the West is again urged to "end the Cold War" and to "let the people decide" about the outcome of peaceful competition, but the peoples of Eastern Europe will be given no such opportunity, while moral support for Communist and "anti-imperialist" movements will go on. At the same time, Khrushchev has made it even clearer than before that he no longer believes in a serious risk of world war by Western attack; finally, the effort to woo the non-Communist neutrals in Asia and Africa will continue undiminished.

Within the Communist world, the serious ideological challenge presented by Mao Tse-tung last fall, when the Chinese communes were presented as a revolutionary shortcut to the higher stage of egalitarian Communism, has been quickly brought under control. There is much to be said for the view that it was primarily because of that challenge that the present extraordinary Congress was called at all (within a few days of the Chinese announcement); it was certainly the reason why the new Soviet seven-year plan, the official theme of the Congress, was presented as "the first stage of the all-round building of Communism." Soviet ideological journals have been full of learned arguments as to why the higher stage of Communism can only be reached on the basis of productive abundance due to the very highest technical level — arguments which the Chinese Communists finally had to accept by mid-December, in the light of their own difficulties as well as of Soviet pressure. Khrushchev made the point again before the Congress to the applause of Chou En-lai; but he has also explicitly conceded that the Chinese communes, now that the challenging claim of a shortcut to Communism is abandoned, are the kind of peculiar institutions to which each loyal Communist country is entitled. He has thus once again confined the claim of Soviet authority to leadership in foreign policy and ideology, while leaving some scope for practical variety within the limits of the "common laws of Socialist development"—a statement which Mr. Gomulka has been quick to welcome.

But the unsettled issues are hardly less vital. In mapping out the road to Communism, Mr. Khrushchev not only dazzled his hearers with rows of more or less realistic production figures and rather unrealistic promises of a drastic reduction of working hours; he also indicated that the time has come when the collective farmers — recently the main beneficiaries of his reform — will have to pay by greater subordination to new forms of state direction. State control over their investments it to be strengthened in a variety of ways, including mixed statekolkhoz enterprises; after the reduction of the private plots of the collective farmers, an effort is to be made also to reduce the private herds, which still comprise a good half of the rising livestock population of the Soviet Union; and Khrushchev's old pet project of the resettlement of the villagers in "agro-towns" (he now calls them "new settlements of an urban type") is to be revived. This program is significant proof of the party's desire, after its recent economic successes, to start anew twisting the country's life in accordance with ideological designs; but so far no timetable is attached to it, and this is the kind of program which may be ineffective if no serious pressure is used, and may damage production if it is.

Finally, no decision was taken either on the fate of the "anti-party group." Clearly, Molotov, Kaganovich and their associates have not been prepared to make the unconditional political surrender required of them; and the fact that they were not "called to account before the Congress," as one delegate demanded, suggests that Khrushchev was not eager to let them make a statement of their own drafting before this semi-public forum. Their expulsion for "factional struggle against the party's policy" will now probably be decided behind the closed doors of a Central Committee meeting; but the fact that most members of the party presidium no longer described the group as "criminal" suggests that at least the idea of following expulsion by a Stalin-style trial has been dropped for the time being. Yet a number of speakers indicated that Malenkov at least, whom Khrushchev clearly hates and fears most, may still be tried not for his political opposition to Khrushchev, but for his former "violations of Socialist legality," i.e. his participation in Stalin's crimes. The case would not be difficult to make; but it might well prove difficult to stop with Malenkov.

Individual Freedom On The Carolina Campus

Don Dotson

The time has come when the students of this University must rise up and oppose the disease which has begun to manifest itself on our campus. The time has come to beat down those people who are attempting to turn this University into a finishing school. It is time to make it clear that we are dedicated, not to the dictates of a Residence Council, not to the pressures of the fashion peddlers, not to the manifest philosophy of the dean of women and her bright-eyed children-followers, but to our great motto of "LIGHT AND LIBERTY."

Surely there is no single cause for this decay which is taking place. Indeed there are many reasons. One, however, is certain. For the most part, the male student comes to this campus with a fairly plastic mind. Here he is suddenly released from many of the restrictions of home. His period of adjustment to the freedom which he finds here may be very chaotic. It may take more than one semester or one year. Indeed, this freedom is disasterous for some. With time and patience, however, our system pays off. It pays off in the form of developing and individual who is self-disciplined and self-reliant. He learns one of the most important lessons, that of individual thinking and resourcefulness. He finds out before it is too late that there will not always be someone to order his time, make his decisions, and plan his life for him. He has a chance to develop these things on which all other things depend, these things, without which all others are worth absolutely nothing to himself or anybody else.

Such is not the case with the woman on the campus. She does not come to our uniquely-free-for-the-South institution with such a plastic mind. For the most part, she is a junior who has spent her first two years at W. C., St. Mary's, and Whoknowswherelse. Her exposure to our freedom must be a shock. She is sure that something is wrong. We have failed to make enough rules. We do not have enough courts, councils, commissions, boards, committees, rules, regulations, codes and big sisters to tell us what to do. To her mind, this place really is in bad shape and she is the heaven-sent to save us.

Perhaps I should say at this point that this is not true of all the new juniors. Indeed, by this point, they have divided into two general groups. The first group is composed of those who, two years ago, may have come to college expecting to begin a real transition into the responsibilities of adulthood and found, instead, that they were not yet on their own, but that they were to spend a few more years being treated like children. To them, student government, freedom, and independence become a farce. With this attitude they come to Carolina. This group must expect the same thing here. (If things keep on at the present rate they will, indeed, find the same thing here.) They have probably given up, because we don't hear much from them.

The ones we do hear from are in the second group. These are the bright-eyed children-followers mentioned previously. (A good many nurse-leaders may be found in this group too. Authenticated reports indicate that this results from a combination of causes including the physical separation of the school of nursing from the rest of the campus, the extended careers of high-school-leaders with high school ideas, and the attitude of the dean and administration of the school of nursing.) At any rate, these are the ones who were too immature to become disgusted. What they see is a good chance to organize a game of "follow the leader" and they are going to make damn sure they are the leaders. They thrive on the apathy of the disgusted ones as they run out and have their cute mugs plastered on posters and pinned on every available inch of wall space on the campus. And once elected, how they do lead! They are the leaders, the queens, the judges, and the juries. They are the defenders and advocates. They are the inquisitioners and executioners. They are the scourge of freedom and the liberal traditions of the University of North Carolina. It is these people whom we have to thank for the summary court martial type of trial conducted in the secret councils. They are the ones who have imposed the harassments of fines and petty rules on their fellow coeds. They are the definers of ladies. They are seeking to mold the rest of the campus in their own image. They have thrown away our freedoms at every turn. They would destroy our liberal tradition. They are dragging our University to the same low level of student independence, integrity, and self-government as the institutions from which they came. If unchecked, they will be the death of the free system which makes this a great University and a leader in the South.

The time has come for the citizens of this campus to show their disgust with this type of leadership. The time has come to replace these so-called "leaders" with real leaders, independent thinkers who are not afraid of freedom, people with faith in our liberal tradition. The women of this campus must elect leaders who will strive to guarantee to them the same measure of freedom and independence enjoyed by the men of this University for so many years. It is time for the disgusted women on this campus to speak out against the bright-eyed children-followers. It is time for the disgusted ones join the Student Party or the University Party and make sure that such people are not nominated for offices this Spring. The time to act is now.

For the Tar Babies tonight's contest with the Baby Deacs in Winston-Salem will be the rubber match of the three game schedule between the two teams.

The first time that the two teams met, the Deacons won easily by an 84-65 count. Almost a month later the two squads faced each other in Chapel Hill, and this time the Tar Babies came out on top 64-60 in a close one.

Since that date the Wake Forest freshmen have been exceptionally hot and have compiled a string of five straight wins. Included in this streak which has brought the Deac's season record to 9-3 are victories over N. C. State (87-74) and Duke (88-44).

Tar Babies Split Six

The Carolina frosh, on the other hand, have not fared so well. The Tar Babies have split the six contests in which they have played since January 8. In the win column they show victories over the Georgetown freshmen, Bullis Prep, and Wilmington Junior College while losing to State twice and Duke once.

As was expected before the season even got underway the Baby Deac offense is being led by Leonard Chappell. Coach Charlie Bryant's 6-8 center is averaging an even 20 points per game. Running second to Chappell is guard Billy Packer who owns a 14.6 mark. The Wake freshmen also have Gene Compton and Frank Loeffler averaging better than 10 points per game.

Frosh Now 7-4

Dean Smith's Tar Babies, possessors of a 7-4 slate, are relying on Donnie Walsh, Jim Hudock, and Yogi Poteet to furnish most of the scoring power. In their last win against Wilmington, Walsh dumped in 33 points to establish the single-game individual mark for the year. Behind Walsh in this game were Poteet with 24 and Hudock with 23.

When the Tar Babies defeated the Baby Deacs one of the major reasons for the win came from the fact that Chappell was held to 10 points for the night, 4 of them coming in the last minute of play. In Burlington where the Deacon frosh won by nineteen points Chappell paced his team with 23.

Wake Forest?

Tankmen Face Deacs Today

The Carolina varsity swimmers will be seeking to start a brand new winning streak today when the travel to Winston-Salem to meet Wake Forest this afternoon.

The fabulous Tar Heel win streak of 28 was shattered last week by Florida when the Gators left town with a 50-36 victory.

The meet was tied at 35-35 until the Gators swept the last two events, the 200-breaststroke and the 400-freestyle relay.

Bloom Counted

Heavily counted on today as usual will be soph flash Harry Bloom. Bloom, in spite of the loss to Florida, came through with two victories, in the 50 and 220 dashes.

Also depended upon will be backstroker Bob Hunter, sprinter Brent Nash, butterfly-ace Randy Dodson, divers Dick Cashwell and Jack Rudy, breaststroker Kit Mercer, among many others.

The record for Pat Earey's crew for the season now stands at 6-1. The Tar Heels are undefeated in the conference with a 3-0 record.

They had two close matches with tough little ECC, winning the last time by only 44-42.

Mostly Sophs

This year's squad, composed mostly of sophomores, shows promises of developing into one of the strongest teams in Carolina swimming history. Six all-Americans graduated off last season's undefeated crew.

Wake Forest is still looking for its first swimming victory of the season in the ACC.

Be loyal to your flag—you need it more than it needs you.

Outing Club Leaders Elected

At the last meeting of the Outing Club, Sonny Kincey was elected to head the outfit for the rest of the year. Backing him up are John Crawford, vice president; Steve Smith, secretary, and Jim McGee, treasurer.

During the business meeting the new constitution discussed and ratified but left was open for amendments. It was also decided to discuss the Regatta, to Buggs Island, in more detail at the next meeting. They also talked about some of their activities, which will cover just about every phase of outdoor life.

During the course of the evening the word coed was brought into the circle of discussion. As to whether to except them into the Club or not was the question at hand. It was decided to settle the issue at their next meeting.

CHEVY'S NEW HI-THRIFT 6

More miles are back in a gallon of regular-grade gas—up to 10% more—and Chevy's new Hi-Thrift 6 engine puts them there. It also gives you more "git" in the speeds you drive the most.

Here's an engine that always seems able to coax extra miles out of a tank of regular-grade gas. In fact, if you're one of those drivers who keep tab on things like gas mileage, you'll soon see for yourself that this new Hi-Thrift 6 gets up to 10% more miles a gallon.

Another thing you'll like about this 135-h.p. 6 is the extra pep it gives you for passing and climbing hills. This is due to higher torque at normal speeds.

It may be hard to believe anything that looks and moves like this '59 Chevy can be such a stickler for economy. But—whether you pick the Hi-Thrift 6 or a vim-packed V8—this is just one more reason Chevy's the car that's wanted for all its worth. Stop by your dealer's and see.

Extinguishers Planned For Men's Dorms

Meeting Yields Plans For Dorm Improvements

Fire extinguishers will be installed in men's dormitories possibly sometime this semester.

This information was released Wednesday at a meeting of two Interdormitory Council members and administrative officials.

Rudy Edwards, president of the IDC, said Wednesday the water-discharge type fire extinguishers will probably be placed on alternate floors in the dorms. This is being done because of the high cost of the extinguishers, Edwards said, but plans are to have them on every floor as soon as possible. Each extinguisher will cost approximately $52.

Bids for the extinguishers have already been received, but no contract has yet been awarded.

'HEAR-HERE' BOOTHS

Six more 'hear-here' telephone booths will be installed this semester, Edwards said. The new booths will be on the second floors in Lewis, Everett and Ruffin and on the third floors of Manly, Graham and Stacy.

If these six new hear-here booths and the six previously installed work successfully, more booths will be placed in dorms later, Edwards said. With the installation of the six new booths planned, at least one hear-here booth will be in each dorm previously without any type of inclosed telephone booth, except Grimes.

Edwards also reported that new

Tar Heels Whip Deacons 75-66

Riot Breaks Out On Court; Four Heels In Double Figures

WINSTON-SALEM — Carolina's Tar Heels survived a tenacious Wake Forest basketball team and a wholesale riot in the last 30 seconds to emerge with a 75-66 ACC victory here last night.

The fight started between Lee Shaffer and Dave Budd, but quickly spread to the rest of the players and then the fans got into the act before police could break it up. Both coaches then decided to remove their starting line-ups for good and put in substitutes. There were only 30 seconds left in the game during all the excitement.

Although Carolina led 33-32 at the half, Wake Forest dominated play in much of the opening half.

Carolina, rather listless in the first half, quickly jumped to a 5-point spread in the second half. But the Deacs came right back with six straight points to go ahead 38-37.

The team exchanged baskets until a tap by Dick Kepley put the Tar Heels ahead to stay at 44-43. From there they were never headed. Two straight jump shots by first half, quickly jumped to a 5 point lead and from then on it was only a question of how much.

Wake got fairly close with 3:50 left on a Dick Odom jump which made it 65-62, but a Larese shot and a three-point play by Kepley pulled the Heels out of reach.

The victory boosted Carolina's overall record to 15-1 and they own a perfect 10-0 ACC record. It was also the 9th straight Carolina victory.

The big gun for the night was Wake's George Ritchie who poured in 22 points.

The Carolina scoring was evenly divided, with Dick Kepley pacing the attack with 17. He was followed by Lee Shaffer and Doug Moe with 16 each, York Larese with 14, Harvey Salz with 7 and Danny Lotz with 5.

Orientation Chairman Named; Symposium Committee Picked

Parker Wins Orientation Position

Orientation Chairman for the 165th session of UNC will be David Parker, Student Body President Don Furtado announced on Thursday.

Parker is a Junior in pre-med and comes from Raleigh. He is a Morehead Scholar and was a past member of the Orientation Committee. Also he is a member of Pi Kappa Alpha and Alpha Epsilon Delta, pre-med Fraternity.

"David has worked actively in the varied phases of the orientation program for the past two years. His past abilities and experience, together with his sincere desire to prepare the best possible program of Orientation for our campus should make him an admirable chairman," Furtado said of Parker.

Selection was made on the evaluation of experience, interest, time available, summer plans, plans for improvement of orientation and adacemic standing.

Appointment was made by Don Furtado after candidates were interviewed by past Campus Orientation Chairman Herman Godwin, Women's Coordinator Katie Stewart, Student Body Vice President Ralph Cummings and Furtado.

Robinson To Head Symposium

The chairman of the 1960 Carolina Symposium is Dick Robinson, a junior from Greensboro.

Robinson was unanimously elected Thursday by the General Committee of the Symposium. The committee by acclamation also elected Gordon Street treasurer of the Symposium.

In accepting his new position, Robinson said, "The Symposium in my opinion is one of the most significant student activities on the campus. I consider it a great honor to have been selected to work with the General Committee in attempting to produce a meaningful program for 1960."

Some of his first duties as chairman will include appointment of two vice chairmen, a secretary and members of the Program Committee, which plans the 1960 Symposium.

After his selection Thursday, Robinson immediately stepped into the position now vacated by Al Goldsmith, who has served as chairman of the Interim Committee during the year between Symposium programs.

Goldsmith said this about the new Symposium chairman: "Dick Robinson by far is the most outstanding person for the job. I couldn't have been more happy over his election."

For the present time Robinson will continue his duties as attorney general of the student body.

American Composition On Ensemble's Program

A varied program consisting largely of music composed by Americans will be given by the UNC Symphonic Wind Ensemble in their first concert of the year in Hill Hall tonight at 8.

Conductor Herbert Fred, instructor in the Music Department, will be assisted by cornet soloist, Gordon Finlay of the U. S. Navy Band and by guest conductor, Earl Slocum, director of the UNC Symphony Orchestra.

Finlay will play "Hungarian Melodies," a cornet solo by Vincent Bach. Professor Slocum will conduct his recently published arrangement of Mozart's "Overture to the Marriage of Figaro."

PROGRAM

In their second year as a wind ensemble, the 44-member student group will perform major works by three well-known contemporary Americans: Vincent Persichetti's "Symphony for Band," "Commando March" by Samuel Barber; and "Tulsa (A Symphonic Portrait in Oil)" by Don Gillis.

Vincent Persichetti, a native of Philadelphia, is a member of the faculty of the Juilliard School of Music and head of the Composition Department of the Philadelphia Conservatory. "Symphony for Band," commissioned by Washington University of St. Louis, is his fourth original work for band.

Barber's" Commando March," also written for band, was composed while Barber was serving in the U. S. Armed Forces in World War II.

"Tulsa," a symphonic poem, is in four sections. The first is a pastoral movement describing the Oklahoma land before the settling of the white man. The second depicts the violent struggle for the land, its transformation from wilderness to homesteads, and finally to the modern city of Tulsa. Section three describes the attempt to "bring in" the oil well, and is graphic in its portrayal of the violence of the gusher. The last part concerns the celebration of the whole population.

Other works to be played by the ensemble are "American Overture" by J. W. Jenkins and the final movement from "Symphony No. 1 in G Minor" by V. S. Kallinikov.

Finlay occupies first chair with the U. S. Navy Band and conducts the band's Ceremonial Detachment. He accepts many conducting assignments each year and has composed numerous marches and cornet trios which the band features extensively in its tours. He studied music at Oregon State College and at the Universities of Oregon and Idaho.

Separation Of Powers Voted By Legislature

By STAN BLACK

Norman B. Smith's (Ind.) bill to provide for separation of powers in student government was passed unanimously by the Student Legislature in its meeting last night.

The bill, as amended by Jim Crownover (SP) to include judiciary officers, prohibits individuals from holding important elective offices in more than one branch of student government. The office of Attorney General is included in those executive offices designated. Judiciary bodies falling under the bill are the Student Council, Men's Honor Council, and Women's Honor Council.

The original intent of the bill was to prevent executive officers from holding seats in the Legislature. The extension of the bill to cover all three branches of government was made possible by Jim Crownover's amendment. As Crownover said, "We should have complete separation of powers if we are going to have it at all." Rep. Smith, the author of the bill, entirely agreed with this idea.

An additional appropriation of $100 was voted to the University Club after some criticism of that organization's financial policy. The Club had run out of its $725 appropriation by what Charlie Gray (UP) called "gross misuse of the budget." But in order to allow the Club to continue with its admittedly beneficial work, the legislature voted the appropriation.

The sophomore class was voted $30 for administrative needs in order that it may continue with its recent efforts to set up a scholarship on campus. A letter from Davis Young on the gratifying progress of this project was read to the body by Dave Jones.

IDC Contest Deadline Nears For Entries

Entries in the IDC's 'sweetheart' contest must be submitted before midnight tonight, according to Dave Alexander, contest chairman.

Judging for the selection of the '59 sweetheart will be held Friday afternoon, Feb. 20, at 3 in the Rendezvous room. Candidates have been requested to wear party dress or suits for the judging.

The IDC's Sweetheart Dance is scheduled for Feb. 20 in Cobb basement. Highlight of the evening will be the crowning of the sweetheart. The dance is free to students.

Planetarium Given Additional $25,000

John Motley Morehead, UNC alumnus and benefactor, has given an additional $25,000 to the Morehead Planetarium here for purchase and installation of recently developed auxiliary instruments Chancellor William B. Aycock said Wednesday.

The new instrument to improve and expand the demonstration facility of the Zeiss Planetarium here will be manufactured by Carl Zeiss Inc., in Oberkochen, West Germany.

Only post-war planetaria in Sao Paulo, Tokyo, Hamburg and London now have the supplementary equipment to be installed in the Morehead Planetarium.

Morehead gave the University and state the Morehead Planetarium in 1949 at a cost of $3,000,000. He is also the founder of the Morehead Scholarships which bear his name, the donor of the Sundial garden, and the co-donor of the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower.

Chancellor Aycock said Morehead's latest gift "represents a key step in the development program evolved by the Morehead Planetarium to keep pace with accomplishments of the space age and the heightened interest in astronomy and other sciences."

Aycock further said that "almost one million visitors have enjoyed the facilities of the Morehead Planetarium since its opening. From the very beginning a large proportion of these visitors have been young people whose experience here has encouraged an active interest in the cosmos. Today, the Planetarium's role in support of science is assuming even greater importance. We are therefore grateful for the foresight and continued help of Mr. Morehead in the fulfillment of our function."

Pep Rally Is Cancelled

The pep rally planned by the University Club for Tuesday evening has been cancelled.

In taking this action, club President Dave Jones said: "After talking to Coach Frank McGuire about the plans we had made and the circumstances under which the team would have to make its appearance, I decided to postpone everything until just before the Atlantic Coast Conference series."

Plans made at yesterday's University Club meeting including participation by the UNC Band, the majorettes and the cheering squad in the pep rally. The event would have been held at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday on the steps of Woollen Gym.

The decision to postpone the pep rally was also discussed by Dave Jones with C. P. Ericson, director of athletics and Carter Jones, head cheerleader.

Mangum Leads Dorm Contest

Mangum Dorm continues to lead in the Outstanding Dormitory Contest. Throughout the months of December and January the dorm added 100 points to its total, as a result of various dormitory activities.

Finishing second in the two-month period was Lewis Dorm with 95 points.

Dormitory presidents' failure to turn in monthly reports of activities has hindered some dorms from closer competition, IDC Contest Committee Chairman Dave Alexander said yesterday. However, general response has greatly improved this year and the contest should end in an exciting fight for top position, Alexander said.

The standings through January are as follows: Mangum, 400; Lewis, 335; Joyner, 220; Cobb, 215; Winston, 180; Grimes, 170; Manly, 160; Graham, 150; Ruffin, 145; Alexander, Aycock, Parker and Stacy, 125; Everett, 105; B-V-P, 100; Avery, 80; Old East, 75; Teague, 50; Old West, 20 and Conner, 0.

Duke, UNC To Combine In Musicale

The Music Departments of both Duke University and UNC will be represented in the second Petite Musicale of the year Sunday at 8 p.m. in the Graham Memorial Lounge.

The Chamber Music recital will feature violinist Julia Mueller, cellist William Klenz, and Allan Bone at the clarinet, all from Duke. Pianist Wilton Mason is on the Chapel Hill faculty.

The group will perform the Beethoven Clarinet Trio, Opus 11; the Dvorak Trio for Violin, Violoncello and Piano; Guiseppe Sammartini's Sonata, Opus 3, No. 9; and Johann Stamitz' Orchestra Trio, Opus 1, No. 5. Two movements of Trio 1957 (Serenade), composed by Dr. Klenz, will also be included in the recital.

The program will be presented to the public free of charge.

Five Internships Open In Political Program

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

The Political Studies Program has announced the establishment of five Politics Internships for the summer of 1959 to be awarded to qualifying UNC students.

Each intern will be placed in the Washington office of a United States senator, congressman or on the staff of a congressional committee. The interns work as regular members of a congressman's or senator's staff for a period of eight weeks (approximately June 1-Aug. 1).

FINANCES

Each intern receives a stipend of $400 from the Political Studies Program. This amount is sufficient to cover the costs of travel from North Carolina to Washington, D.C., and eight weeks' living expenses. All interns must live in a student rooming selected by the program. The living quarters are approved for coeds.

According to D. R. Matthews, associate professor of political science, the purpose of the internships is to enable students to observe national politics at first hand and thus enrich their understanding of Congress and the political process.

Juniors, exceptionally well qualified sophomores, and graduate students may apply for the internships. These students should have approximately a "B" average.

Matthews said the program is interested mostly in students with sufficient and appropriate course work in political science. Political Science 42 and 75, while not formally required, are strongly recommended as preparation for the internships .However, any students meeting the other qualifications may apply.

APPLICATIONS

Matthews will give additional information and application blanks to interested students in his office, 207 Caldwell Hall. Applications must be completed on or before March 1.

Last year two students, Johnny Killian and Jim Scheiber, were representatives from UNC. This was the first time the University participated in the Politics Internships Program.

Although many colleges and universities are represented in Washington by internes. Carolina is the only southern university which takes part in the program.

Today Final Date For Editorship Applications

Today is the final date that junior women may apply for editorship of the Woman's Handbook.

Applications may be made through Doris Taylor at the Alpha Gamma Delta House.

Interviewing sessions for those who have applied will be held Feb. 17.

German Weekend Under Committee Authority

Commencement invitations may be ordered from the Order of the Grail from Feb. 18-20 and 23-24 in the YMCA Lobby from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Orders are taken on a cash basis only.

For more information seniors may call Charles Huntington or Denton Lotz.

Scholarship Drive Joined By Juniors

Junior class officers will join the sophomores in the latter's scholarship program which will be solicited here and throughout the state.

The announcement came Thursday from Davis Young, president of the sophomore class, who also reported that the scholarship will be given next year.

Young said that he is not willing to disclose the name of the person for whom the scholarship is being collected; however, he said that it will be named for a famous North Carolinaian who has been outstanding in the service of the state.

Thursday morning Young and Junior President Wade Smith met with Consolidated University President William Friday. Friday told them that he would support them in any possible way and indicated that he felt a considerable sum of money could be raised for the project.

Young and Smith also met with J. Arthur Branch, University business manager, Charlie Shaffer, director of development and other officials. "All expressed a keen interest in the program and promised to help," Young stated.

Young said, "I am most happy to welcome the junior class into this program. It will take a great deal of our time during the next few months, and all the help we can get will be needed. Raising a large sum of money on a statewide basis is a large task."

Smith commented, "We enthusiastically join the sophomores in this program and we feel that with the cooperation of these two groups we can better reach our objective."

Campus Chest Aims For $3000 'Moon'

UNC's Campus Chest Board will launch its own "rocket to the moon" March 1.

The "rocket" in this case is the annual Campus Chest drive and the "moon" is this year's $3,000 goal.

Contributions from the drive will go to three participating agencies: World University Service, Goettingen scholarships and the Class for Mentally Retarded Children of Orange County.

During the week long drive (March 1-7), a special "rocket" and "moon" will be set up in Y Court. Each day the "rocket" will move nearer the "moon" as the $3,000 goal is approached.

Of the total amount received, 40 per cent ($1,200) will go to the World University Service, an agency that aids students over the world in purchasing textbooks and in supplying food and medical care.

Another 40 per cent ($1,200) has been designated to the Goettingen Scholarships for Carolina students to spend one year at Goettingen University in Germany. Part of this money will also be used to help defray transportation expenses of German students coming to UNC.

The remaining 20 per cent ($600) has been allocated for the mentally retarded children of this county.

Already at work for the drive are three special committees set up by the Campus Chest Board. The Solicitations Committee has assigned students to various areas of the campus for collection purposes.

The Special Projects Committee is currently busy with putting together the "rocket" and "moon." Posters and news releases are being prepared by the Publicity Committee.

The Campus Chest drive this year is being coordinated by Doug Kellam, drive chairman, and Dave Davis, assistant chairman.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

A Commentary

In yesterday morning's paper, a prominent faculty member criticized the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations for the UNC budget, and pointed out the fact that if the current trend continues, the University will go down hill fast.

Significant as his comments were, the most significant feature of his commentary is his refusal to reveal his identity. It is significant in the light of the almost total lack of commentary by University staff members since approximately two years ago when W. C. George was openly espousing a segregationist doctrine. It is significant in the light of the educational television station WUNC-TV and its neglect of such a major issue of the present time as civil rights, when as the educational television station of the citadel of a free education it should be broadcasting controversial programs every week.

Obviously if it is possible that the faculty member is a coward and that he does not have the courage to place his name beside his words, but this possibility is highly doubtful in light of the history of muteness of the last few years. If it is not individual cowardice, then the issue of what has this University become is squarely before the public. Has the University been so profoundly influenced by the McCarthyist period of the early fifties that the feeling of security, so necessary to academic freedom, is largely gone? Is the University so tied up in administrative channels that a man is afraid to voice an opinion until the man above him has expressed his? Is job security in this University dependent on the ability to conform?

Obviously also a blanket yes answer to all of these questions would be a fallacy, and yet, the questions have some truth, for if the proof of the pudding is in the eating, the results have shown a great reluctance on the part of the faculty to speak out on the issues that are to them of major concern. On the surface there is no policy prohibiting open discussion of any or all issues, but faculty problems, controversial issues, and outspoken commentaries, exclusive of such issues as faculty salaries do not seem to come to light.

A University can die of this type of stagnation, for if students after leaving a rather pedestrian education in the primary and secondary levels of this state, are not stimulated by the interchange of viewpoints and ideas, they will leave the University as a member of the vast unthinking group that makes up the majority of this country.

It is hard to put one's finger on what is wrong, what motivates the silence, and what causes the stagnation, but it is clear that this has not been the case always, for educational institutions have long been looked upon as the hub of ideas and controversy. It is high time that this University inspect this problem and reorient itself so that it can truly have on this campus academic freedom.

Letters

To the Editor:

I appreciate you printing the article I wrote; however, I do not think you were fair in the way you printed it. The title on my article was: A Semi-Petty Article About A Petty One. You compromised my views by not using this caption. I realize that you probably do not want outsiders telling you what captions to put on the articles you print; but you should have included my title as I sent it to you, if not as a caption, at least in darker print at the beginning of the article.

In regards to your comments at the end of my article, which I enjoyed immensely, I would like to say: (1) I was not surprised that Mr. Wolff had not submitted any of his work to the Spectrum. I never stated he did. I merely suggested the possibility. (2) Your second statement I find extremely ambigious and amusing. "Mr. Wolff never has his work rejected by The Quarterly" you state. I wonder why? It couldn't be because he never submits, could it? This must be the reason for he has never had anything as of today printed in The Quarterly. I am surprised that he is and remains on the poetry board of The Quarterly. I would think from the comments he made, which were highly derogatory to The Quarterly, that such a magazine would not be worthy enough to be associated with. I question the sincerity or usefulness of anyone remaining with a magazine which he thinks is valueless—the high standards which A. Wolff cries for in art become ridiculous. But what is the point of all this discussion of what Mr. Wolff has and has not written? Is it necessary for a critic to have written or published an original work of art in order to be a critic? Is it necessary for a ballet critic to have done a pirouette or arabesque? No. But, as I said in my article Tuesday, the criteria for judging what others have written become more valid and significant if one has attempted an art form of his own. Not only that, but the critic usually has a more sympathetic and understanding view if he has attempted a work of his own, particularly the type that he is criticising. Above all, he is less likely to adopt a "holier than thou" attitude which so characteristically describes the criticism of A. Wolff.

(3) In reply to your third statement that Mr. Wolff never auditioned for a part in the "Cicktail Party," I have no more reliable information than the director of the play himself, Jack Jackson, who states most emphatically that A. Wolff was not considered talented enough to be in the play.

RICHARD PADGETT

(To clear up the confusion, there were no tryouts for "The Cocktail Party," the play was cast by director Jackson without open tryouts, and Anthony Wolff was not in the cast.)

Editor:

As I sit here at my desk to write this letter, I can hear vulgar mouths shouting the most obscene profanity between the quads that I have ever had the misfortune to hear anywhere at anytime. I have listened to drunk soldiers and sailors brawling, I have listened to the dirty patrons of filthy little dives where lye flavored bootleg was the best seller, and I have read the "cute" little poems scribbled on the walls of restrooms, but the language was fit for Sunday school compared to that used by these loud" Carolina Gentlemen" (flowers of sophistication and etiquette, upholders of the campus code). These profane remarks, which were Shouted from dorm to dorm across the quads, could not be ignored from four or five blocks away (and, Gentlemen, several of the women's dorms are not half that far away).

I think it should be up to those students who are as appalled at this conduct as I am (and who wouldn't be?) to do something about these rotten communications. I'm sure that each of us wants to be proud of his school, but how can anyone be proud with this filthiness of mind being shouted openly and loudly in the streets and dormitories of our campus.

The New Orleans Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under the leadership of Alexander Hilsberg showed itself to be an orchestra of definite musical capabilities and talent in its concert last Wednesday evening in Memorial Auditorium. The string section demonstrated a firm and full tone. The brass section has a nice edge on its sound. And the woodwinds are both balanced and clearly individual in their performance. In short, Mr. Hilsberg has an accomplished personnel to work with, a company of men and women who play together with professional care. Mr. Hilsberg, too, clearly knows what he wants musically, and, what's more, is able to get it from his people.

We cannot, unfortunately, speak in such positive terms about the program that the orchestra played for us. For whoever was responsibile for choosing it seemed to have had the idea that this concert was to be, in depth, in the neighborhood of the pops-and-beer variely. The entire program without exception was made up of light music - music that pleased the ear but did little more than just that.

The concert opened with a performance of the Overture to "Colas Breugnon" of Dimitri Kabalevsky - an agile and slick piece of music entirely based on one snatch of a melody with some effective syncopation at the end of it.

Next the major work of the evening, Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, received an entirely sympathetic reading which never the less, could not save it from mediocrity. For let's face it, this is one of the composer's poorest symphonic works. The first movement opens with an exciting brass fanfare which has no musical connection with the rest of the movement; even in the development section of this movement, Tchaikovsky does not succeed in bringing it into the compositional framework. Both the first and second themes of this movement are awkward in the sense that they neither lend themselves to development, expressive possibility, or the kind of emotional sweep that Tchaikovsky is always trying for. The slow movement that follows is again incomplete in its continuity of musical ideas. There are spots where the music comes to almost a full stop and we sense the inadequacy of the composer's skill to bridge these gaps. The Scherzo is innocuous. Only in the final movement do we recognize Tchaikovsky's tremendous talent in building some sort of musical structure with so little in the way of melody and compositional skill. The musical structure then rests not on musical foundations but on almost purely emotional force. But, all in all, it remains a shallow work full of holes and awkward music that most of the time does not make sense expression-wise and is simply inadequate as musical composition.

After the intermission the orchestra played "Night Soliloquy" by the American composer Kent Kennan, a flute solo of little musical consequence; Mr. Kenneth Scutt was the able flute soloist. Ravel's Interlude and Dance No. 1 from "La Vida Breve" and the "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2 closed the program. Both of these works, especially the latter, present Ravel's talent in making musical color (a vague but, I hope, still meaningful concept) become mobile and moving as emotional and even intellectual meanings in music. But again, for all its richness of color, Ravel does not impress us with any great depth of soul.

With such a program, composed of adequate, pleasant, surface music for the greater part of the evening, we cannot help but be dissatisfied. Within a community of taste and musical sophistication, I frankly do not understand why we could not have had some works of definitely greater musical proportion and musical depth on this program of the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra. As it was, the final encore, The Stars and Stripes Forever, was perfectly representative of the entire evening: lots of fun, but Sousa can hardly be put in the class with Beethoven, Brahms, and Mozart.

Harper's Bizarre

Now you just can't tell about the Beat Generation.

Fortunately, not many people are trying anymore. The Beat Generation has apparently been accepted. But as what?

We first became interested in the Geat Generation last Sprng when two columnists in this paper batted the subject about. One was trying to explain the movement, and the other on alternate days was insisting, "I am not!" We believe neither carried his point.

But we were stimulated. We bought a book about Beat, and discovered that one could be so either poetically or prosaically. All in all, the "representative" writing was ridiculously simple. Not to say that that the reverse wasn't equally applicable.

We assume that one may also be Beat in other artistic manners, but what of those aspirants who are tone-deaf and can't spell? We have to go further.

A cosmopolitan friend told of a summer visit to San Francisco. That town, he said, was the nerve center, the very heart, of Beatdom. He went on to explain that Beat people there are cool, and dig things. "There was one guy who was the coolest. He owned a book store and was never there. Everything was on the honor system"—cold chills ran down our spine—"you know, you may change yourself."

Another friend, this one metropolitan, went to a Beat party during the semester break.

He was greeted at the door: "Are you Beat?"

Reflecting on the past week of exams, he replied, "I'll say. I've got bags under my eyes . . . I need a shave . . . I'm so tired I can't stand up . . . I'm scody as . . ."

"OK. OK. But are you Beat?"

"As I was saying, I had five finals in three days. I studied my . . ."

"If you're Beat you don't have to study."

Somehow our friend gained entrance, and joined in the revelry as much as his tired person would allow. Later, harkening to a call of Nature, he asked directions to the sanitary facilities. He was shown to the door with the explanation, "We ain't got none. You don't do it inside if you're Beat." At which juncture our friend fled the premises.

Which is as far as we've gotten, to date. But we can say this much: if you dig things; if you are honest, artistic, cool; or (which may imply the preceeding qualification) urinate on the back steps; you're either Beat, or should be.

Local Jazz

Frank Crowther

The first in a series of "culture sessions" at Antonio's turned out to be quite a treat for some 150 students last Monday. The event was significant for two reasons: first, it was free, and this in itself was incentive enough to attend; second, there is no other place in Chapel Hill where a non-fraternity student can enjoy "live" jazz. This is not to infer that fraternity and sorority members are barred from attending; to the contrary, Tony Mastrey, the amicable patron, assured me that the only prerequisite is a reservation, since so many people have shown an interest in the current presentations.

Another innovation was the fact that there were really no strings attached to the "free" label. It cost nothing to make the reservation, eating dinner on the premises was not obligatory and no beverages were forced upon anybody during the hour and a half performance. Actually, nothing at all was served during the show and it was "Art for Art's sake" as the bill of fare indicated.

I dropped in at Antonio's before the show on Monday and had a little session of my own with the boss. Harrison Register and the boys were already making with the sounds as we sat down to have a cup of coffee. Tony is a big, balding fellow with a friendly smile and whose soft-spoken voice rather surpised me. He was also very candid in his conversation.

"I used to own a Pizza place in Minneapolis and laid everybody on their ear when I had a jazz combo there. After all, whoever heard of jazz in a Pizza joint?" Well, he had me there, I hadn't. He readily admitted he was in business to make a living just as is everybody else in Chapel Hill, but that he "dug" jazz, actors, writers and the canvas crowd and was therefore planning to do as much as he could for them and for the students as well, giving them a return for their patronage . . . or lack of patronage, for that matter.

As the flip side of the menu says, "Artists are welcome to hang their works—Antonio's is all gallery. Actors are welcome to perform. Writers are invited to write for the Broadside—mail to Antonio's, 104 West Franklin. Musicians are also welcome to play." I imagine that the artists can hang anything but themselves since dead bodies don't mix well with the fine pizza, pasta and other delizioso delights.

The Monday night show consisted of two types of music, not merely jazz: the first part featured folk music by Michael Merbaum and Gill Kushner (besides their musical talents, these two are working on Ph.D's in Psychology and Anthropology, respectively); the second phase was devoted to jazz and consisted of a group headed by guitarist Harrison Register with Kack Anthony handling the vocal end. Gene Parons fell in smoothly as the master of ceremonies. Rather than go into a verbose eulogy, I'll just say that all concerned handled themselves in a professional manner and the warm reception given them by the audience attested to this fact.

The overall program was sponsored by "The University Art League which has as its primary purpose the stimulation of interest in art among students on the campus, and in Chapel Hill generally. Its program involves group shows such as occur at Antonio's, lectures, movies and the annual Sidewalk Art Show in the spring. Other projects depend on the money available in the League's treasury. Membership is open to all students."

We do not have a list of the League's future presentations on campus, but do know of several upcoming events at Antonio's: Poetry and Jazz, Dramatic Readings, Jazz in Concert, Flamenco Guitarists, etc. In addition, there is live music Monday through Friday beginning at 5:30 p.m.

For further information, just drop by and put your name on Antonio's mailing list. If you're interested in the Art League, see Chuck Hoskins (where you'll find him I don't know.) Now, you'll have to excuse me; I have a sudden urge for a pizza with sausage, pepperoni, olives, peppers, anchovies and mushrooms with antipasto and possibly spumoni for a chaser.

The Budget

It is truly wonderful to hear the hue and cry following the announcement of the new budget for the next biennium. For the past few years people have been accepting the mandates of the governor with a equanimity resembling or bettering the stillness at Appomattox.

Apparently the bubble has burst, for in all quarters legislators and other officials are howling for the scalp of the Advisory Budget Commission, and the only question that is left to ask is whether the howl is large enough for the General Assembly, not an ordinarily courageous body, to risk changing it.

If the state is to progress it will need increased taxation, and the failure to increase the tax rate or explore other avenues of taxation can be considered nothing more or less than a patent effort to curry the favor of the voters by pleasing them rather than by telling them the true state of affairs.

The new Hodges budget cannot do what it has set out to do, namely maintain the status quo, for the inflationary period that this country is passing through is going to make the value of the appropriated dollar less and less. The population growth rate is going to make the budget inadequate to meet the needs of an ever expanding public. And in the field of education, exclusive for the time being of higher education, the promise continues for poorly paid teachers and inadequate facilities to meet the demand of an expanding state.

In this latter area the net result will be that competent teachers will go elsewhere and the secondary schools which are quite poor will get worse.

The hue and cry is currently coming from every corner, but the need is greatest in education. It is a faint hope but a possible one that the current legislature will scrap the budget and start afresh. If it does ,it will be doing a service to the people of this state.

The Budget II

The Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations for the University and for higher education in the state in general are a marvel in oversight, for according to the Commission's report it would seem that what they are asking is that the University pay more and more of its expenses from receipts, a thing almost impossible in education.

The Commission recommended a total of $200,000 in increased expenditures on the A budget or the budget of present costs plus additions for increasing population for the next year and another $200.000 for the year afterwards. This figure does not even cover present needs much less future expansion.

It will be hard for the University to attempt to give a quality education unless there are more funds available especially in the fields of faculty development and library additions, both of which areas were shortchanged by the Commissioners.

The future of this University in retaining its positions as the "Harvard of the South is exceedingly bleak, if it has not lost that position already. Perhaps the General Assembly can look to the facts, the reality that education is of primary importance, and change the University appropriation. The prospect of this is not bright.

UP

Apparently John Minter is attempting to set up the University Party meetings so that it can become a truly campus-wide conservative party. This is a sign to be hailed, but it must not be taken as an accomplished fact.

The University Party has too long been dominated by fraternity interests to right itself all at once. It it does it will take both time and effort.

John Minter deserves a pat on the back for his efforts, but the prospects for success are doubtful.

Symposium

It is with great relief and some pleasure that the editor notes the appointment of the eminently capable Richard Robinson as chairman of the Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs. The only regret along this line is that appointment did not come sooner, for the prospect of difficulties to be encountered in procuring speakers has not been dispelled.

The experience of this year's symposium group will no doubt lead to recommendations for the future, a future when in all probability a chairman will be selected in October and real work begun in December. As it is, the promise of a good symposium is still there, and the right man has been chosen to head the group.

Carolina Frosh Lose Fifth Game

Deac Frosh Whip Tar Babies, 96-70

WINSTON-SALEM — The Wake Forest freshmen won the deciding meeting of their three game series with the Carolina frosh as they overpowered the Tar Babies 96-70 here last night.

The loss marked the fifth defeat of the year for the Tar Babies, all five against Big Four competition, as opposed to seven wins.

The win for the Deaclets was their tenth of the season and their sixth straight. The last time that the Wake frosh lost was in Chapel Hill when the Tar Babies registered a 64-60 decision against them.

Compton Paces Deaclets

Coach Charlie Bryant's Deaclets had five players who scored in double figures. Forward Gene Compton paced the Deacon scoring with 21 points for the evening. Compton was followed by Len Chappell who had 26 and guard Billy Packer who dumped in 17.

The Tar Babies could manage to get no more than two men above the 10 point mark for the game. Don Walsh once again led the Carolina attack with 19 and was closely followed by Yogi Poteet who was one point back.

The Carolina frosh made it close for the first ten minutes and after that period held a 29-28 margin. Here the Deaclets began to move, however, and forged into a 45-31 halftime lead. In the final twenty minutes the Wake frosh pushed their margin larger and larger. With five minutes to play the winner held an 83-62 lead, and in the final minutes upped the point spread to 26.

The Scoring

Carolina — Hubbard, 8; O'Bannon, 2; Hudock, 7; Callahan, 1; McComb, 7; Phillips, 8; Poteet, 18; Walsh, 19.

Wake Forest—Loeffler, 10; Compton, 21; Chappell, 20; Packer, 17; Weideman, 12; Davis, 4; McCoy, 4; Bryan, 4; Eggleston, 4.

Relay Team At Philly Meet

Carolina's crack two mile relay team of John Sylvester, Wayne Bishop, Cowles Lilpfert, and All-American Dave Scurlock invades the City of Brotherly Love tonight to run in Philadelphia's Inquirer Games.

Running in the above order, the Tar Heel foursome will battle teams from Manhattan, Syracuse, Villanova, and Brown. Following tonight's meet, they will travel on to New York where, tomorrow night, they will run in the New York Athletic Club Meet.

The top individual times in the 880 for the squad this year are as follows: Sylvester (1:57.5), Bishop (1:55.4); Liipfert (1:56.9), and Scurlock (under 1:52).

Doll Goes With Irish

SOUTH BEND, Ind. —(UP)—Don Doll, who resigned Tuesday as Southern California's assistant football coach, Thursday was named a Notre Dame backfield coach by new Irish Coach Joe Kuharich.

Previously, Kuharich signed Dick Stanfel, Dick Evans, and Bill Daddio, former pro stars, and Hugh Devore, former head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles.

Swimmers Swamp WF By 70-16

WINSTON-SALEM—Five pool records fell here yesterday as Carolina's varsity swimmers bounced back from their only loss of the season and really poured it on Wake Forest, winning 70-16.

It was purely a case of too much power as the Tar Heels swept every first place in every event.

Beginning with the 220-freestyle, the first of the record events, Carolina rolled over the Deacons with ease.

Soph Randy Dodson blazed home with a time of 2:17.4 in the 200-butterfly for another pool record. Bob Hunter set yet another pool record in the 200-backstroke and Harry Bloom got still another in the 440-freestyle.

The last of the five pool records came in the last event, the 400-freestyle relay, with the Carolina team of Brent Nash, Harry Bloom, Jeff Zwicker and Ed Simonton rolling to a time of 3:41.6.

The Carolina record for the season now stands at 7-1, they are 4-0 in the ACC.

Their only loss in 27 meets came last week when Florida beat them 50-36.

In addition to his record in the 440, Bloom won the 50-freestyle as well. The divers swept first and second with Dick Cashwell and Jack Rudy in that order.

Brent Nash was disqualified in the 100-freestyle but teammate Joe Kalkhurst won it anyway.

THE SUMMARY

400-medley relay: Carolina (Hamrick, Douglas, Wrye, Greene) 4:24.4

MURAL TABLE TENNIS

The table tennis tournament will soon be putting forth its new champions for this year.

Last year's defending champions were: Zeta Psi, in the fraternity blue division; DKE, in the fraternity white division; Cobb, from the dormitory, and Law Sch, from the Grad Sch.

This year 55 teams, representing all four divisions, are participating in the tournament, with only 22 in the fraternity blue division. With these figures, it seems to break down into some pretty stiff competition for one and all.

Heck Lecture Features Noted Miami Attorney

PERRY NICHOLS
. . . speaks in Heck Lecture series

A prominent Miami attorney will deliver a speech here Tuesday on the Heck Lecture series sponsored by the UNC Law Students Association.

Attorney Perry Nichols will speak Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the auditorium of the Institute of Government. His topic will be: "The Personal Injury Workshop: From Selection of the Jury through Final Argument."

Nichols will use demonstrations and visual aids throughout the lecture.

LSA President Joseph B. Chambliss will preside at the program. The speaker will be introduced by Robert W. King Jr., chairman of the LSA Speakers Committee.

Nichols' speech will be the fourth event in the 1958-59 Heck Lecture series. This series is supported by a fund endowed by George Heck of Glen Head, N. Y., the oldest living alumnus of the UNC Law School.

Tuesday's speaker limits his practice to trial work and specializes only in the plaintiff's side of personal injury litigation. Nichols is a fellow and director of the International Academy of Trial Lawyers.

In Florida, Nichols was one of four lawyers serving on the Judicial Council of that state. This council re-wrote the section of the Florida Constitution dealing with the courts.

Music Series Concert Stars Faculty Artists

Edgar Alden and William S. Newman of the UNC Music Department faculty will give a recital of three sonatas for violin and piano as the second concert in the semester's Tuesday Evening Series, in Hill Hall Feb. 17, at 8 p.m.

Both men have been teaching at UNC since 1956 and have appeared in concerts together for the past nine years.

For Tuesday's program they have chosen Beethoven's "Spring" Sonata in F Major, OP. 24; Brahms' Sonata in G Major, Op. 78; and Sonata in D Major, Op. 94 by Prokofieff.

Beethoven's sonata, composed in 1800, is one of ten sonatas the composer wrote for violin and piano. Its use of the major key and the sparkling passage work in the last movement account for the title "Der Fruhling," which has been popularly bestowed upon the work in Germany.

Sonata in G Major was composed by Brahams during the summers of 1878-79. Although it is numbered as the first of three sonatas for violin and piano, it is actually the fifth that Brahms composed in that form. He destroyed the first four as being unworthy for preservation. The principal subject in the first and last movements were suggested by the composer's solo song, "Regenlied."

UP Strives To Increase Membership

The University Party, with the policy of "The New Look," has undertaken a drive to get more members, John Minter, party chairman, said Thursday.

Volunteer workers in each dormitory, fraternity and sorority will act as "registrars" to sign up new members, he said. Only Stacy, Grimes and Connor dorms do not have registrars. Minter asked that anyone interested in working in these dorms should contact him, Dick Pattisall or Charles Gray.

The registrars in their respective dorms are the following:

Alexander, Joe Oppenheimer; Avery, Dave Rockwell; Aycock, John Frye; Cobb, Bill Sayers; Everette, Bill Dunn; Graham, Kemal Deen; Joyner, Robert Sherrill; Lewis, William Howland; Mangum, Bob Sevier; Old East, Archie Gleen; Old West, Charles Gongalaz; Parker, Allen Croneburg; Ruffin, David Grigg; Battle-Vance-Pettigrew, John Lipe; Teague, Dick Evans; Winston, Tom Shelton.

In the women's dorms:

Alderman, Eleanor Evans; Carr, Claudia Lipscomb; McIver, Ann Nichols; Smith, Gail Grimes or Nancy Baker; Spencer, Sue Wood; Whitehead, Holly Delfell or Lou Johnson.

Resolution Proposed Limiting Legislature

By DEE DANIELS

A resolution advocating the Student Legislature to go on record as limiting itself from acting in areas better handled by such organizations as the IDC and IFC, renewed an old campus controversy Thursday night.

The resolution was introduced by David Grigg (UP). Much debate has raged around whether the Student Legislature is the supreme legislative body on campus; whether it could pass legislation affecting fraternities and other campus organization. Grigg's bill, limiting the legislature, will probably come in for heated attack at the next meeting.

Jim Crownover introduced a bill proposing the creation of a student Carolina Athletic Council. According to Crownover, such a council would represent student opinion to the Carolina Athletic Association representatives and serve to make campus organization concerned with athletics more effective.

The proposed council would submit a joint budget annually to the Budget Committee for all organizations connected with athletics who receive money from the Student Activity fee.

Norman B. Smith (SP) introduced a bill for John Brooks to appropriate $600 to the UNC Forensic Council to complete its year's program.

A proposal for the establishment of a bad check committee was presented in a bill authored by Gordon Street (UP). The committee would work through the Merchant's Association to notify UNC students of their bad checks. It would in no way be a collection agency.

An amendment to the revised election law was suggested in a bill, introduced by Dave Jones (SP), to nominate the head cheerleader by a selections board.

Officer's Positions Open On GM Activities Board

New officers for the Graham Memorial Activities Board will be chosen by March 1.

Students wishing to apply for either president, vice president or secretary must submit applications to the GMAB office or Information Desk sometime before Friday, Feb. 20.

GMAB President Bob Carter outlined some of the duties connected with each office. The president, he said, coordinates all GMAB committees, represents GMAB on the Graham Memorial Board of Directors, controls all finances and directs the programming for Graham Memorial.

The vice president, who assists the president, acts as a public relations officer. The secretary is chairman of personnel committee and is responsible for all office work.

'Would-Be Gentleman' Next Play Production

James Poteat, of Charlotte, will appear in the starring role of M. Jourdain. Playing opposite him as Mme. Jourdain will be a Raleigh resident, Margaret Starnes.

Russell Graves, visiting professor of dramatic art, will direct the production. Graves has also done the translation from the French and has written music for the show.

A graduate student in dramatic art, John Sneden of Tenafly, N.J., designed the setting. Lighting effects will be executed by Carl Hinrichs.

Tickets for the show will be available for season ticket holders beginning Monday, Feb. 16. General public sales will begin Thurs., Feb. 19, in 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Presbyterians Plan Art Show For Students

Final plans for a Student Art Show are being completed by the Campus Life Committee of the Presbyterian Student Center.

The show will be held April 5-8 in conjuction with a program of lectures and discussions aimed at furthering an understanding of the nature and function of art.

Works exhibited will fall into four categories: oil, black and white, photography and sculpture. Visiting critics, to be announced later, will name first place entries in each of these divisions. Only students of the University will be allowed to enter and are urged to begin on their works at once.

All entries must be submitted to the Presbyterian Church office, second floor of the Y, between March 31 and April 3. A screening committee will select the art work for exhibit.

Prints entered in the photography division must be at least 8 x 11 and have a non-glossy finish.

OPENING

The exhibit will be formally opened to the public at 8 p.m., April 5 and will remain open each afternoon through April 8 from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. at the Presbyterian Student Center, off Rosemary St.

The lecture and discussion programs dealing with art and the works on display will be held April 6 and 7. Winners in the form divisions will be announced at the second of these programs.

Additional information may be obtained from Diane Harmon and Mark Wilson, co-chairmen of the show, or Mrs. Eleanor Brawley, assistant to the minister to students of the Presbyterian Church.

Campus Dress Draws Criticism Of Panel

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

A panel discussion in campus dress was held Thursday afternoon as part of the In-Service Training Program for the staff of the Dean of Women's office.

Mrs. Carter Burns moderated the panel which consisted of Jey Deifell, president of the freshman class; Bob Carter, chairman of GMAB, Paddy Wall, secretary of the Student Body; Janie Walters, member of the legislature; Mrs. E. William Noland and Chancellor Emeritus R. B. House.

DRESS COMFORTABLE

Jey Deifell, the first speaker, said she felt the dress on campus was comfortable, practical and applicable to the students' way of life.

The next speaker was Paddy Wall, speaking for the senior women. She said that she felt that casual dress can be carried too far and gave examples of coeds going to concerts and banquets in bobby socks.

Janie Walters complained that too often the townspeople of Chapel Hill don't set a good example of dress for the students.

She reminded the coeds that companies often interview would-be employes' wives and judge them greatly on their dress.

Mrs. Noland said that to be well dressed one must first be immaculate. She suggested that each person should schedule a certain time for attending to such things as repairing clothing

"Men students really respect girls as to how they dress," said Bob Carter.

BERMUDAS IN CLASSROOM

He objected to bermuda shorts for both men and women and slacks for women in the classroom and said that he felt that the best word to describe the well dressed person was conservative.

Chancellor Emeritus House said, "The one thing that has lasted through my 45 odd years here is simplicity."

He said that he felt the clothes of the day are extremely sensible.

HOUSE ON SLACKS

Giving his opinion on women in slacks, Chancellor House said, "If they are going to wear trousers, I prefer to see them coming rather than going!"

Grant Of $48,000 Serves Two Purposes

A fund of $48,000 which the Woodrow Wilson Foundation granted to the Graduate School here will be used for the twofold purpose of (1) extending some of the 1959 Wilson fellowships through 1960, and (2) supplementing other UNC graduate fellowships in history, philosophy, journalism and botany.

Dean of the Graduate School Dr. Alexander Heard also announced the names of the 24 Woodrow Wilson Fellows who have awards for 1958-59 and will have their terms of study renewed another year contingent upon satisfactory performance.

Dean Heard said $40,000 of the $48,000 will be set up as a fund which will enable the graduate school to renew the appointments through 1959-60 of Wiodrow Wilson Fellows who are recommended by their departments.

The remaining $8,000 will be added to $10,000 from the Alumni Annual Giving Fund and $12,000 from Book Exchange profits to make a total of $30,000 for other graduate scholarship aid. Ten graduate scholarships, each valued at $2,100 plus tution, will use $24,600 of the thirty thousand and the $5,400 left will be used to supplement present scholarships as follows: A Consolidated UNC Scholarship of a Woman's College student; Waddell Scholarships in history, Kenan and Williams Scholarships in philosophy, the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association Scholarship in journalism, and the Coker Scholarship in botany.

Playmakers Win Citation

The Carolina Playmakers and the UNC Department of Dramatic Art have been awarded a special citation from the American Educational Theatre Assn.

Harry E. Davis, acting chairman of the department, made the announcement of the honor from the American Educational Theatre Ass., the largest and most influential national organization in the college, university and community theatre area.

The resolution passed by the membership of the association at its last annual business meeting read:

RESOLUTION

"For long and imaginative dedication to education theatre, for leadership in scholarly investigation and in the recognition and encouragement of native playwrights and drama, for the exploration and extension of theatre conventional and unconventional both on and off their campuses the American Educational Theatre Association expresses its warmest congratulations, its faith in and good wishes for the future to the Carolina Playmakers and the Department of Dramatic Art who, this year, are celebrating forty years of theatre activity at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill."

The progress of the UNC dramatic arts program begin in 1918 when Frederick H. Koch, a teacher dedicated to a belief in the creative powers of young men and women, initiated courses in playwriting and founded the Carolina Playmakers.

Samuel Selden, who had been associated with "Proff" Koch since 1927, became director of the Playmakers after Koch's death in 1944. Harry Davis is presently acting chairman of the department following Selden's resignation at the end of the 1958 fall semester.

COURSES

The department offers a wide choice of courses in ancient and modern dramatic literature, history and technique. The work in practical theatre includes playwriting, acting, directing, scenery construction and painting, stage lighting, costuming, designing, theatre administration and, in co-operation with the UNC Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures, courses in the communication arts.

Since 1918 the Carolina Playmakers have served the purposes of both a dramatic laboratory and a community theatre. Four major productions of old and modern dramas, clasical and popular, and four productions of new scripts, both one-act and full-length, are done each year between September and June by the Carolina Playmakers.

PRODUCTION

The Playmakers have already produced "Oklahoma" and "Look Homeward, Angel" with "The Would-Be Gentleman" (Feb. 25-March 1); "Mrs. McThing" (April 8-12); and "Inherit The Wind" (May 7-9) on tap.

Among the contributions of the Carolina Playmakers has been the development of outdoor historical dramas. The group has provided scripts through its alumni, direction and much of the staff and acting personnel for five of these plays: Paul Green's "The Lost Colony" and "Wilderness Road;" Kermit Hunter's "Unto These Hills," "Forever This Land" and "Horn in the West."

The department draws students for its major programs, both graduate and undergraduate, from nearly every state in the Union. Students have come for training from many foreign countries including Canada, Chile, China, Denmark, Egypt, England, Korea, Mexico, Norway, the Philippines, Thailand, Turkey, Uruguay and Venezuela.

INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Julia Ayers, Sarah Reese, Ellen Smith, Sarah Garvin, Robert Markham, William Ludlam, Charles Avera, George Manasse, Wodie Mikhail and William Thurman.

Budget Commission Leaves Library 11th In Expenditures

By NEIL MURPHY

If the recommendations of the Advisory Budget Commission are followed, Carolina's main library will rank 11th in the South on book expenditures compared to other universities' 1957-58 expenditures.

Carolina requested $177,828 and only $168,828 was recommended to the Legislature by the Commission.

The recommended expenditures requested by UNC before the cuts were made would have placed the University eighth in the south on expenditures for books in the main Library by the '57-'58 figures.

The budget for 1960-61 calls for 175,280 of a requested $183,280, which is still below the request that would place UNC eighth.

NEED $225,000

Jerrold Orne, UNC Librarian said, "It would take $225,000 yearly for us to keep our relative position with respect to Duke and Texas. There is no question about it. Duke and Texas will out spend us greatly. Florida is coming up very fast and stands an excellent chance of stepping into our position."

Florida is presently just below Carolina in expenditures and facilities.

During the year 1957 and 1958, Carolina placed behind both Duke and Texas in the total number of books in the libraries. UNC was 23rd in size and 27th in the amount spent annually on books in the nation.

If the "B" budget recommendations were included and had not been killed by the Advisory Budget Commission, the expenditures would have been approximately $40,000 nearer to the estimates of Orne.

LOSING GROUND

Orne went on to say, "We would be steadily loosing ground if the present figure is held. It would be a shame to backslide from our present position of leadership."

"It is apparent that institutions are becoming increasingly competative in library resources," said Chancellor Aycock.

The University requested $1,

Profs Comment On Carolina's Budget Cuts

By DAVE JONES

"It's a mathematical mistique." "I am reasonably satisfied." "It's a little premature to comment now, wait until the legislature changes it." "It's lacking in courage."

These are some of the comments, taken at random, from answers by members of the History Department when asked to comment on the Governor's Advisory Budget.

Prof. James E. King used the term "mathematical mistique" and said that the trend of covering up deficits and pushing them forward into the next biennium would leave the University without necessary funds to go forward.

King said traditionally North Carolina had been way ahead in education over states that surpassed this state in many other fields. Now the trend seems to balance the scales and put North Carolina back in an educational category that matches other items, King said. No longer will UNC be considered "the best in the South. Our position as the leader was once secure but now we are being challenged by schools like Duke."

"I am reasonably satisfied" was the comment made by Prof. Harold A. Bierck. He said he felt most faculty salaries were high enough at the beginner's level to put UNC in the competitive market when it comes to younger men who might want to move. As for the older, more experienced men he said it is regrettable that experience is not always rewarded.

Bierck is in favor of merit salary increases, and feels that they should be based on teaching, research and general services (committees, advisers).

He said the Advisory Budget commission was working toward a goal of higher student to faculty ratio than at the present. This would mean that classes now with 50 stu-

ON GMAB PUBLICITY COMMITTEE

Belanga, Lucas Named GM Committee Heads

PAUL BELANGA

MISS ANN LUCAS

. . . new GMAB Publicity Committee Heads

In charge of doing all publicity for GMAB, such as news releases, posters, handbills and radio, is the Publicity Committe and its co-chairmen, Paul Belanga and Ann Lucas.

During the fall semester, the committee handled the publicity for such activities as the GMAB free flicks, the Dance Committee's dances and free dance lessons in the Rendezvous Room.

This semester's schedule includes activities such as the Mardi Gras dance, Petite Musical, and publicity for the bridge and chess clubs.

The co-chairmen have announced that anyone interested in working with the committee is invited to come to its meeting Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. in Graham Memorial.

They stated that "No artistic talent is necessary, only an interest in fighting student apathy on campus."

Consolidation

At the heart of the issue of what is to become of the University is another issue that has been plaguing people in the state and locally for several years. Despite the cover-up verbiage of "local autonomy," this issue was at the heart of the fight between the Board of Trustees and the Board of Higher Education. The issue is simply consolidation.

For years this problem has been bothering people in the state with some justification, for it is at the heart of a great deal of confusion. The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill cannot plan independently from the Consolidated University Administration. At the same time it cannot plan independently of the Board of High Education which has authority over all the state supported schools. Indeed, the University Administration locally has little say over its own destiny. At the same time, in a very real sense the Consolidated University Administration is an anachronism. It is based on a false concept that three institutions of greatly different purposes and functions can unite in one overall policy making body. It is at one and the same time too inclusive and too exclusive.

Consolidation is too inclusive in that it does not leave room for local planning on the broad overall scale that is necessary, for the basic underlying decisions are made by the Consolidated officers by the necessity of presenting a united budget, and one might add a united front in supporting the budget. It is also too exclusive for it leaves statewide planning to other sources, namely the trustees of the other institutions and or the Board of Higher Education, and in doing so, the Consolidated University fails to realize that with a rapidly growing population the future of education will depend very greatly on the other institutions of the state. Indeed, any planning that is done from here on must of necessity involve the other schools in the state unless this University wants to be the sponge for the entire populace.

Thus, the Consolidated University structure stands at the present time on a untenable middle ground, and the issue at present isn't whether there should be a Consolidated University or whether there should be a Board of Higher Education. This issue is whether there should be a consolidation of all the institutions under one group or whether each should stake out its own future and take their chances with the General Assembly.

The latter choice is obviously an impossibility, for if each educational institution conceived of itself as a liberal arts college of the highest caliber, the confusion that would be precipitated in Raleigh would be equalled only by the confusion regarding the unreality of the proposed budget for the next biennium.

Clearly there needs to be some planning, not only on the local level, but on the statewide level, so each institution of higher learning can have a function and from within the broad philosophic basis set up by the statewide consolidated authority, the local administration can operate and initiate the necessary policy following up. Obviously, the University at Chapel Hill as the oldest and most respected institution in the state would have some priority in choosing its own destiny, but the smaller institutions of the state would be able to cut out their own niche and gain certain respectability. Moreover, the system might make sense which at the present time it doesn't.

It is evident that a decision of this type regarding consolidation must come before the University at Chapel Hill can decide whether it wants to be a University devoted to giving an education for career training or a community of persons committed to the pursuit of truth. It is also evident that it cannot be both.

Letter From Olympus

At the start of the new semester, we fell to our coffee with a breath of nostalgia. Thoughts and reflections passed through us like soup in a sieve and, as the semester is the beginning of something new, a potpourri of observations fell into place.

January, the start of the new year, is named after Janus, the Roman Keeper of the Heavens. He is a two-faced God, with one face looking forward and another looking backward. But as a representation of the comparison between the old and the new, Janus is forever important.

He sees the walls of fraternity houses and dormitories of recent years, decorated with pictures of "Playboy" darlings, and he sees the walls of today, decorated with pictures of sports-cars, likewise unabashedly undressed. Whereas back issues of "Playboy" used to be worth their weight in gold, today they have been brushed aside in favor of "Motoring America" and the "Sportscar Quarterly." If sociologists and psychologists ever had a problem, they have one now: explaining this strange development in the back to the womb movement.

He sees our conservative town fathers struggling to maintain the spirit and appearance of colonial architecture in the town, and he sees the warehouse, known affectionately as the Ackland Museum, on Columbia Street. By their dogmatism and narrowmindedness they have contributed the sacrifice of what could have been a beautiful building to a rigid and unyielding idea. And they have distributed colonial parking meters at all the hitching posts.

He sees the trend in Student Government proceeding from an attitude of interested participation to one of disinterested drudgery. Student Government has become ineffectual. It has ceased to balance a conservative administration, it has lost the progressive spirit with which it was founded. There is only one thing to do. Revolt! Elect an Emperor. Gain control of the Honor Council and Women's Residence Council. Suspend all non-believers for crimes against the university. What could be more fitting than for a coed to lead the way over the barricades? Provided, of course, it is before eleven o'clock if on a weekday night. We don't need Student Government. Let's throw away the baby with the bathwater.

—C.L.

Letters

Editor:

I have noted with mingled pleasure and dismay Nick Bagdasarian's letter to the Tar Heel complaining that I was withheld from the student body on my recent visit to Chapel Hill.

I am grateful for Mr. Bagdasarian's kind words, but concerned that he blames the School of Business Administration for keeping me hidden away.

The fact is that I arrived on the campus on Friday evening and had to leave on Saturday afternoon. Daring that brief interval we sandwiched in a four-hour seminar with the Executive Group (which was what I had been invited for), a luncheon and a press conference — which was not, so far as I know, restricted in any way. That's all the clock would allow.

The seminar, built around general discussion, would not, of course, have been possible with a large audience.

The fault, if any, is mine, or perhaps that of the disjointed times. It is a tragedy when any man has to cut a visit to Chapel Hill as short as I did.

I think it would be more for the benefit of The Daily Tar Heel as well as its readers if you would, for lack of anything better, put an advertisement in the space alloted to such things as "Student Amorality on the University Level," by Mr. Cortland Edwards II.

Abraham Lincoln and his devotion were the subject of the devotional given by Representative Jim Crownover. He read passages from the Sandburg book on Lincoln's religion and how it affected his dealings with people as a leader. He then drew an analogy between his situation and ours today. The results must have been effective because sober and sincere consideration and discussion was the rule, and not the exception as last week.

Committee reports and appropriations came up like so many ducks at a shooting gallery. They were allowed to slide along toward acceptance or passage without any serious pot shots. These are the routine matters which bore so many people who are not directly concerned with them. It is only occasionally that any government is given an opportunity to decide an issue as sweeping and as vital as the one in Norman Smith's (Ind.) bill call for a "Clear Cut Separation of power in the Legislative, Judicial and Executive Branches of government."

As introduced by Rep. Smith last week the bill called attention to our federal separation of powers system and pointed up situations existing in our present setup whereby Ralph Cummings could hold, as a member of the Legislature elected from Dorm Men's II, and as Speaker under the constitution, two votes on items that would come up one, two, or even three votes from a tie. Fortunately, Cummings saw fit to remedy this situation himself by resigning as a representative of Dorm Men's II at the beginning of his term as Vice President and Speaker.

In another present situation Representative Charlie Gray of Town's Men's I is also Treasurer of the Student Body. There is no duplication of voting power here, but there is an overload on any student who wants to do a good job in office. Charlie Gray concurrs in this opinion, but it is too late now to do anything about him as an individual and his work load.

The rules committee in considering the bill decided to specifically exempt any incumbents from its provisions by making it effective April 7th. They also discussed a problem that was bothering them at the time and to which they could see no solution. That is: what about overlapping between legislative and judicial and overlapping between Judicial and Executive?

Discussion in caucus, where there are less formal rules and a friendlier rapport, brought out a possible solution, i.e. Why not exclude those members of councils who have the power to suspend a student and let everyone of lesser ranking councils be eligible.

Discussion on the floor brought up a solution to the other problem, and an amendment to prevent these same members of the higher councils from holding office as President, Vice President, Treasurer, Attorney General or Secretary. After the acceptance of these changes and the rejection of a proposed amendment which would have excluded everyone who belongs to an organization getting money from the Student Legislature, the bill passed unanimously.

By way of interest, a swearing-in ceremony was held for those new legislators who replaced those resigning last week. Not a one from Avery Dorm in the bunch.

I feel it my bounden duty to all dogs in this area to inform their owners of a most stimulating article in the Feb. 14, 1959 issue of the New Yorker. Entitled appropriately "The American Dog in Crisis," this article discusses the basic insecurity and tendency towards conformity of the modern dog.

Modern dogs are flunking out of obedience schools in fantastic numbers, the article tells us, "as a result of being raised in an overly permissive environment." The dog owner who reads this article aloud to his dog should comfort Rover by explaining that this situation does not exist in dog world alone. Even modern people are flunking out of college due to an overly permissive high school and grammar school education which stresses pasting, coloring, and cutting out; dancing, dramatics, and drivers training.

Since the advent of Dog psychiatrists — and there are such things, I didn't believe it either — it has been found that dogs and puppies are going around with all kinds of neuroses and anxieties which they weren't even aware they had before!

Modern dogs have also been shirking public office lately. This may be due to the fact that they are fed up with the way their masters are handling things. It is brought to our attention that President Eisenhower's weimaraner has left no public impression during his master's years in the White House. Compare the White House Weimaraner's obscurity to the illustrious career of Roosevelt's Falla, who was with F. D. R. on every plane trip, who was mentioned in F. D. R.'s broadcasts:

"My wife Eleanor hates war; my dog Falla hates war; we all hate war . . ."

I have personally noticed some warning signs of "floating anxiety" in my four months old boxer puppy. She drifts restlessly from couch to bed to box. Her ears perk up at the slightest noise—running water, cha cha music, car horns, and other dogs' noises. She bites herself frequently (subconscious punishment of the id?) She hiccups, sighs and wrinkles up her forehead. She has started taking aspirin to relieve this tension. She moves her back legs furiously when she sleeps (the wish-fulfillment in dreams?), probably chasing a rabbit, a squirrel, or a good-looking male dog in her nocturnal fancies. If her personality does not become more stabilized within the next few months, I have told her that—for her own good—I must send her to a dog psychoanalyst so that she can be helped to develop normally into a mature mother of future kennel champions of America. If she keeps on going the ways she is now, who knows? She may become one of those erratic modern artists. Her first paw-painting showed a remarkable talent with colors.

But all is not lost if you, dog owner, cannot afford psychoanalysis for your favorite mutt. The New Yorker article suggests an alternative:

"Confused and uncertain, seeking firm standards in a world of collapsing social values, the American dog looks for guidance to the natural leaders of his race . . ." Like Lassie, on TV.

Or the really interested owner who may shirk at introducing his pup to the evils of TV may just try to set an example himself. This frequently works and is beneficial to both dog and man.

On Education

Sidney Dakar

Everyday we read in the papers about all of the extra students that our universities are going to handle in the future. It seems that there is not encugh money available to build the needed extra classrooms. This is saliently demonstrated by the funds that will be coming to this university in the near future.

We are faced with the same problem that France was faced with years ago. France had a limited amount of money to spend upon education and she wanted to spend it in the most profitable way. The I. Q. test was developed as the only practical solution. Today the only thing necessary to qualify for entrance into one of France's 17 state universities is brains. There is no tuition.

Here in the U. S. we have a mania for college degrees. Everyone has come to feel that it is his "right" to get a degree. Most people only want a degree because of the expected money and added social prestige that it is supposed to bring. However, if the present trend continues, everyone will have a degree and we will be right back where we started from, socially speaking.

Most people, as taxpayers, feel that their sons and daughters must be admitted to the state university. They are admitted because of the obvious political pressures upon state legislators who want to stay in office. Many of the students that are admitted to most universities that do not have very strict entrance exams are unqualified for college. These students struggle along for one or two years until the inexorable day of failure.

These students who fail have been taking up the precious space that could have been very profitably used by the ones who do not fail. The boy who once might have become a happy clerk is now a disillusioned man. After all, he has had two years of college! The citizen's money has been wasted. Society has another frustated man.

The present system of entrance requirements is exactly opposite from what they should be. The state universities should have the highest standards, not the lowest. We should leave the private schools to take in people for social and political reasons. The state university should be reserved for the most brilliant students in the state, and it should be available free of charge. Then the rich and the poor could compete on equal grounds.

There are those who say that it is impossible to judge which students are the most intelligent. They prove this by pointing out exceptions. That is just what they are—exceptions. In the vast majority of cases, the person who makes low on an I.Q. and other tests is not superior in intelligence. Besides, no system is perfect.

The great majority of jobs in the U. S. do not require college training. The people who do not have the brains to get into a selective college can go to the thousands of trade schools that are available, or go to the private universities.

Some states (e. g. New York) have very rigid entrance tests for some of their universities. The tuition is also free for those who have the necessary qualifications. The private universities serve the social elite.

The citizens of North Carolina will one day have to chose between combining a limited amount of money with the best brains in the state or to continue with the present institutionalized mediocrity. To make no choice is a choice.

The Library

It seems inconceivable that the University could recommend to the Advisory Budget Commission a book buying budget that would make the University lose ground in the South.

According to librarian Jerroid Orne, it would take an annual expenditure of $225,000 for the University to keep pace with the other libraries in the South. The trouble is that the University Library is already third and that if the entire University request were granted, the University would slip to fourth behind the University of Florida which has come to the realization that a library is a vital part of the research apparatus of a University.

If the University is ever to reassert itself in the South, then it is necessary for the library to reassert its eminence with respect to the other libraries of the South, to say nothing of the nation. However, the library cannot do this if the University will not request the necessary money, for in any appropriation request there is an expectancy of its being cut, and if the University request is cut the University is only losing ground more rapidly.

Including both A and B budgets, the University request for library book appropriations was less than the amount necessary to keep pace, and the Advisory Budget Commission to compound the crime cut the entire B bduget request and part of the A budget request. The net result is that the University after the next biennium may well rate fifth or lower in amount of volumes in the library.

It would behoove those budget framers both in South Building and in the Consolidated Offices across Franklin St., to start think in terms of how many professors are going to come to an institution whose research facilities are not the best. It would be wise, also, if they began thinking how many serious graduate students are going to come to an institution whose library ranking is low. Above all it would be good if those members of the Advisory Budget Commission who were so smug and contented with the prospect of a neatly balanced budget would look to the future when prospective industrialists and other people will be looking to North Carolina as a future residence, only to find that the educational facilities are second rate.

The University, not too long, ago, held a position of eminence in educational circles throughout the world. In reality, it does not hold that position now and, surely if budgets such as the present one are passed by the state legislature, it will not hold a position of repute in the future. The state cannot continue resting on its laurels, for the tree is dying.

Look Who's Scared!

Apparently the University Party is worried about impending fraternity legislation, for David Grigg's resolution encouraging the Student Legislature not to enact legislation affecting areas covered by the IFC and IDC as long as those organizations continue to "follow the high purposes for which they were created and best serve the interests of those they represent." is an obvious expression of such a worry.

It is clear that Rep. Grigg's particular concern is fraternities since there was no loud howl of objection from Rep. Grigg when a fellow University Party Party member introduced a bill calling for bicycle racks in the dormitories, a bill that would have its proper place in the IDC.

It is further clear that the IDC and IFS have not acted with all these high purposes, and in recent years the IFC has not done a stitch except protect the fraternities from change and arrange the dates, times, and procedures for various fraternity events.

It is even more apparent that it is the responsibility of the legislature to look out for the welfare of the entire campus, and that when local interests and campus wide interest interfere, the legislature, looking out for the whole campus, should take precedence.

The legislature as the Supreme Legislative Authority on the campus has the right to legislate in every field of student endeavor and the bill as it stands is clearly in violation of the student constitution. It would be wise if Rep. Grigg thought again before he introduced legislation so obviously representative of fraternity interests. Remember, Rep. Grigg, you represent Dorm Men's IV.

Why?

The craziest in Women's rules is the one forbidding coeds from taking a bath after 11:30 p.m. on weekdays and half past closing hours on other nights. What happens to that girl who feels dirty at 4 a.m.? Is there no respite until morn?

The Women's Residence Council might remember that everybody isn't compelled to sing in the bathtub and disturb other coeds.

Executives To Hear Hayek

Friedrich A. Hayek, social economist who wrote the best-selling book, "The Road to Serfdom," will speak before the Executive Program here this weekend.

Hayek, a native of Austria and a naturalized British subject, is professor of social and moral science at the University of Chicago.

Business executives who participate in the advanced management program of the UNC School of Business Administration will hear Hayek speak Saturday morning on "Freedom and Progress."

Professor Hayek will be one of the guest lecturers in the "Great Ideas" series offered each year to The Executive Program members. Prof. Willard Graham directs the program, now in its sixth year.

Before joining the Chicago faculty in 1950, Professor Hayek held the Tooke Professorship in economic science and statistics at the University of London for 18 years. Earlier he had directed the Austrian Institute of Economic Research and had lectured at the University of Vienna.

His books include "The Counter-Revolution of Science," "The Sensory Order," and "Capitalism and The Historians."

Foreign Policy Of America Lecture Topic

"The revolution in American foreign Policy" was the topic of Dr. Dexter Perkins' address to Phi Alpha Theta fraternity members and the History Graduates Club this week.

Dr. Perkins was visiting Carolina to study the program of graduate study offered here. He is traveling for the American Historical Association's Committee on Graduate Study. Friday he went to Duke University to study the program there.

The lecture, given to about 30 persons in 106 Hanes, covered the sudden change from a pilicy of isolationism by the United States government to a policy of world alliances. He pointed out that this change occurred around 1939. Dr. Perkins, professor emeritus of history at Cornell University, is considered an authority on the Monroe Doctrine.

Dr. Perkins is a past president of the American Historical Association, an honor considered highest of its kind that can be afforded to an American historian.

Budget Lacks Courage

dents could conceivably hold 10 times that number, objective quizzes devised and the same results obtained; that is, divide the students into five general grade categories.

"It's lacking in courage . . ." began Prof. C. O. Cathey. "It is putting off at least two years a raise in taxes that is necessary even to maintain present services. There has to be an increase in taxes. It is highly unrealistic for the state to neglect collecting taxes on such items as tobacco, and many items now exempt from sales taxes."

By not increasing taxes and spending, Cathey continued, "We have put off for two years the 'Go Forward' plans of Kerr Scott. I liked Kerr Scott . . . he had guts, and this thing is gutless. Kerr Scott had a lot of courage and ambition for this state and confidence in it's future—we ought to quit being so cautious and go ahead.

"You, as a student, won't like what I am going to say next, but I feel we ought to raise tuition while we are raising other selection requirements. Compare the $800 they charge at Duke for a student whose home is within the shadow of the chapel with our $150. They make no pretense of saying that $800 covers the costs of educating their students."

Professor Cathey also pointed to the area of educator's salaries which "have lagged behind those of the plumbers, electricians, carpenters, janitors and professionally trained people.

"I am hopeful that leadership in the Legislature will arise that is dissatisfied with the hold-the-line concept and seek out some additional sources of revenue to increase salaries."

Another area of budget neglect, he said, was that of Student activities. "The B budget was short a Student Union and a gymnasium while State and WC and every small college in the area has better provisions. These two items should have high priority."

When asked specifically about the History Department, he said he was "Anxious to see these 1890 seating accommodations discarded and adequate and modern seating installed. This item was an important one in our request. It was originally around 84 thousand dollars and dropped to around 19 thousand."

In regards to salaries, Dr. Cathey said that UNC's History Department was pretty competitive in the instructor, assistant and associate professor brackets, but that in the professorial rank" those with whom we want to compete have pushed salaries out of our class."

Clifford Foust, assistant professor, said, "It is a bit premature to comment, because there is a lot to be decided before the budget is passed." He felt that increases in the lower History Department brackets were not needed, but "in higher brackets—this is where the real competition should be—we should offer salaries of $15,000 and up to stay in the academic major leagues."

SPEAKER—E. B. Whitten, executive director, National Rehabilitation Association of Washington, D. C., is one of a number of nationally known speakers who will lecture at here Feb. 27-28. Whitten will speak in connection with the fourth annual North Carolina Conference on Handicapped Children, which will be held at Memorial Hospital. The entire program is open to the public and all interested persons are invited to attend. Whitten will speak at 2 p.m. on Friday, Feb. 27.

Library Staff Raises Out In Budget

233,918 and received $1,196,444 as recommended by the Advisory Commission. The cuts ammounted to $37,474 for the main Library.

President Friday said, "The administration has spent some time studying the budget and needs several days more to decide what course of action will be followed."

NO SALARY RAISES

Library academic staff salaries were not raised in the library's budget. President Friday indicated that all salary increases at the University at Chapel Hill were lumped and distributions would be made within the University.

Presently $192,032 is being spent on Library Academic Salaries. In 1959-60, $196,532 was requested and $201,032 was asked for the years 1960-61.

"It is clear to me that more students are using the library this year," said Assistant to the Head Librarian, Olan V. Cook.

Battered Tar Heels Take On Loyola In Chicago Tonight

Riot Being Investigated

GREENSBORO, — (AP) — Atlantic Coast Conference commissioner Jim Weaver Friday was investigating the fight between players, students and fans which interrupted the basketball game between Carolina and Wake Forest at Winston Thursday night

The Tar Heels, unbeaten in conference play and ranked No. 2 in the national polls, won the game 75-66

With 30 seconds remaining to be played, Carolina leading 75-64, a scuffle between several of the players resulted in a fight which drew students and fans from the stands.

"I couldn't possibly do or say anything," stated commissioner Weaver, "until I have studied the pictures of the game and the incident, until I have talked with both officials and until I have discussed the matter in detail with both institutions. Chuck Erickson, the Athletic Director at the Carolina, left early this morning for Chicago and will not return until Monday, I have been told."

Seeking 10th Straight; Tip-Off Set For 8:45

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's battered Tar Heels will be gunning for three things in Chicago tonight when they meet Loyola's Ramblers at 8:45 our time:

1—They will be looking for their 10th consecutive victory, 2—They will be shooting for a 16-1 overall record, and 3—They will be seeking national prestige and the number one ranking in the nation.

The Heels disposed of Wake Forest 75-66 Thursday night, but were lucky to escape with their lives as a mass riot broke out in the closing seconds of the game. Nobody was seriously injured, but most of the players were banged up.

The game tonight is the first part of a basketball doubleheader. Kentucky will meet Notre Dame in the second game.

The opening tip-off is scheduled for 7:45 Chicago time which makes it an hour later our time. The game will be on WPTF radio.

Averaging 73 Per Game

Carolina takes a good-shooting, well balanced team into Chicago to face the Ramblers. The Tar Heels as a team are averaging 73 points per game, and all five starters are averaging in double figures.

Loyola has come on strongly recently after a poor start. The Ramblers are 8-9 record-wise, but they own a victory over high-ranking St. John's who they beat easily by 10 points.

The only mutual foe the two teams have is Notre Dame, who was defeated by both.

Carolina and Loyola have met only once previously, and the Ramblers won that one.

Lead ACC

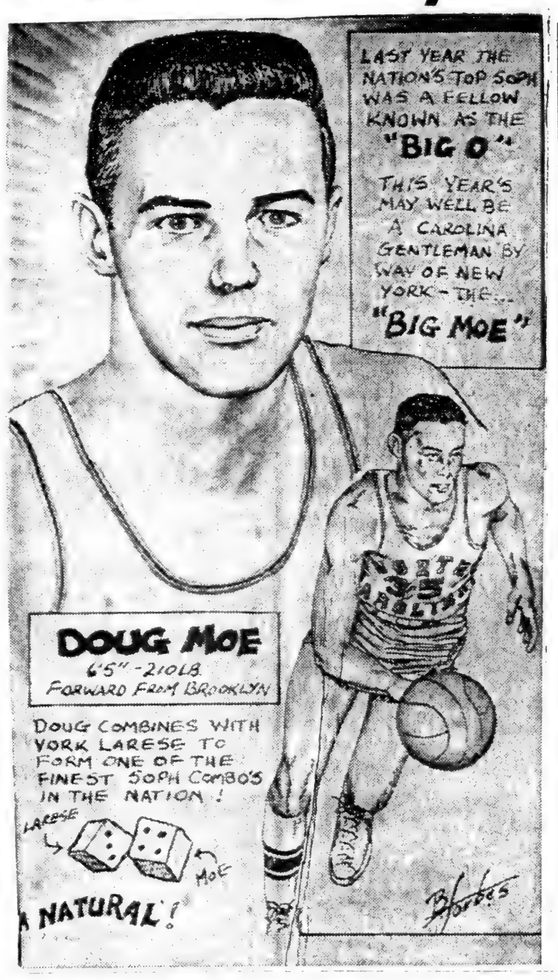
The Carolinians presently sit at the top of the heap in the rugged ACC, having an undefeated 10-0 conference record. They have beaten two of the number one teams in the nation—N. C. State and Cincinnati.

Since Kentucky fell again last week, Carolina, number two last week, stands an excellent chance of climbing to the pinnacle next week if they can get by Loyola tonight.

The Tar Heels will be led by sophomore greats York Larese and Doug Moe, each averaging above 13 points per game. Other starters will probably be Lee Shaffer, Dick Kepley and Harvey Salz.

The sixth man, Captain Danny Lotz, will be available along with top subs Ray Stanley, Lou Brown and Hugh Donahue.

Loyola is expected to start Al Norville, Paul Sheedy, Jim Gorman, Rin Schwingen and Tom O'Connor.



WAA Basketball

Faye Williams was elected Chairman of the WAA Basketball Club at its last meeting. The club's team will play other schools in this area, including Duke and East Carolina College, and shows great promise for the upcoming season.

The Basketball Club meets regularly each Tuesday from 3:30 to 5:00 and holds practice sessions. All interested women students are encouraged to join and participate in the club's activities.

Matmen To Battle Duke

By JOHN JUSTICE

The UNC matmen will be seeking to even their season's record Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock when they invade the Duke Blue Devil squad. As of now the Tar Heel grapplers are holding a 3-4 won lost record. The Duke team has won only one out of three contests prior to today's match. The Tar Babies hope to better their 3-3 record.

UNC Won Last Year

Last year, in the meeting of the two varsity teams, UNC won for the first time in ten years. A showdown match is probable in the 137 lb. class, with Perrin Henderson, the undefeated captain of the Carolina club, meeting Ken Labone, the leader of the Duke team and also undefeated.

The lineups:

Varsity: Curt Champlin, 123 lb.; Henry Rhyne, 130 lb.; Perrin Henderson, 137 lb.; Joe Perrini, 147 lb.; Ray Russell, 157 lb.; David Atkinson, 167 lb.; John Matney, 177 lb.; Gordon Hurley, heavyweight.

'Challenge To South' Is Subject For Hays

Former representative Brooks Hays of Arkansas will speak in Hill Hall at 8 p.m. Monday, sponsored by the local YM-YWCA.

BROOKS HAYS
. . . in Hill Hall Monday

Hays' topic will be "The Challenge to the South."

Defeated in a write-in vote in Arkansas over the school segregation issue, Hays is a foremost moderate. He is author of a book to be published by the UNC Press in March, entitled "A Southern Moderate Speaks."

Presiding at the speech Monday night will be Betty Kaye Johnson, co-chairman of the Y's Program Committee. Randy Shelton, president of the YMCA, will introduce the former congressman.

Hays is a well known churchman and in 1951 received the annual Layman's Award from ministers in Washington for outstanding service. He has served as chairman of the Christian Life Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention. His current position is president of the Convention for the second consecutive term.

With an active interest in education, Hays at present is a member of the governing boards of George Peabody College for Teachers in Nashville, Tenn., and George Washington University. In addition, he is a member of the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America.

Hays is also a member of Phi Beta Kappa honorary fraternity and Sigma Chi fraternity.

Honor Council Ousts Eight In 5 Months

Eight Carolina students have been suspended from school by the Men's Honor Council in a period from Oct. 7, 1958, to Feb. 7, 1959.

Hugh Patterson, council chairman, released a report last week of the total number of cases brought before the council and of the verdict handed down.

All cases during the four-month period were held using the new jury system which was incorported into the Trial procedure last spring.

Of 27 cases before the Men's Honor Council from Oct. 7 to Feb 7, 8 students were suspended, 13 were acquited, 3 were given reprimands, 12 were placed on probation and 1 student was placed on bad check probation.

These figures compare with the following decisions made in 43 cases during a similar period of time a year ago: 9 students were suspended between Oct. 5, 1957 and Feb. 7, 1958; 7 were acquited, 2 were given reprimands and 25 were placed on probation.

In releasing these figures, Patterson said students have wrongly believed that the Men's Honor Council suspends many students each year. "The actual figures indicate that this is far from true," he said.

Student Party Starts Nominations Monday

Districts for which candidates will be selected are Dorm Men's I and VI, Town Men's I, II, III and IV. The party will also decide whether to approve any candidates for the presidency of the Carolina Athletic Association and the Women's Athletic Association.

One seat in the Legislature recently vacated by Mike Shulman in Dorm Men's III remains to be filled by appointment. The party will also select a nominee for this post Monday night.

Other matters for discussion will be bills currently pending in the Legislature.

One Will Graduate In Physical Therapy

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

One of the youngest sections in the curriculum at UNC is the Section of Physical Therapy in the School of Medicine. Established in 1957, it will graduate only one senior, Shirley Cloninger, this spring with a B.S. degree in physical therapy.

There are presently 20 students in physical therapy on campus. Besides, Miss Cloninger there are four juniors and the rest are freshmen and sophomores.

Being enrolled in the General College for the first two years does not mean that students automatically will be accepted into the Physical Therapy section for their last two years. The junior class is being limited to 12 students this year.

Students enrolled in physical therapy work and practice in the clinic during their junior and senior years, in addition to regular classes.

Directing the physical therapy program here in Miss Margaret Moore.

The summer after physical therapy majors graduate they can become affiliated with such places as Warm Springs, Ga., and the Cerebral Palsy Hospital in Durham during the summer so as to become certified physical therapists.

Gov. Luther H. Hodges has designated Feb. 16-21 as State Physical Therapy Week to familiarise physicians with the state's physical therapy facilities and to develop an interest in this field.

In connection with the observance, a half hour program on this branch of medical science will be carried on WUNC-TV Monday at 8 p.m.

Physical therapy is one of the medical profession's most rapidly developing allies. Since World War II, the number of physical therapists has grown from 2,000 to an estimated 7,800.

A physical therapist gives specialized types of treatment prescribed by the physician which employs physical agents, such as heat, cold, light, water, electriciy, massage and exercise for injury and disease.

In the rehabilitation of the severely disabled, it plays an important part in aiding the handicapped to acquire physical, occupational and social independence.

Sophomore Scholarships Idea Grows

The freshman class will join the sophomore and junior classes in a statewide scholarship solicitation program, junior class President Wade Smith and sophomore class President Davis Young announced Saturday.

In a meeting Thursday night, the Freshman Cabinet voted to endorse the project. Freshman President Jey Deifel made it clear at that time, however, that his class will continue to work on their own projects in the future, as well as to join the sophomores and juniors on theirs.

On Friday afternoon, the officers of the three classes met for the first time as a unit and divided up the work into several small subcommittees. The work of these groups will come under the supervision of Deifel, Young and Smith, acting as a three man guiding force.

Later that afternoon, Young and Smith met with Chancellor William Aycock in his office and discussed the proposed program with him. The chancellor gave his approval to the project and consented for his name to be used as one of those that will be on the state committee.

This week, another series of meetings will follow. Efforts are being made now for Deifel, Young and Smith to meet with Gov. Luther Hodges in Raleigh.

The officers of the three classes will work as one group on this project. Generally, the sub-committees are all formed with one member of each class on each committee.

Young pointed out that one of the great needs at this time is for the officers to find office space. He said, "We are looking for some room or rooms on this campus with typewriters and files, for the purpose of converting them into a headquarters for the fund raising campaign. We are hopeful of having something for this by the end of the week."

The presidents of the three lower classes still would give no indication of whom the scholarship is being named for, preferring to meet with the family of the person before announcement is made.

It is anticipated that this name will be disclosed to The Daily Tar Heel as well as the state papers in one to two weeks.

The group is now preparing the preliminary plans for a handbook to be used in publicizing the program. They further reported that they are pleased with the response from the many officials they have talked with to date.

Study Groups Begin At Presbyterian Hut

Spring semester study groups will get underway at the Presbyterian Hut this week.

The day and time for seven workshops will be set tonight after the Westminster Fellowship program at the convenience of students who sign up for the groups.

The proposed seven workshops include: Bible Study, Christian and Nuclear Warfare, Graduate Study Group, Nature and Mission of the Church, Christian Questions in Modern Novels and Plays, Worship Workshop and Basic Christian Beliefs, and Nature of Man Seminar.

Orientation Unit Needs Members

Now's the time for all good men and coeds to come to the aid of Orientation Chairman David Parker.

Parker, who was named Orientation Chairman last week, is looking for members of the Orientation Committee. The committee will include such offices as men's coordinator, women's coordinator, secretary and treasurer. This committee is in overall charge of planning orientation for new students in the fall.

Orientation counselors will be selected later this semester.

Applications for the Orientation Committee will be received this week. Application forms are available in the student government office.

Interviews for committee members will be conducted Feb. 23-26.

To Receive Radium Therapy; Takes Leave Of Absence

WASHINGTON — (AP) — John Foster Dulles has cancer of undetermined extent. But he will continue as Secretary of State on leave of absence while undergoing treatment.

President Eisenhower made this announcement yesterday after visiting Dulles at Walter Reed Army Hospital.

A medical bulletin issued along with the President's announcement ruled out any immediate surgery. It said that "In the immediate future radiation therapy will be used."

The disclosure, based on laboratory tests, came about 27 hours after Dulles was operated on for a groin hernia. The operation was performed by the hospital commandant, Maj. Gen. Leonard D. Heaton, who removed a cancerous portion of Dulles' colon two years ago.

State Department Press Officer Lincoln White told newsmen doctors informed Dulles has had cancer about 9 a.m. (EST.) White said Eisenhower and Dulles' family were notified about the same time.

The news evoked expressions of regret and concern from this capital and around the world.

It also threw awry the Allies' timetable of negotiations on Soviet efforts to oust western troops from Berlin.

And it spurred speculation on a possible successor to Dulles, who will be 71 in 10 days.

Mrs. Anne Wheaton, associate White House Press Secretary, indicated in response to a question the leave of absence statement meant there will be no appointment of a new Secretary of State at this time.

Tissue and fluid removed during Saturday's hernia operation were found to be cancerous. The medical bulletin put it this way:

"A small nodular implant on the hernia sac was removed with the excess sac during the course of the operative procedure.

"The fluid evacuated at surgery contained free cancer cells on cytological examination.

"No further surgery is contemplated. In the immediate future, radiation therapy will be used."

Eisenhower issued the announcement through aides at Walter Reed after visiting Dulles for 37 minutes.

It was during that visit, he said, that doctors discussed "the existence of malignancy not fully determined at this time as to its extent but certain to require further treatment."

The President added:

"I express the thoughts and prayers of all of us that the results of his operation and the further course of treatment will be successful. In order to allow time for this purpose, the secretary continues on leave of absence I will,

LOOKING BACKWARD

More Profs Rap Budget

By DAVE JONES

"It makes the tonstand weader want to fwow up," is not a proof reader's error, rather it is a quotation from Dorothy Parker. It means "It makes the constant reader want to throw up," and it was one of many comments from members of the Romance Language Department when asked about the advisory budget for 1959-61.

Prof. A. G. Engstrom said that he felt that Dorothy Parker's comment on one of H. L. Mencken's works which included some baby talk, was the best expression of his opinion on the advisory budget's work.

Prof. N. B. Adams said, "I feel it is most unfortunate and short sighted. The University has a tremendously good reputation throughout the country and this budget doesn't live up to that obligation. The budgeteers seem to expect more from us than they are willing to pay for."

Prof. Fletcher Green, Kenan professor of history commented: "I am terribly dissappointed in the cutting. Instead of looking forward, they are looking backward.' When asked for more details Professor Green said that he hadn't had time to study it enough to make specific comments.

"If you are interested in doing things on an intellectual level you have to spend money," said one of the professors in the French Department. "To me," he continued, "the most dramatic, concrete example of this is the library's cuts. I can only hope that the members of the Legislature are more aware and less shortsighted than our governor."

A graduate instructor in the French Department said: "I am afraid I must plead the fifth amendment." When asked for his opinion on the budget. He expressed some doubt as to whether he should speak out since he was not a full time member of the faculty.

Professors Frank Duffey, Lawrence Sharpe and William A. McKnight declined to comment because they felt that they hadn't had an opportunity to study the budget carefully and didn't know anything about specifics.

A graduate instructor in the Spanish Department expressed his concern over the building of a new "Flip Top" stadium in Raleigh when UNC need funds for improvements here so badly. He also said that with the library's cuts there would be no new books available to fill up all of the space that was vacated by the books that were on sale. "Of course the library is well provided for with janitorial help, but that doesn't advance the most important center of new intellectual thought on this campus."

Prof. U. T. Holmes said that since UNC is anticipating "increased registration, the staff must be improved and you just can't do that without research resources, books, materials and assistants, and the Hodges' budget does nothing for those things. Professors aren't just teachers, they have to have something else. A good library is important in the scheme of things, but our book budget is lower than that of our competitors and we have lots of competition.

Dr. Dobbie Kicks Off On Statistics Talks

The first of a series of talks on applications of statistics and operations research methods will be given by Dr. James M. Dobbie Monday at 4 p.m., Room 206, Phillips Hall. The talks are sponsored by the Department of Statistics.

Dr. Dobbie is a senior scientist of the Operations Evaluatiin Group. This group does operations research for the Chief of Naval Operations through contract with MIT. The title of his talk is "The Allocation of a Fixed Effort Among Several Deterrent Systems."

The problem which will be discussed is one of considering how the United States could retaliate most effectively if war should be initiated by an enemy.

All interested persons have been invited to attend.

The program will include: the Beethoven Clarinet Trio, the Dvorak Trio for violin, 'cello and piano; Guiseppe Sammartini's Sonata, Opus 3, No. 9 for violin, 'cello, clarinet and piano, and Johann Stamitz' Orchestra Trio, Opus 1, No. 5.

In addition, two movements from Trio 1957, written by Dr. Klenz, will be performed.

Other Petites Musicales scheduled for this semester are: pianist Alexander Fiorillo, Feb. 22; pianist Dr. Wolfgang Fetsch and tenor John Hickfang, March 15; the Pasquier Trio, March 24; chamber music recital, April 5, and the one-act opera, "Whatever Passes Along the Paths of the Sea" by Thomas Rice and Russell Link, later this semester.

Russell Link is in charge of Petites Musicales programs.

Radio, TV Stations Offer Scholarships

The owners of WBT, WBTV and WBTW are offering two scholarships through the Jefferson Standard Foundation to students entering college in the fall of 1959 who plan to work toward a bachelor of arts degree in radio, television and motion pictures or a bachelor of science degree in electrical engineering.

Winners may elect to study electrical engineering at State College in Raleigh or creative production in the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures at UNC.

Each scholarship is for four years or such time as is required for the winner to complete his or her bachelor of arts degree. The annual value of each scholarship is $625.

The WBT-WBTV-WBTW scholarships were established six years ago under the auspices of the Jefferson Standard Foundation as an investment for the Carolinas in top-flight people for the radio and television industry of the future.

Why?

There still is a simple question to be answered. Why did the University recommend only $177,000 for book buying funds when they must have been aware that $225,000 were needed to keep the University where it is now — third in the South?

There are a few people around who are able to remember when the University's Library was first, and they probably have been asking the question for years.

It is nice to know that the University's leaders are watching idly by while the University library sinks to a point, by their own request, eighth in the South. It makes one feel so much more comfortable about the University's future.

Blank Spaces

When one opens the books showing the recommended budgets as handed down by the Advisory Budget Commission, there are three columns running vertically down the page. The first column tells what was received in 1957-59 biennium under the item. The second column tells what was requested in the 1959-61 biennium, while the third shows what the Advisory Budget Committee recommended.

If one will turn in the "B" budget volume to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, one could read a full middle column and two blank columns running for over three or four pages with only two breaks, exceedingly small ones, in the entire University request.

One would think that the administrators would have been howling by now, not only about the cuts the Universrity suffered, but just about the monotonous evesore.

But from the oldest building on campus nothing but silence.

Budget Sidelight

One of the most unfortunate and ironical twists of the budget concerned the state art museum.

For many years as a private citizen Robert Lee Humber fought successfully for the establishment of a state art museum. However, after being elected a State Senator from Pitt County, Sen. Humber found that the provision for his art museum was completely stricken from the budget by the Advisory Budget Commission. Maybe he will join the the Hodges' budget, and perhaps the state can get a decent educational system and a valuable art collection.

Top in the news this week was the announcement that Secretary of State John Foster Dulles was to undergo a hernia operation. Friday reports from Washington stated the operation was a success. The doctors declined to say whether they found any signs of cancer. Lincoln White, State Department Press Chief, said he assumed the doctors wanted to be absolutely certain before making public their findings. He said the laboratory examination was a precaution in view of Dulles' previous history of cancer.

Dulles, who will be 71 on Feb. 25, was operated on at Walter Reed No. 3, 1956, for removal of a cancerous portion of his lower intestine.

The State Department, meanwhile, announced that Secretary Christian A. Herter would return from his South Carolina vacation to take over Dulles' post until his recovery. Under Secretary C. Douglas Dillon had been acting secretary.

Earlier in the week Secretary Dulles hinted that the West may make some slight conciliatory move toward the Soviets on Germany.

But German and American spokesmen indicated the move will be well-hedged. The indication of this was contained in the phrase—no concessions without Soviet concessions.

A German spokesman quoted West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer as saying firmly that he was against the kind of flexibility that means giving something away in return. This kind of bargaining, he said, would only encourage the Soviets to make more greedy demands.

"These talks," he said, "will help to assure that we shall be united and firm for our rights.

A few days later came the report that a new Western formula for a Big Four foreign ministers conference about Germany would provide for including German representatives as advisers.

This action would open the way for possible compromise with Russia or German participation.

Both State Department and White House informants said Secretary Dulles would provide the guide lines for U. S. policy except for the few days during his operation.

Closer to home came more echos of the segregation issue. In Charlotte and Greensboro two desegregation suits were filed. Negro parents asked federal district courts for permanent injunctions against racial segregation.

The plaintiffs in Charlotte set out that, "This cause of action is for the purpose of having these officials desegregate the public schools of Mecklenburg County in compliance with Supreme Court decree."

The target in Greensboro was the Greensboro city school system. The allegations in that action closely parallel those in the Mecklenburg suit.

Nor were Charlotte and Greensboro the only places to hear from the education field. In Greene County only two school buses ran on schedule Tuesday. The students and bus drivers boycotted the Green County Training School in an effort to obtain better school facilities.

Governor Luther H. Hodges said Friday that there is "much evidence" the NAACP was involved in "part of the agitation' centering around the strike.

Negro parents and pupils had voted Wednesday night to continue a boycott until the school board meets their demand for improved facilities.

Board members indicated they were willing to ask the board of County Commissioners to call an election on a bond issue to provide funds for the needed facilities.

A state budget of more than a billion dollars for the next two years was proposed by Gov. Luther Hodges Monday. This budget is aimed mainly at keeping state service in line with population growth.

In this budget message to the General Assembly, the governor asked for no new taxes, but recommended a withholding or "pay-as-you-go" plan for collecting state income taxes. He hinted that new taxes may be needed later to finance an incentive fund to encourage supplementary support of public schools.

The budget calls for $1,214,925,934 in spending during the 1959-61 biennium. That's 22 million less than in the current two-year period, but the drop is due to a cut in federal aid, mainly for interstate highways. Actual spending from the general fund, covering most non-highway agencies would go up 50½ million dollars or 10 per cent.

Nature went on another rampage this week with a tornado and flood. The tornado caught St. Louis asleep Tuesday and left a patchwork of death and destruction in the pre-dawn.

Nineteen persons were known dead and almost 300 others were injured. It was the city's worst tornado in 32 years.

President Eisenhower desinated the tornado-lashed St. Louis region as a major disaster area eligible for federal relief aid.

On the Wabash River surging floodwaters bore down on West Terre Haute, Ind., Thursday and National Guardsmen joined in a sandbagging battle to reinforce a 300-foot break in the town's levee.

In adjoining Ohio, an ice jam in the Maumee River let go and sent four to seven feet of water through the streets of Grand Rapids, a village with 1,000 population, near Toledo. The massive chunks of ice broke windows and drove 130 persons from their homes.

From Switzerland came the announcement Wednesday that Greece and Turkey had agreed on a constitution designed to give independence and peace to the British-ruled island of Cyprus.

Their plan for a republic of Cyprus won the eagerly awaited blessing of the British-exiled Greek Orthodox Primate of Cyprus, Archbishop Makarias.

The immediate hope is to end the nearly four years of bloodshed in triangular battles among British Greek and Turkish forces and guerrillas.

If all goes well the rival Cypriat communities of Greek and Turk origin may live side by side in peace, sharing responsibilities, but keeping their communal identities.

Congress was held in complete silence this week as Carl Sandburg paid tribute to Abraham Lincoln with a reading of his poetry.

"Don't Look Now But I Think We're Being Followed"

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

What an utterly delightful concert the Symphonic Wind Ensemble gave us last Friday evening in Hill Hall. In a wide-ranging program that included the American composers Vincent Persichetti and Samuel Barber as well as such unknowns as Kalinikov and Vincent Bach (I gather no relation to the German organist by that name), the more-than-able orchestra under the competent leadership of Herbert Fred played with enthusiasm controlled by almost professional precision and care.

After a loud and fast "American Overture" by Joseph Wilcox Jenkins that gave one the chance to adjust the ear to say the least, overwhelming sound of the ensemble, the group presented the most challenging work of the evening, a Symphony for Band by Vincent Persichetti. The work struck me as particularly interesting either in composition or in instrumentation and orchestration. Perhaps the major fault of the work is that both these aspects do not work well together and appear separately as musical virtues throughout the work, but nevertheless, it is a work of finished musical conception. The first movement begins with an interesting Adagio which serves to introduce a more complicated Allegro that follows. Here the main virtue of the music was for me the fascinating use of the brass and percussion instruments which was severely complex in interplay, texture, and effect. Compositionally, the music was quite empty of melodic material or development. The next movement, a hymn-like theme with more simple rhythms than the first movement, was quite beautiful in melody and melodic feeling. Here, the composer disregards the use of instrumentation to a large degree. The third movement had some particularly interesting transition music which with its sequential progression reminded strongly of the early work of Aaron Copeland. The last movement depended primarily on rhythm patterns and rhythmic shock for its effect, but here again instrumentation and orchestration filled out the main musical content of the composer. In all, this seems to me an important work, not so much in its musical message but in its truly musical brilliance. The performance was adequate, especially if we realize that the young players had a very difficult task to handle: Persichetti's rhythms are highly complex and so are his orchestral interplay and ensemble. Special praise should go to tympany player Robert Wilkinson and the other members of the percussion section, all of whom did a remarkable job. Of course to the conductor must go our highest praise, for it is a truly herculean job to hold all instruments, rhythms and tempos under firm control.

The Earl Slocum arrangement of the Marriage of Figaro Overture, conducted by the arranger in a breakneck speed, will certainly not please the purists. My objection is not with his arrangement, but the use of the "heavier" instruments in his score; trombones and sousaphones add too much weight to the entire orchestral vehicle and will prevent that special kind of Mozartian flight.

The work that followed was a march by Samuel Barber which astonished me with its originality and sophistication. It is work that should be heard more often.

After intermission we heard a ridiculous piece of a symphony by Kalinnikov who, I was informed, is a contemporary of Tchaikovsky. And as far as his music goes, there is where the relation between the two composers ends. Mr. Gordon A. Finlay of the United States Navy Band played a pleasant Hungarian Melodies by Vincent Bach. This work has neither anything to do with the German Baroque or the Hungarian Melody, but Mr. Finlay's cornet sounded downright sweet as the music tumbled gracelessly trom soulless melodies into virtuostic display. In both of these Mr. Finlay was in full control. Incidentally, of the two most awful encores that he played, the second, "El Matador" should be immediately burried again in the sand of some forgotten bull ring, the first will wither up all by itself.

The concert ended with "Tulsa, A Portarait in Oil" of Don Gilbs, a work full of French horn open spaces, oboe loneliness, clarinet bubbling oil, snatches stolen from Gershwin and Copeland, dissonant cowboy Angst, and woodblock horses on the march. The orchestra played it with gusto and fun. Shostakovitch mock Polka was a perfect encore.

In the first half of the program, the ensemble sounded both impressive and quite delightful in their playing of the modern Classical music, while in the second half, they again showed that music can also be full of the nonsense of sentiment, humor, and fake portrait painting; but never mind, they knew what they were doing and treated each in their own place. We owe them thanks for doing both.

Letters

Editor:

Coed leaders have been patiently waiting for the latest attack upon Women's Residence Council, Honor Council, and women's committees to subside. Answering incensed writers can sometimes only add fuel to the fire; however, I feel the time has come when misrepresentation has become so prevalent that replies must come forth from the women of the campus.

With one exception, the recent attacks on page two of the Tar Heel have come solely from male students. This could indicate that Carolina coeds are quite willing to sit idly, watching while their freedom is destroyed. I don't believe that it does.

The coed viewpoint on women's rules undoubtedly differs from that of men students, who have been here since their freshman year, as the writer in Thursday's Tar Heel pointed out. However, I feel his understanding of this difference is not an accurate one. In describing the coed leader, he writes: "Her exposure to our freedom must be a shock. She is sure that something is wrong. We have failed to make enough rules . . . To her mind this place really is in bad shape and she is heaven sent to save us." This is a possible reaction to life in a more liberal atmosphere of the immature girl unprepared for freedom. It is not the typical reaction made by campus women leaders.

Women leaders at Carolina are quite aware of their university's liberal tradition. It is one of the primary reasons many of them are here. They are not combing the campus hunting for areas in which one more rule can be added.

It is difficult for men students who have lived without residence restrictions to understand how the coed can passively accept them. American society has traditionally demanded that the woman student live under residence restrictions; it has not made the same demand of men. The freedom enjoyed by Carolina men is generally expected by college men everywhere. The degree of freedom given the Carolina coed is not enjoyed by women students in the majority of the nation's schools.

This is not written as a defense of all existent women's rules. Rules should constantly be reevaluated. Some probably should be abolished. This is written to remind male students that, comparatively speaking, Carolina's liberal tradition is reflected in its women's rules.

Carolina women leaders are concerned with upholding UNC's liberal tradition. It is this concern with the basis of their freedom rather than a desire to clamp more restrictions upon their fellow coeds that results in the formation of a committee such as the one on social values. The committee exists to encourage coeds to examine their own standards in relation to the campus code, not to impose any ready made rules of conduct upon Carolina women. It is my hope that increased awareness and concern with the campus code should result in less, rather than more legal restriction upon Carolina coeds.

Editor:

The recent criticism of Wednesday night's concert appears to have been contrived with no specific thought in mind other than that of meeting a fixed deadline. The critics review is typical of all similar edicts regarding music and art in general, as it was written from a general knowledge of a general subject for the general public.

He mentions that the first and second themes of the first movement of Tchaikovsky's fourth symphoney are "awkward in the sense that they neither lend themselves to development, express possibility, or the kind of emotional sweep that Tchaikovsky is always trying for. "We are to understand then, that Tchaikovsky is always trying for emotional sweep, and that the opening of the fourth set just doesn't sweep. The critic denies that Tchaikovsky developed his opening themes to express development and possibility whatever that means. Since the symphoney is already written and complete, I would say that there is a strong possibility that it expresses development.

The critic resumes the program with a philosophic version of Daphnis and Chloe, by Ravel, who "does not impress us with any great depth of soul." Ordinarily, I wouldn't mind the use of the royal plural in the word "us", except what it can only refer to the opinion of the critic himself, unless he attended the concert with a friend. We were, however, quite impressed by the music that actually penetrated our ears, even though it perhaps didn't weigh heavily enough on the True Believers so that their imaginations could properly perceive it. According to the critic, light music gets only to our ears, and our surface appendages, while the real intellectual kind being heavier, sinks voraciously to the point where it actually scrapes the bottom of the barrel. But unfortunately for the aspiring critic, Ravel neglected to write his music according to the laws of gravity. Shallow — soul — surface — diving music is meant only for those who can't take a real high-dive into the pops — and — beer variety. Within a community of such taste and musical sophistication, may we suggest for greater musical proportion and musical depth, Debussy's La Mer, which really sweeps along.

The Budget

One of the strongest arguments for integration has come from the Advisory Budget Commission. It showed with clarity that the state of North Carolina is not a rich state and that, even though the appropriations are inadequate in all respects, all appropriations must be made with wisdom.

As a small state, North Carolina is supporting two educational systems, neither one of them adequately. It is next to impossible to build two strong and equal school systems in this state with the limited resources that are available to support two high caliber systems, and the result has been that neither the white school system nor the Negro system has been adequate to meet the needs of the people. Even under this, the Negro system has been less adequate than the white system.

Hence, it would be healthy for the fiscal policy of the state to consolidate the two systems so that one good system can result from two mediocre ones. Indeed, this will have to come eventually, and the General Assembly could show great foresight by looking toward this method of improving the state schools. It is at the present, even exclusive of the rights issue, a much needed change.

Dulles

It is unhappy news that tells the nation of John Foster Dulles' illness in terms of a highly malignant cancer, for no matter on what side of the political fense one might be on no one wishes any man physical ill.

Mr. Dulles has not been a good Secretary of State. No matter how hard he tried he was at no point in the Eisenhower administration master of the world situation. Indeed, he has helped the United States fall from a pedestal of world supermacy to a position where the United States can only react to Soviet advances.

The career of John Foster Dulles is nearing its end, for there is no real doubt that he will have to resign before long. His potential successor is not a match for the issues of the world and indeed can promise no major improvement over the present Secretary of State.

All that can be said here is that it is a pity that the Secretary of State and the United States are both ill, and all one can do is pass on a fond wish that they both regain their health as soon as possible.

IDC

The Interdormitory Council has come up with the most idiotic proposal yet. The proposal in question is the one to permit possession of alcoholic beverages in rooms but to deny the drinking of these beverages. If enforced, it would lead to a comical situation.

It would be an encouragement to drunken driving, for if possession is allowed, then consumption is expected, and if the dorms cannot be used for consumption, then students will have to travel elsewhere.

If unenforced, it is a wasted set of words, and the history of all drinking rules on this campus is that they are not enforceable.

It would behoove the IDC to look at the situation realistically. It would be wise to curb the excesses of drunken conduct that would disturb the students in the dormitories. A strongly worded and enforced statement to this effect would work out best in the long run and hurt nobody. Perhaps the IDC will have the courage to revise its proposals.

Machines

It was not too long ago that on a one day's notice coke, candy, and cigarette machines were pulled out en masse from the new dormitories. It was not too much later that Rudy Edwards announced that J. S. Bennett, Director of Operations said that he would put machines of the cup variety back into the dorms.

Well, here it is a few weeks later and only Avery Dorm has machines in operation, and the other dorms have yet to see them.

Meanwhile, in other areas of the campus cigarette smokers are having fits because all the cigarette machines on campus are empty. It seems that wires are getting tangled in many areas, and perhaps they should soon be straightened out.

Prayer Day Observances Here Tonight

A World Day of Prayer observance for students will be held tonight at 8 o'clock at the University Baptist Church.

During the special service, prayers will be led by American and foreign students in their native languages.

The observance is being sponsored by the Campus Christian Council and will be presided over by Denton Lotz.

A special meditation will be given by Dr. A. C. Howell, secretary of the faculty. Prayers will also be led by Mai Vu, a student here from Saigon, Viet Nam; Midori Sasaki from Hiroshima, Japan; Alan Costa from Brazil, and Erwin Fuller from Louisburg.

Throughout the world students will be holding similar observances of the World Day of Prayer today. The special observance was started shortly after the World's Student Christian Federation was founded in 1895.

The American section of the federation is sponsoring observances on hundreds of campuses throughout the country.

Dulles

The medical bulletin said Dulles was in good spirits, with blood pressure at 125 over 70, pulse at 70, and temperature normal since the operation.

State Department press officer White said the radiation treatment would start this week. But he said he did not know how long it would last, or what amount of radiation would be used.

He said Dulles will be in the hospital for several weeks.

White said he could not answer such questions as Dulles' chances of recovering and whether tentatively scheduled allied talks will be called off.

"We have given you as full and complete a report as we can get at this time," he said.

At the State Department, officials pondered the effect of Dulles' illness on such matters as a tentatively scheduled meeting of Allied foreign ministers in mid-March and the 10th anniversary session of the Atlantic act (NATO) Ministerial Council April 2-4 in Washington.

Allied planning also had looked toward a possible conference with Russia this spring, perhaps before May 27, generally considered the Soviet deadline for turning over East Berlin to the Communist East German Regime.

Doctors Tell What's Wrong With Dulles

WASHINGTON — (AP) — Secretary of State Dulles has a type of cancer which is highly malignant, doctors said yesterday, but one which can be controlled for several years.

In many such cases the patient can return to full or limited occupations.

Private physicians gave this appraisal in interpreting for a reporter the medical bulletin issued by the surgeons who operated on Dulles for hernia Friday. They reported yesterday he will undergo radiation therapy for cancer. President Eisenhower said Dulles will continue on leave while he is being treated.

The physicians said the medical bulletin indicates that the cancerous tissue found today represents a spread from the original colon cancer for which Dulles underwent an operation in 1956.

The present diagnosis in Dulles case is that he has an "adenocarcinoma."

This is a glandular cancer, adeno being the Greek word meaning gland.

It most commonly arises in the glandular portion of the intestinal tract, which has millions of glandular cells. Their function is to secrete mucus and gastric juices.

An adenocarcinoma is different from other types of cancer such as "sarcoma," which is a cancer of connective tissue — such as bone tissue or brain tissue. It is also different from cancer of the blood such as lukemia.

The doctors said they interpreted the medical bulletin to mean the following:

That the small nodule or lump found on the part of the intestine involved in Dulles' hernia represented a spread from focus of his original colon cancer operated on in 1956.

The doctors said that at the time the colon cancer was removed in 1956, some small portions of it may still have remained, involving lymphatic glands neighboring on the original cancer site.

And ultimately, they said, the cells apparently spread to the new site.

The doctors said that while the outlook in cases of adenocarcinoma is ultimately grave, the further spread of the cancer can be kept under control for several years in many instances.

They said control involves such measures as X-ray and chemotherapy, (cq). This includes the use of certain drugs derived from nitrogen mustard, a war gas developed during World War I. One of the most effective of these nitrogen mustars is one called "thiotepa."

Oncoming Tar Heels Blast Loyola 76-57 For 10th Straight

Larese Hits 20; Record Now 16-1

CHICAGO — Carolina's oncoming Tar Heels developed hot hands early in the second half here last night, ran up a 20-point lead, and coasted home with a 76-57 win over agresive Loyola of Chicago.

The Tar Heels went into the dressing room at halftime with only a 9-point spread at 29-20. But they came roaring onto the floor in the second segment, outscored Loyola in one stretch 14-4, to lead 43-34, and from there it was no contest.

The Ramblers chopped away at the Carolina lead, which got as high as 20, once cutting it to 10 points at 63-53. But two straight buckets by Dick Kepley and two free tosses by York Larese gave Carolina a 69-53 lead.

Carolina never trailed the entire game although the score was tied once, at 2-2.

Larese High

High man for the night was the brilliant sophomore York Larese who pumped in 20 points. Lee Shaffer followed with 15, Doug Moe and Dick Kepley had 13 each, and Harvey Salz rounded out the starters with 7.

Frank McGuire cleared his bench in the second half, with his Tar Heels obviously ahead to stay.

Kentucky and Notre Dame met in the second game of a basketball double-header.

Three Loyola starters played most of the second half with four personal fouls riding their backs. Paul Sheety, Clarence Redd, and Greg Griffin all had four, although none of them ever fouled out.

Redd, averaging 21 points per game, was held to 3 in the first half, but added 13 in the last stanza to end up as high man for the Ramblers with 16. He was followed by Sheety with 12.

Record 16-1

The victory gave the streaking Tar Heels their 10th win in a row, and pushed their season record to 16-1.

Loyola dropped below the .500 mark tonight, their record is now 9-10.

The Tar Heels suffered a little from pressureitis in the first half, as they made more mistakes than good plays. But their superior height paid dividends in rebounds and Loyola couldn't buy a basket.

The Carolinians were just the opposite in the second half, as for while they threatened to run the Ramblers out ofth is Chicago Coliseum.

Last year the same four teams played a double-header here with Carolina meeting Notre Dame and Loyola playing Kentucky. At that time both of the visiting teams were upset by the home-standing Chicago clubs.

Carolina's next contest shapes up as the biggest of the season when 6th ranked North Carolina State goes to Chapel Hill to try and derail the high-flying Tar Heels.

After the State game, the Tar Heels have only 3 games (Maryland, Virginia and Duke) to play before the regular season ends and the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament begins.

National Record Falls At Scholastic Swim Meet

CHAPEL HILL — Speedy Harrison Merrel of Westminster Prep, Atlanta, Ga., raced to a new national prep school record in the 440-freestyle here yesterday with a time of 4:39.4.

The event was part of the running of the 14th annual Southern Interscholastic Swimming Championships held here yesterday in Bowman-Gray Memorial Pool.

Merrel broke the old mark of 4:47.3 which was set in 1958 by Bill Cass of Georgia Military by almost 8 seconds.

Merrel also broke a meet record in the 100-yard freestyle by hitting the tape in 50.5. He had set a record of 51.0 yesterday morning. The national mark is 50.2.

Bill McGintey of Myers Park in Charlotte also tied a meet record in the 50-freestyle with a time of 22.7. He holds the record in the 150-individual medley of 1:33.6.

Myers Park High School of Charlotte won the team honors by accumulating 83 points. They were followed by Greensboro High (53), Westminster Prep (39), Chapel Hill High (31), Raleigh High (27), Staunton Military (24), Massenutten Prep (15), Spartanburg, S. C., (8), Christ School of Asheville (4), Frederick Military (2).

Team champs Myers Park rolled to 4 first places and two second places on the way to a one-sided victory.

Greensboro, in grabbing second place, had 3 firsts and 3 seconds.

Jimmy Jamerson, son of UNC swimming coach Dick Jamerson, won the 200-yard freestyle and finished second in the 400-yard freestyle for Chapel Hill High.

Grapplers Beat Duke By 21-10

DURHAM — Carolina's wrestling teams took both ends of a twin bill with Duke here yesterday with the varsity winning 21-10 and the frosh victorious 21-8.

The varsity evened their record up at 4-4 with the victory, and the frosh climbed over the .500 mark at 4-3.

Carolina captured 5 of the eight events and drew another on the way to the one-sided victory. Both Henry Rhyne (130) and Perrin Henderson (137) accomplished pins for the varsity.

Heavyweight John Hurley was the only Carolina man to be pinned. The draw was between Carolina's Russel and Duke's Labone in the 157-pound class.

Pope Shuford (157) was the only Tar Baby to accomplish a pin, but the frosh took the same number as the varsity, 5 of the 8 events with one draw.

Swimmers Sink VMI By 54-32

Carolina's varsity swimmers won their second meet in a row and their eighth of the season here yesterday as they dunked Virginia Military Institute 54-32.

The Tar Heel mermen swept seven of the ten first places en route to a convincing victory.

Carolina had already beaten VMI once this year, that by 56-36 at VMI. The former meet was a part of their northern swing.

Once again it was sophomore sensation Harry Bloom who supplied much of the power as he swept his two specialties, the 220 and 440-freestyle events.

Another soph, Randy Dodson, continued his winning ways by capturing a first in the 200-butterfly.

Both Bloom and Dodson are undefeated in action this season.

The Carolina 400-freestyle relay team was disqualified because of fast starts, enabling VMI to win the last event.

Bob Hunter nailed down first place in the backstroke, and two Tar Heels, Brent Nash and Joe Kalkhurst, tied for first in the 50-freestyle with a time of 23.6.

Carolina's season record now stands at 8-1 with only Maryland and State left to face before the ACC championships get underway here in Chapel Hill.

THE SUMMARY

400-medley relay: Carolina (Hunter, Mercer, Zwicker, Dodson) 4:06.4
220-freestyle: Bloom (C), Simonton (C), Ederle (V) 2:13.5
50-freestyle: Kalkhurst (C) and Nash (C) tied, Lee (V) 23.6

Frosh Swimmers Win Two

Carolina's freshman swimmers disposed of two foes in one day here Friday when they whipped Westminster Prep 57-28, then dunked Stanton Military Academy 69-17.

In the Westminster event two frosh pool records were lowered by the Tar Babies. Carolina's Williams sailed through the 50-freestyle in 23.3 for a new yearling pool mark, and the 220-freestyle relay team of Waldron, Crutchfield, Brownell and Williams set a freshman pool mark of 1:34.5.

Still another freshman record was broken in the Stanton Military event by Carolina, as Briggs set the standard of 1:10.5 in the 100-breaststroke.

Pack Beats Terps 53-37

RALEIGH — (AP) — Sixth-ranked North Carolina State chalked up its seventh straight victory Saturday, turning back Maryland 53-37 in a somewhat dull Atlantic Coast Conference basketball contest before a regional television audience.

The Wolfpack grabbed an 8-6 lead after eight minutes, led the test of the way and broke the ragged contest wide open with 10 minutes left. The halftime score was 28-19.

The defending ACC champion Terps, who now have lost five in a row scored on only 14 of 53 attempts from the floor for a dismal 26 per cent. State, on the other hand, hit on 23 out of 68 for 34 per cent.

A crowd of 9,000, watching the comedy of errors in Reynolds Coliseum, saw State's big John Richter garner 13 points to run his three-year total over the 1,000 mark to 1,0005.

Senior George Stepanovich was high scorer for the winners with 20.

Maryland's leader was Charles McNeil who tallied 10 points—all in the first half.

State, second to North Carolina in the conference standings, ran its ACC record to 12 victories against only one defeat. Overall the Pack won 18 out of 20.

The defeat gave the Terps a 4-6 conference mark and a 6-11 standing in all games.

GOOD GRIEF, MORE

Profs Attack Budget

By DAVE JONES

"It denies freedom of time or resources to engage in creative or research activities, and if it is left as it is it will modify our status as a true University center," said Dr. Hugh Holman, chairman of the Department of English, when asked for his impressions of the advisory budget.

"It is true that all of us have impressions based only upon the governor's address and reports in the press. But if my picture is correct, they are asking us to teach more students at the same staff level and they are asking us to maintain our faculty in the competetive market without salary increases," he said.

"If these conclusions are true it (the budget) will modify the character of the University very seriously. Teaching time for the individual student will be cut down. Small classes will become larger," Dr. Holman concluded.

Prof. George F. Horner called the budget, "almost unrealistic." He said that it "simply will not permit the University to operate at the present enrollment and maintain its staff. Everyone is looking for teachers and as a result of the demand, salaries are going up."

Proffessor Horner also said that when a professor is offered a 40 or 50 per cent increase he is going to leave, local roots and loyalties notwithstanding.

Emphasis was placed on numbers of students in classes by Prof. Lyman Cotten. He said that the present trend to larger classes will cause the teachers to lose contact with the mind of the pupil. "If I had a class of 150, I could never invite the students in for a conference," he said. "I had a class of 10 in modern poetry recently and I felt that the sense of contact was far greater and the students were less willing to come to class unprepared."

Kenan professor of English Richmond P. Bond said, "it impedes our program markedly, in a scholarly and a pedagogical way. It weakens our position in the competetive market. I don't know if the people in the state realise it, but there is much more competetion today."

"I feel very badly about it," he continued. "If it goes unchanged we will be very much hampered here. We do more than teach and grade papers. We put in time on committees, boards and research for articles and books and a big book takes years of concentrated effort."

"Obviously the whole thing is inadequate," said Prof. Dougald Mac Millan. "We go through some thing similar to this every time the budget comes out. I've seen them all since 1914. You've got to convince the legislature with the presentation of the University's case to the proper legislaive committees. You must get those persons in the Legislature who are favorably inclined toward the University to present your case."

"Any attempt to limit the University's forward progress is a stunning blow," said Prof. Peter G. Phialas. He said the budget hurt it not only quantatively, but qualitatively as well, and that the school can no long compete in the market for professors.

Prof. H. K. Russell said, "the University is growing and unless the staff and resources of the library can keep up with the growth, the kind of education he University can provide for graduate and undergraduate students will become more and more impersonal and diluted."

Concerning the library, Prof Russell said that the budget cuts are a mistake and that it will ultimately be "harder to catch up than to keep up." He also said that there is "a good deal of satisfaction in knowing what a student is interesed in and his approaches to problems." However, he said this relationship becomes impossible in larger classes, leaving the student in the position of having to discover things for himself.

Foreign Students Get English Class Tonight

Another English class for foreign students will be held tonight at 6 o'clock in the upstairs lounge of the YM-YWCA Building.

This class introduces to foreign students and their families American folkways, customs and correct grammar. The free class is being sponsored by the Y in conjunction with the UNC English Department.

Instructor for the class is Dee Donroe, who will assist any student needing additional help. In addition to the classroom instruction, social functions and trips throughout the state have been planned.

Students have been asked to bring notebooks, pen and possibly a dictionary to tonight's class.

Chest Drive Goes To Rebels

Carolina students will be underwriting the education of Hungarian students who escaped after the 1956 uprising when contributions are made to the 1959 Campus Chest.

Education of Hungarian students comes under the budget of the World University Service, which is one of the three agencies being supported in the annual Campus Chest drive.

Of the $3,000 Campus Chest goal this year, 40 per cent or $1,200 has been designated for the World University Service (WUS). The two other participating agencies in this year's drive are Goettingen scholarships and the Class for Mentally Retarded Children of Orange County.

The Campus Chest drive has been scheduled for the week of March 1-7.

The World University Service went to the aid of Hungarian students in 1956 and set up a special loan fund the next year. Again this year, the WUS will contribute more mony to the education of Hungarian students.

In addition to the actual educational aid to Hungarian and other students, the World University Service has sent funds to fight disease, buy food and assist in building housing projects where the need arises.

The International World University Service was started to give relief to universities in post-World War I Europe. After the Second World War, WUS again actively participated in a program to aid refugees, provide scholarships, food and medicine.

The administration for the World University Service consists of a International Secretariat in Geneva, Switzerland, and 40 branches elsewhere in the world.

In the United States, seven regions handle the operation of the WUS. Sponsoring organizations of the World University Service are Catholic, Protestant and Jewish student groups.

The local Y, through the Campus Chest drive, is the active sponsoring organization on the Carolina campus.

Student Party Picks Election Candidates

Twelve Candidates for the Student Legislature were nominated to run in the spring elecions by the Student Farty in its meeting last night.

A recently vacated seat in the Legislature was also filled in a meeting almost exclusively devoted to elections and nominations.

In Town Men's I Warren Jackson was nominated by acclamation to run for a one year seat. No candidates were nominated to run in Town Men's II.

In Town Men's III Stan Black, Frank Elkins, and Barry Zasler were nominated to run for one year seats. Hobart Steele will run for the six months' seat open.

Those nominated in Town Men's IV for one year seats were Bob Pierce, Don Dotson, and Billy Woodard. Four other candidates will be selected by the Student Party Advisory Board.

In Dorm Men's I Swag Grimsley was nominated to run for a one year seat, with Taylor McMillan running for the six months' seat.

Bob Thompson and Ed Levy were nominated to run from Dorm Men's VI, both for one year seats.

The Student Party decided to endorse Tom Cordle as its candidate for the presidency of the Carolina Athletic Association. Endorsement of a candidate for the presidency of the Women's Athletic Association was postponed until next week's meeting.

Roy Goodman was chosen by acclamation to fill a vacant seat in the Legislature created by the resignation of Mike Shulman of his seat in Dorm Men's III. He will take office at the next meeting of the Legislature.

The Party also chose a new treasurer, as it is usual to have a treasurer serving through both the fall and spring elections. Bob Nobles was elected to this post, which was formerly held by Irwin Fuller. It was also announced that Nobles will serve as campaign coordinator for the coming spring elections.

Outgoing Treasurer Fuller presented his final financial report at the meeting, outlining in detail the condition of the party in this respect. It was revealed that the party spent a total of $275.47 on the fall election. Income and expenses were described as being "both over $1,000."

Search Starts For Women's Coordinator

Junior coeds interested in serving as women's coordinator of the fall orientation must go through a preliminary narrowing - down session with the Women's Residence Council this week and next.

Applications for the position must be submitted to the dean of women's office before Saturday noon. Files of past orientation programs will be open in the dean's office through Saturday.

Interviews with coeds submitting applications will be held next week by the Women's Residence Council and Orientation Chairman David Parker.

During these interviews, each coed will be expected to bring a tentative schedule with her ideas of what the 1959 orientation program should include.

After the interviews, the field of prospective candidates for women's orientation coordinator will be narrowed to three. The final selection will rest with the Bi-Partisan Selections Board next week.

Further information may be secured from Bryte Abernethy at 8-9066.

Present Time Is Troubled Brooks Hays Asserts

"There isn't much time left," said Brooks Hays last night to a UNC audience. The South must meet the racial problem with "sympathetic response."

In his talk, "Challenge to the South," Hays called the present time "a period of great conflict and controversy." The situation demands understanding; the answer is within us, he continued.

"Hopes are being fanned in the hearts of the colored people. We as Christians and Americans must see that these hopes are realized. We must take steps to make the American dream of equality of opportunity a reality," said the former Arkansas congressman.

Calling himself a Southern moderate, Hays said we must accept the unpopular laws along with the popular one. "The rule of law is an ideal to be held firmly. It is a precious value in the American heritage."

Hays spoke out for the preservation of the public school system, censuring Governor Faubus of Arkansas who said the system was expendable.

The speaker said he thought conscience would have driven us to take the same actions had the Supreme Court decision not been pronounced. "We knew things weren't right; they did not agree with the standards of the South or of the nation."

Hays said his views coincided with the Southern author who said, "There was a South of fears and misgivings; that South is dead. The South of human kindness, justice, and peace lives.

Referring to the morale of Little Rock citizens, Hays said the people had suffered, but he thought the "moral resources" of the people would meet the crisis.

Hays, speaking under the auspices of the YM-YWCA, was a member of the House Foreign Affairs committee and of the U. S. delegation to the United Nations while in Congress. At present he is president of the Southern Baptist Convention. He has recently written a book published by the North Carolina press entitled, The Southern Moderate Speaks.

HOMEWORK

Students Give Models

By RON SHUMATE

A group of UNC Air Science students recently donated some of their homework to needy children and orphanages.

But the homework did not consist of mathematics problems, term papers or the history of ancient Greece or any such standard classroom assignment.

Rather, each student in Capt. W. E. Moore's freshman Air Science class of the Air Force ROTC was required to build some type of air vehicle. The models ranged from the earliest types of "flying machines" to the recent Atlas ICBM.

The models were entered in a contest and four winners were presented with letters of commendation from professor of Air Science Lt. Col. F. W. Swann. The winners also received five merits, strictly a military award.

After the contest, most of the models were distributed to needy children by the Chapel Hil Junior Chamber of Commerce and the Empty Stocking Fund.

Each student bought his model from his own funds. The purpose of the assignment, according to Capt. Moore, was to familiarize the students with the shapes, forms and control systems of air vehicles and with the basic principles of aerodynamics.

The winners and the type of model they built are Lloyd Moore, an X-13 Vertajet; John Summey, a Snark ICRM; Evan King, an F-104 Starfighter, and Jim Carver, an Atlas ICBM.

Judges in the contest were Major William D. Locke, Gen. F. Carlyle Shepard and Lt. Col. Swann. The models were judged on the basis of attention to detail and craftsmanship.

Capt. Moore said the project will probably be repeated next year.

UP Discusses Union, Elections Tonight

Tonight the University Party will discuss two possible Legislative bills, one concerning a state loan for a new Student Union and the other for having more ballot boxes during elections.

The party will meet at 7:15 in Roland Parker I and II.

According to John Minter, party chairman, a self-liquidating federal loan of 2½ million dollars for a Student Union could be secured. This would raise the student block fee $15 per student.

Discussion on ballot boxes will center around placing another one in the naval armory, which would provide two for Town Men's I, another in Y Court (Town Men's II) and adding another in Town Men's III.

David Grigg will explain his bill, presented last week to the Student Legislature, concerning Legislative action on matters dealing with subsidiary organizations.

Under discussion will be its attack by the editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

As this will be the last meeting before nominations (Feb. 23 and 24), Minter said that a definite time for the meetings will be discussed. They will also explain some of the issues incorporated into the party platform.

Perry Nichols, Heck Lecture Guest Tonight

The UNC Law Students Association will sponsor a Heck Lecture tonight, with Perry Nichols, prominent Miami attorney, as guest speaker.

The three hour program, open to the public, will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the auditorium of the Institute of Government. The speaker, whose topic will be "The Personal Injury Workshop: From Selection of the Jury through Final Argument," will conduct the lecture with the use of demonstrative and visual aids.

LSA President Joseph B. Chambliss will preside at the program. The speaker will be introduced by the chairman of the LSA Speakers Committee, Robert W. King Jr.

This will be the fourth event in the 1958-59 Heck Lecture Series, which is supported by a fund endowed by George Heck of Glen Head, N. Y., the oldest living alumnus of the UNC Law School.

Nichols, who limits his practice to trial work and specializes only in the plaintiff's side of personal injury litigation, is a Fellow and Director of the International Academy fo Trial Lawyers. Past President of the Dade County Bar Association, he was one of four lawyers serving on the Judicial Council of Florida which has re-written the Constitution of Florida dealing with the courts and is still working on future improvements.

Phi Proposal Would Abolish Military Draft

Should the peace-time military draft be abolished in the United States? This is the question to be discussed by the Philanthropic Literary Society tonight at 8 o'clock.

A bill presented by David Matthews, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, would have the peace-time military draft abolished, while maintaining "a comparatively small, professional armed force by means of increased salaries and improved living conditions."

The bill further states that due to the draft, the lives and careers of young American men are highly uncertain, and the turnover is great thereby depriving the armed forces of highly trained specialists. Since experts in technical skills are badly needed by the U. S. armed services in this age of great technical advancement, it is felt that a considerably smaller military establishment than exists at present would be just as effective, if it were composed entirely of experienced and professional soldiers.

Any interested persons have been invited to attend the meeting. The Phi meets on the fourth floor of New East.

Interviews Scheduled By Marines

Major Charles B. Redman, Marine Corps official selection officer for the Carolinas, will visit UNC Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 23 and 24.

While here, he plans to interview those students interested in obtaining a Marine Corps commission. At present, vacancies exist for both ground and pilot training.

Major Redmond has said that several good programs are offered by the Marines. The platoon leaders class program is available for freshmen, sophomores and juniors, while seniors may participate in the aviation officer candidate course or the officer candidate course. Marine officer training is arranged so as not to interfere with college work. All students will be required to receive their degree before being assigned to active duty.

While at Carolina, Mayor Redman and the members of the team will be in Y Court daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. All interested students may contact him there. This will be his last visit during the current academic year.

Student Wives Plan Colorful Spring Events

The varied program of the Student Wives Club for the spring semester includes nearly everything from bridge playing to outdoor cooking.

The club, whose membership is open to wives of students enrolled in the University, meets every first and third Tuesday at the Victory Village Nursery.

The program for tonight will feature Mrs. Thell Jernigan, owner of Thell's Bakery, who will give a demonstraion of professional cake decorating techniques.

The newly elected officers of the club are Frances Hovdesven, president; Marilyn George, vice president; Jane Brown and Katie Johnson, secretaries; Judy Snyder, treasurer, and Kathy Alexander, program chairman.

All meetings begin at 8 p.m.

Music Series At 8 Features Violin, Piano

Three sonatas for violin and piano by Beethoven, Brahms and Prokofieff will be presented tonight at 8 o'clock in Hill Hall.

Violinist Edkar Elden and pianist William S. Newman of the UNC Music Department faculty will be the performers in the second spring recital of the Tuesday Evening Series. The program is open to the public without charge.

Dr. Alden, head of the string division in the Music Department, teaches theory and is assistant conductor of the UNC Symphony Orchestra. His most recent concert appearance in Hill Hall was in November with the UNC String Quartet.

Dr. Newman teaches music appreciation and seminars in musicology, and is chairman of piano instruction. He and Dr. Wilton Mason opened the Tuesday Evening Series last semester with a two piano recital.

Newman and Alden have appeared on concert together for the past nine years. They often repeat their Hill Hall concerts in other Carolina communities and in neighboring states.

For tonight's program they have chosen Beethoven's "Spring" Sonata in F Major, Op. 24; Brahms' Sonata in G Major, Op. 78; and Sonata in D Major Op. 94 by Prokofieff.

Student Party Ends Interviews Friday

Student Party interviews for nominations for the spring election will conclude this week with Dorm Men's IV and V and Dorm Women's II.

Students who live in these districts may be interviewed Friday in Roland Parker I from 2 to 5 p.m.

Although interviews for Dorm Men's II and III, Dorm Women's I and Town Women's districts were supposed to have been completed last week, interviews will continue throughout the week in these districts.

Apply Now For Committee On Orientation

Orientation Committee applications will be accepted anytime this week by Orientation Chairman David Parker.

This is the committee that will make all plans for orienting new Carolina students in the fall. Top positions on the committee include: men's orientation coordinator, women's coordinator, secretary and treasurer.

Application blanks for committee membership will be available in the student government office through Friday. All applications must be submitted to Parker by Friday.

Interviews with applicants will be held Monday through Thursday, Feb. 23-26 in the Woodhouse Conference Room by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

Di Meeting

An informal discussion on Women's rules will be the topic of tonight's Dialectic Senate meeting to be held at 8 p.m. in Di Hall, 3rd floor New West.

President Gary Greer announced that parliamentary rules will be suspended to provide a more informal means of communication.

Greer said that he had invited Nancy Adams, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, and other coed leaders to participate in the discussion.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Virginia Louise Crawley, Ellen Rae Smith, Jerry Sandra White, Sophie Meyers Martin, James Pressley, Roy Millen Wall, George Henry Manassee, Thomas Lee Funderburk, James Edward Fox, David Robert Williams and Margaret Lillian Evans.

The Library

The concept of the A budget is a tricky one. It is a budget that covers present operating costs plus increments for enrollment increase and cost of living rises.

The B budget is set aside for improvements and increase in standards.

Under the A budget, the University recommended $177,000 for the central library, a figure which was a mathematical calculation, the editor was unfair to the University administration in using this figure to represent the amount necessary to maintain the standard of third in the South, in that it was necessary in the A budget only to present enough money to maintain present book buying levels in respect with the 1957-59 biennium.

The editor was not off base in pointing out that the combined A & B budget figures — approximately $219,000 — did not meet the standard necessary — $225,000 — for the central library.

Overall, the University recommended $260,000 for the biennium for all libraries in the University, and yet to take one of the libraries as an example the Dean of the Law School reports that the A & B budget figures combined are just barely enough to maintain the Univeristy's rating in that area of libraries, as far as the Law School library is concerned. This, too, is dependent on whether other Universities in the nation request more proportionally than the University.

In general, the original recomendation is such that for library spending the University would do a little poorer than maintain its ground. After the Advisory Budget Commission got through, the result promised a rapid deterioration of the library facilities throughout the emire University.

The United Front

The effect of Consolidation on the Advisory Budget Commission's recommended budget was all too evident and so much to be bemoaned, for the across the board cuts that the three institutions sustained have set Carolina rocking, State rolling, and Woman's College reeling with reason.

The reason for these cuts is evident. It lies in the obvious political desire of the governor to balance the budget without extra taxes and without too much thought about what was being cut or the results of these cuts. It lies also in the University having no significant case for itself presented in Raleigh. The results are evident in that East Carolina received proportionally more than any of the Consolidated Institutions.

There are many reasons why this united front was harmful to the budget. On the local scene, Dean James Godfrey was not able to howl loud and hard for faculty salaries after the budget's initial local formulation, for it would seem that he was overweighting the University request too much. Dean Fred Weaver was not able to fight the case for a student union which he is most capable of, being the person most endowed with the facts of the situation, because he might overweight it with respect to the rest of the budget. Indeed, each person who had anything to do with the budget had to go along with the whole budget, when their arguments for their particular area of concern would have made a very loud clamor indeed.

Moreover, State is a unique institution having as its aim the bettering of its technological set-up, Woman's College has unique needs, and Carolina has, above all, unique needs and claims which must be presented not from a point of view of any of three, but from a point of view that the University at Chapel Hill is THE UNIVERSITY in the state system. If this type of arguing isn't done, the day may well come when the General Assembly looks on each University with equal favor, so that it will hold back on Carolina until the others catch up making a statewide system of third rate Universities.

It is time for the Chancellor to step out and argue the case of the University at Chapel Hill as THE UNIVERSITY in the state. It is time for him to rally those around him to make their individual pleas for the areas that most concern them. This is the only way the University may be saved from going down the drain as a bar of soap gets smaller and smaller until it plunges into oblivion.

The way of Consolidation is the way of the Golden Mean, the way of mediocrity for all and excellence for none. It is time the state system made sense and the University asserted itself to a position of prominence it has already partially lost.

Books

Sidney Dakar

When I am swindled and have no recourse to the courts, I am of course very angry. This is why I have waited several weeks before writing this column about the great swindle that occurs twice yearly when students must buy their books for the new semester.

When I was in high school my father used to curse everytime he was informed that I needed a new set of books and that I could not sell my old ones. But, after all, my father never went to schools for more than several years when he was in school over 60 years ago. What did he know about the need to change books to keep up with "progress?" He just did not understand. I argued that new knowledge is found and that new books must be printed so that the student could get the very latest information. I was naive.

After some years of observing the selection of books for college courses, I have come to completely agree with my father. If there is an easier and more lucrative legalized racket, I have not heard about it. It would not be so bad if the ones who were being swindled could afford it. Poor farm families save and forgo even simple pleasures in order to send their children to the university. Other students work on the various campus jobs for a pittance only to be relieved of most of their hard-earned money at the bookstores. All of this is done in the name of "progress." Maybe so, but it is not the student who progresses.

Some people maintain that there has not been a new idea in the liberal arts field since Plato wrote his Republic. This view may be a little extreme, but it can still be defended. The same thing can be said for some of the basic sciences. What has been changed in mathematics, geometry and trigonometry since the ancient Greeks? In what way has Latin changed since the days of imperial Rome? In what way has the French language changed since last semester? One would think that sweeping changes were occuring in all of these fields when we see the" revised editions" that appear with the regularity of the falling leaves. On close examination one will discover that the only thing that has changed is the pigment in the binding.

Not only are these changes forced upon the student but he must pay exorbitantly for them. Why is it that all textbooks are on the average about $3 higher than a novel of the same number of pages and quality of paper? Does it take more time and skill to rehash the same old material than it does for Hemingway or Steinbeck to produce a new masterpiece? The principle of setting the price on textbooks is simple. In business circles it is known as "charging what the traffic will bear." Poor Joe College is over the barrel and the professors and publishers know it. He must fork over or leave school.

There is probably a nation-wide ring that controls these textbook changes. The idea is to get as many changes as possible without changing back to the original text before the student has sold it for $1 because it is "outdated." Sometimes things get confused. I recall that one book became "outdated" and then two semesters later it once again became the required text. They did not even change the color of the cover; it was the same old edition. More money is wasted and more people go to their death in the name of progress than for any other thing. Progress for whom? It certainly is not for the dead or the penniless.

On Labor Reform Measures

The Commonweal

Congressional battle lines over proposals for labor reform legislation are already drawn. So far as we can see, there is little differencen between the line-up on the subject in the Eighty-sixth Congress and that in the previous session. Indeed, the proposals and counter-proposals, maneuvers and counter-maneuvers, have about them a somewhat stylized air, as all concerned follow a familiar and predictable pattern

Senator John F. Kennedy began the proceedings by introducing his labor reform bill, a slightly revised version of that which he co-sponsored in the last session with Republican Senator Ives. The Kennedy proposals grew out of the hearings of the McClellan Committee, and they include requirements for full reporting of union financial data; secret-ballot elections at set intervals; criminal penalties for false reporting or embezzlement of union funds; disqualification of those convicted of a felony from holding union office.

In addition to provisions for labor reform along these lines, the Kennedy bill would amend the Taft-Hartley law by giving men on strike the right to vote in union representation elections and by relaxing union shop provisions in the construction industry. Union leaders have long wanted such changes and these portions of the Kennedy bill are described as "sweeteners" to assure labor support for his bill.

After Senator Kennedy's proposals were put forward, the Administration bill on the subject of labor reform was introduced by Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona—a somewhat unfortunate beginning dictated by the fact that Senator Goldwater of Arizona—a somewhat Goldwater is the senior Republican on the Senate committee involved. In reality the Administration bill is far more moderate than any Senator Goldwater would be likely to write on this subject, and its provisions should be viewed as coming primarily from Secretary of Labor James Mitchell rather than from Senator Goldwater.

As far as corrupt practices are concerned, the Administration proposals for labor reform are not very much different from those advanced by Senator Kennedy. The big difference is in the changes proposed in the Taft-Hartley law. Here the Administration measure includes two proposals strongly favored by business and just as strongly opposed by labor. One would strengthen and extend curbs on secondary boycotting; the other would outlaw what employers describe as "blackmail picketing" and what unions call "organizational picketing"—that in which the union does not represent a majority of the employees of the firm involved.

Initial debate on the two labor reform measures followed the expected course. Senator Goldwater denounced the Kennedy bill, Senator Kennedy assured the Senate that his bill would "virtually" put Teamster president James Hoffa "out of business," and Secretary of Labor Mitchell vigorously defended the Administration measure, while going out of his way to disassociate the proposals as much as possible from Senator Goldwater, the bill's nominal sponsor. There were no surprises, and it seems likely that if events continue to follow this predictable pattern, the results will be identical with those in the previous session of Congress.

The last time around, it will be remembered, the Kennedy-Ives bill was an anti-racketeering measure pure and simple, without any controversial efforts to amend Taft-Hartley one way or the other. After much discussion, the measure passed in the Senate 88 to 1, only to die in the House because all-or-nothing advocates of a "tougher" measure insisted on amendments which had little or no chance of winning a majority.

On labor-management questions, relatively small things very often take on tremendous symbolic value. In the case of amendments now being debated, we have the feeling that this is exactly what is happening. For years labor and management have been fighting for amendments in the Taft-Hartley law—labor in the direction of the "sweeteners" in Senator Kennedy's bill, management in the direction of those in the Administration's measure. Both sides clearly feel strongly on these issues and are prepared to fight for their views.

At the same time, there is general agreement in Washington that insistence by either side on including its pet proposals in an anti-labor racketeering bill will again mean no legislation at all. Such an outcome, in our opinion, would be extremely unfortunate.

We are for a labor reform bill, now as always, and we do not think either labor or management should insist on "sweeteners" as the price for their support of any reasonable effort in this area. Compromise may mean that the measure eventually passed will be less than perfect, from the point of view of both labor and management, but when did Congress last pass a "periect" bill? The legislative process normally demands that all parties-at-interest settle for less than a full loaf, and there is no reason for expecting anything else in this case.

Perhaps we misread public sentiment in this matter, but we are convinced the American public wants a labor reform bill, and soon. If we are correct on this, blocking the passage of such a measure could be a very risky business indeed—a thought we recommend to both sides as the debate in Washington continues.

Arthur Lessing

In a long and uninteresting concert, members of the music faculties of Duke and North Carolina Universities played music of Beethoven, Dvorak, Klenz, Sammartini, and Stamitz. Of these, only the Trio Opus 11 of Beethoven and the Trio Opus 21 of Dvorak deserve mentioning. The rest of the music on this Petites Musicales-sponsored program was strictly mediocre and not worth wasting an audience's time.

Of the two works played before the intermission, the performance of Dvorak's work seemed the most satisfying. At least the players' temperament, tone, and talent were best suited to this tedious piece of music. Beethoven's music suffered from too many performance ills to mention here. Suffice it to say that neither Mr. Allan Bone's clarinet, Mr. Klenz's cello, nor Mr. Mason's piano was able to get to the subtleties of this work of Beethoven, and instead gave us a blunt and empty reading.

As I said, after the intermission we were forced to sit through an endless procession of mediocre music.

This was not an answer to the sorely-needed chamber music on this campus.

This week — on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, to be exact —several hundred university students hungered and thirsted for knowledge.

The occasion which brought to light this lust for literature was the Wilson Round Library Sale.

Within the small reading room on the left side on the first floor of the library, a total of 10,000 library books offered themselves for sale. Some of them were cracked and worn with age; some of the ones who lived in volumes had lost mates and brothers; some, like the beautiful debutante who becomes a dowdy housewife, had lost appeal through the years; others, like the soap box orator in Hyde Park, championed causes that nobody cared about—such as Hammock Weaving in Nineteenth Century Afganistan, Why the South Won the War, and Confessions of a Con Man.

But, evidently, many of the old books were not put out to pasture after all; they were bought for 15 or 20 cents and carried lovingly home by their new owners who would shelve them comfortably in a heated room, who would dust them, who might even open them and examine their messages and their souls.

The old books were granted one last, wonderful swan song, one final "moment of glory" as packs of eager students, professors, townspeople bore down on them with cries of ecstasy, rebel yells, and other vocal manifestations. The sale room at 2:01 p.m. reminded one of the rationed-goods-sales during the last war when people would break arms and legs to buy cigarettes and Hershey bars.

"There's that bearded fellow that bought 200 books yesterday. He is going to build an extension onto his home just to shelve his books, you know."

"What are you looking for?"

"Well, I was kind of hoping they might have the complete works of Freud for 25 cents or so."

"Ouch!"

"Dammit, watch what you step on."

"Excuse me, but would you mind not breathing down my back."

"Oh! There's a book on Chinese customs. Will you please reach over there and get it for me—never mind, it's gone."

"Please don't break up a set of books, sir. If you take one, you've gotta take 'em all. But I am sure you will enjoy the complete works of Sir Dudley Harrow-Fitzchester. Don't just sample them."

"Will you get the hell off of my hand?"

Some books are to be tasted, others digested, said the man. And then there are a few which must be accorded the proper respect and old-age-security due to them —because of the rare and wonderful gifts which the other members of their race have provided us.

The Budget

The Commonweal

No sooner was President Eisenhower's 1960 budget delivered to Congress than it was promptly and bitterly denounced by Democratic spokesmen as "political propaganda." And no sooner were these charges relayed to Mr. Eisenhower than he denounced the denouncers, charging in his turn that was the criticism of his budget which was "political."

It is ironic that the word "politics" should be used as a term of calumny even by those who hold our highest political offices. But it is even more unfortunate that the "political" label should be taken to signify something like "irrelevant" or "meaningless.""

Obviously, the Democratic critics of the President's budget are correct in calling it political that is, concerned with the effect it will produce in the minds of the voters, and intended to be to advantage to the Republican Party and corresponding disadvantage to the Democratic Party. The same concern for voter reaction and the same attempt to enhance the position of their own Party are, of course, involved in the Democratic response the budget. But it is neither scandalous nor surprising that this should be the case.

"Political" as it is, the proposed budget nevertheless embodies the thinking of the Administration on the proper role of government, on the condition of the union, actually and ideally, in both national and international terms. The values which shape this thinking are clearly discernible in it.

The conception of government underlying the President's budget calls for minimal government action in almost every field. It sees financial stability as the nation's first need and adjusts its programs accordingly. The chief way for the government to assure its goal of price stability, in this view, is to cut back its spending, to retrench on existing governmental programs and to refrain from undertaking new ones.

What is "political" about this budget, in the pejorative sense of the term, is that its much extolled balance is, upon examination, extremely precarious. It can be maintained only if a number of debatable economic assumptions turn out to be correct, if Congress passes new tax legislation, which it is not likely to do, and if Congress does not pressure the Administration into certain additional expenditures, which it is quite likely to do.

It is hard to understand how these likelihoods could have been ignored, except that the inevitable toppling of the budget's delicate balance and the impossibility of hinted-at tax cuts, can then be represented as the responsibility of the "spending" Democratic Congress.

Critics of the President's budget are by and large spokesmen for a view that calls for greater governmental activity, stimulating the national economy, meeting national needs for schools, roads, housing, etc., as these needs arise, and financing them however possible. Such a view, which does not rule out a recourse to deficit spending, does not, obviously, regard inflation as the greatest danger to our national well-being.

Some of the Democrats who are leading the attack on the Administration's budget are indulging in "political" caricature, of course. "Politicking" may be seen in the reduction of the President's position to simple slogans and in the Congressional call for all manner of clearly impossible but appealing legislation. But this does not invalidate the basic beliefs and arguments which led to the political maneuvering in the first place.

A case can be made for both sides of this debate, but a choice must be made. Thus far, we feel, the arguments of those who have criticized the budget have not been met. They are certainly not met by the President's dismissal of them as "political."

In his recent press conference Mr. Eisenhower said scornfully that his critics were suffering from "budgetary schizophrenia," because they maintained that his budget was not likely to be balanced in its actual application and at the same time maintained that it did not call for adequate government spending in many areas.

We tend to agree with critics of the budget on both of these points, seeing in it two distinct and simultaneous deficiencies. If there is anything schizophrenic here, it is the budget itself, which leaves undone many things which should be done and at the same time fails to provide enough money even for its own too limited goals.

A HOUSE, NO A HEARSE

Hot Piano Brings Fire Department

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

Investigations of a hearse burning and a piano on fire—both on Sunday in the fraternity court areas will be conducted by the IFC Court under the chairmanship of Grey Poole.

The 1941 hearse burned in little fraternity court around 5:30 Sunday afternoon. Prior to that, big fraternity court was the scene of a piano burning at 6 o'clock Sunday morning.

The climax of the Germans weekend appeared to be the hearse incident Sunday afternoon. The hearse had been seen during the weekend being driven around Chapel Hill with several people in it. The name Phi Kappa Sigma was written on the side of the hearse.

Shortly before 5:30 p.m. the vehicle was driven over the stone wall in front of little fraternity court and set afire by an unknown person. The fire department sent one truck to the scene of the fire after being called by someone from Kappa Sigma fraternity. Capt. G. S. Baldwin of the fire department said Monday, "The entire interior was burned; the steering wheel melted."

Not only was the hearse burned but it was also damaged by some of the people there.

Capt. Baldwin estimated, "500 people were laughing and shouting there."

When a wrecker came to pull the vehicle away, one fraternity man who had climbed into the hearse after the fire was extinguished, was asked to get out; he objected. Finally the three police officers at the court "picked him up bodily and put him in a (police) car," Sgt. G. R. Creel said; however, the fraternity member was charged with disorderly conduct and resisting arrest mainly because "he was cursing."

A party atmosphere was reigning throughout the 100 and 200 blocks of West Cameron Avenue during most of Sunday afternoon. People were standing in the yards and sitting on the porches; a hi-fi was also heard throughout the district. When the hearse was dragged off, things seemed to quiet down.

Earlier in the afternoon at 3:23 three fire trucks arrived at the 200 block of West Cameron Avenue on the report of a fire at Pi Kappa Phi fraternity. This was a false alarm. Immediately after the trucks arrived, the black hearse, which had been parked next to St. Anthony Hall, pulled off.

The false alarm and the noise from the hearse brought a large number of people to the sidewalks, and street traffic was blocked.

The second fire which occurred in the parking area of big fraternity court was reported at 6 a.m. Sunday. Three trucks attended this fire because "of the number of lives involved and the closeness of the houses in the fraternity court," Fire Chief J. S. Boone reported.

Ray Jefferies, assistant to the dean of student affairs, was also called to the scene. He said that a piano had been burned and that about four people were standing around the charred piano. However, he noticed about 20 or 30 people standing near the fraternity houses in the court.

Both Jefferies and Sam Magill, assistant dean of student affairs, agreed that this was not the best Carolina weekend. Investigation and handling of the three incidents will be left to the student government, they said.

Concerning the events Sunday and the weekend in general, Tucker Yates, president of the Interfraternity Council, made this statement:

"The Interfraternity Council wishes to take this opportunity to apologize for the ungentlemanly conduct of certain fraternity men during the past weekend. The IFC Court, under the chairmanship of Grey Poole, is in the process of investigating the incidents in which these actions occurred. Upon completion of such investigation, definite corrective measures will be taken."

English Department Begins News Letter

The UNC English Department has come up with another "first"—a volume 1, number 1 Graduate News Letter which furnishes news of the department, its faculty and its alumni.

Sam G. Barnes, assistant professor of English, is editor of the News Letter which will be an annual publication.

An enlightening feature of the newsletter is a resume of a speech made by Robert M. Lester, executive director of the Southern Fellowships Fund. He pointed out that UNC ranks highest in the South in the number of Ph.D. degrees in humanities awarded in a period covering 1948-55.

The statistics showed that the University awarded 576 degrees from 1948 to 1955 with 139 of these degrees in humanities. A total of 66 doctoral degrees were received by students of English, drama, speech and other allied fields. Duke University ranked second with 440 degrees during the period, 81 of these in the humanities and 32 for English majors.

Another piece notes the increased number of Wilson Fellows as a result of the Ford grant to the Woodrow Wilson Fellowship Foundation. The article says that of the 1958-59 total of 1,032 grants, some two-thirds (712) are concentrated in 18 universities, with UNC's total of 24 ranking twelfth among the 90 American and Canadian institutions with at least one Fellow this year. Exactly one-half of the 24 Fellows at the University are registered in English.

These figures made students and alumni of the UNC English Department aware of their position of prominence in the South. This fact, coupled with the interest of graduate students and faculty members, pointed up the need for such a journal which now is a reality.

The news letter also reports that enrollment in the graduate division reached a record high with a total of 121 candidates for advanced degrees for the year 1958-59. The group is made up of 51 candidates for the Ph.D. degree and 63 candidates for the M.A. award. Seven students are undecided.

Other pertinent facts include recognition that higher entrance standards at UNC, including the requirement of College Board Examinations, have resulted in a qualitative improvement of the freshman-sophomore required program.

In addition, the curriculum for superior students has been expanded and extended as part of the University's program for superior students financed by funds from the Carnegie Foundation.

Total registration for freshman English was 1,384 with 1,062 in English 1, about 280 in English 2, and 42 students in the advanced 2A sections for superior students.

The journal also reports outstanding activities of some 19 of the English Department faculty members, titles of articles and books written by others, news of about 129 alumni who did work in the UNC English Department, and the successful placement of 30 graduates into college teaching positions by the department placement service under the direction of Kenan Professor Arthur Palmer Hudson.

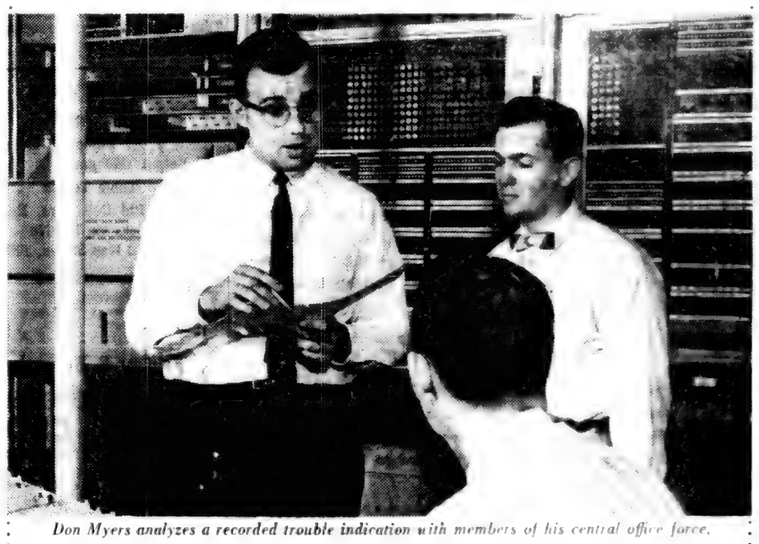
A Campus-to-Career Case History


Don Myers analyzes a recorded trouble indication with members of his central office force.
You keep right on "graduating" in a Bell Telephone career. Here's proof.
Donald L. Myers, B.S. in Civil Engineering, University of Maryland, '54, is typical of many young college graduates in the Bell Telephone Companies. Don manages test center operations at the Arlington, Virginia, office of The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company. He supervises 9 people.
"We maintain equipment and facilities records on the 61,000 telephones served by this office and are responsible for handling customer trouble reports and dispatching repairmen," Don explains. "But one of our most important jobs is locating potential trouble conditions before our customers' service is affected.
"In my previous assignment I was in charge of the group responsible for the maintenance of switching equipment at suburban McLean, Virginia. This was a smaller office serving 6000 telephones."
Don stepped into these supervisory positions after less than 3 years of actual telephone experience. (He has sandwiched a two-year military hitch into his record since joining the company in 1954.) Previously, while on the Plant Engineering staff, he planned circuits between telephone exchanges and expansion of facilities to meet future growth. He also studied the highly complicated circuitry of central office switching equipment and its memory and routing functions.
Where does he go from here? It depends mostly on Don. But one thing looks sure: continuous growth in the industry will create advancement opportunities for him and young men like him who have what it takes to get ahead.
This is not just the story of Don Myers . . . many college men like him are moving ahead in telephone careers. See for yourself what your future with the telephone company might be like. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus and read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office.

Carolina Climbs To Number One In Associated Press Poll

We have declined comment thus far on the Wake Forest-Carolina basketball game for several reasons. The biggest is that we were not there, the game was covered by radio. Another is that we felt it would be better to let things cool off for a while before making comments.

Now we are ready to comment. Yesterday we saw films of the game, especially the fight. We spent over an hour looking at the fight alone, in slow motion, regular, and in stills.

There is no doubt after seeing the films that many of the accounts of the fracas that graced our state papers were completely off base. The incident has been called unfortunate, and it was. It was not unavoidable, and in our eyes the wrong person or persons has been singled out for the blame.

Here, then, is a blow-by-blow account of what happened as we saw it on the film: Dave Budd tried a hook shot which hit too high on the backboard and bounded off. Lee Shaffer went up for the ball and got his hands on it, then landed squarely on the floor. The ball bounded out toward the foul circle. Shaffer and Wake's Charlie Forte and Dave Adkins all dived for the ball, with Shaffer getting his hands on it first.

Forte dived backward into Shaffer in an attempt to tie him up. By this time Olin Broadway had gotten the ball, and York Larese was trying to prevent him from diving onto the rest of the players.

Adkins was holding Shaffer to the floor with his legs. Shaffer finally climbed to his feet and was immediately hit by Forte. Then Budd grabbed him from behind and pulled him to the floor. All this time Shaffer had neither thrown a punch or even had the opportunity.

Doug Moe was grabbed by two Wake Forest players and dragged toward the Wake Bench. All this time the Wake players had been coming onto the floor from the bench. Coach Bones McKinney did not pull his players off Moe, he grabbed Moe and held him.

About four players were beating on York Larese and had him on the floor. Larese was in danger until the big Wake frosh star, Len Chappell, came from somewhere and pulled Larese out of the mess. Chappell is to be highly commended for that action.

Scattered notes: Frank McGuire had finally made his way to the center of the action and was trying to calm things down. A Wake Forest student hit him in the head from behind. York Larese was standing at the fringe of a crowd that had by now reached mob proportions. He was simply looking into the middle of the mob, when a Wake student came up behind him and hit him in the back of the head. Then another student jumped on him.

The thing that struck me the most about the fight is an isolated fact that hasn't been brought out. Official White was right in the middle of the play when Shaffer and the two Deacons dived for the ball. He was in the midst when Shaffer got to his feet. As soon as Forte hit Shaffer, referee White backed away from the action, sidled toward the sidelines, then beat a hasty retreat. We believe that had White acted correctly he could have stopped the fight before it started.

Some of the irresponsible and inexcusable journalistic accounts of the fight that appeared in papers around the state are to be condemned to the fullest extent. We will single out Smith Barrier of the Greensboro Daily News just as he singled out Lee Shaffer as the instigator of the riot. Barrier accused Shaffer of starting the fight, a thing that couldn't be further from the truth.

We realize that things happen fast at such an event and that facts are often confused. But Barrier was completely in the dark and had no right to release such a statement as he did. Lee Shaffer not only wasn't responsible for the fight, he couldn't have prevented it if he had wanted.

Barrier is not the only violator, but he seems to be the most flagrant one.

It is hoped that in the future sportswriters will use a little more discretion in informing the public. It is also hoped that responsible officials will see that another fight does not happen, and that the proper action is taken in regard to the Wake-Carolina brawl.

Plans are underway now to enable interested members of the student body to see the films of the Carolina-Wake Forest game.

Auburn Jumps To 2nd; State Tied For 6th

(By The Associated Press)

The University of North Carolina Tar Heels vaulted to first place Monday in The Associated Press national basketball rankings.

The Tar Heels moved from second place last week to first this week in the wake of Kentucky's upset loss to Mississippi State. Unbeaten Auburn also capitalized on Kentucky's 66-58 setback, jumping from fourth to second.

Kentucky's Wildcats thus were loosened from the hold they had taken on first place in The Associated Press weekly ranking poll back in mid-January. Kentucky landed in third place.

Mississippi State, which went on to trounce Florida 105-68 in its second game of the week, climbed from tenth to fifth in the ratings. Two weeks ago, State was 11th. But the sports writers and broadcasters, who had been leery of going overboard on the Maroons because of their comparatively soft schedule, apparently were convinced by a 20-1 record and second place in the Southeastern Conference standings.

Only one of last week's top 10 teams retained unchallenged the place it held in last week's ratings. That was eighth-place St. Louis, which gained second place in the Missouri Valley Conference during the week by knocking off Bradley, Michigan State, winner over well-regarded Michigan entoure to the Big Ten title, regained a place in the top bracket at the expense of West Virginia.

The teams are ranked on points awarded on the the basis of 10 for each first place vote, nine for second, etc. This resulted in a tie between Cincinnati and North Carolina State for sixth place, each with 569 points, and gave Bradley a one-point edge over West Virginia for tenth, 160-159. Rankings are based on games through last Saturday.

North Carolina was named first on 38 of 113 ballots cast by writers and broadcasters in every section of the U. S. The Tar Heels, with a 16-1 record, defeated Wake Forest and Chicago Loyola last week.

High scoring Auburn, an easy winner over Florida and Louisiana State, ran its unbeaten streak to 29, with 18 this season. The Plainsmen drew 20 first place votes and 822 points. Kentucky, bouncing back from its Monday defeat to whip Notre Dame on Saturday, easily topped Kansas State to stop its slide at third place.

NEW FOOTBALLERS

(AP)—An honor student who has captained his high school football team through two seasons has signed a Carolina athletic grant and will enter school here next fall.

He is Jerry Cabe of Brevard, a 215-pound guard, who last fall was on the Wigwam Wisemen All-America High School team.

He was captain of the Brevard football team in both his junior and senior years and is president of the student council. He is an outstanding student and has applied for a Morehead scholarship. He has reached the finals in that competition. He plans to study medicine here.

Jerry will join his brother, Tom, on the North Carolina football squad. Tom was a sophomore center last fall.

Carolina Relays Have Good Week

Carolina's two-mile relay team of John Sylvester, Wayne Bishop, Cowles Liipfert, and Dave Scurlock returned home Sunday after completing a successful three-day stay in Yankee land where they ran in indoor meets at Philadelphia and New York.

In the Philadelphia Inquirer Meet on Friday, the Tar Heels, running in the above order, took the lead early and held it for the majority of the race with only Manhattan providing any strong competition. Syracuse finished third and Villanova fourth. The winning time was a fine 7:46.4 for the 12 lap-to-the-mile track.

Saturday the team boarded a train to New York, ran that night in the NYAC Meet, and finished third benind Georgetown and Holy Cross in 7:51.

Coach Dale Ranson expressed extreme satisfaction with the performance of the team stating that "the boys simply were not quite ready to run two big races on consecutive nights."

Swimmers Host State Today

Carolina's varsity swimmers, sporting a fine 9-1 record on the season, play host to old rival N. C. State here tonight at 8 o'clock in Bowman Gray Memorial Pool.

The Tar Heels have an unbeaten 3-0 record in conference play. Last time out they crushed VMI for the second time, 52-34.

Heavily counted on tonight will be the two undefeated sophs, Harry Bloom and Randy Dodson. Bloom usually brings home two gold medals, one in the 220-freestyle and the other in the 440-freestyle. Dodson is unbeaten in his specialty, the 200-butterfly.

Also counted on will be backstroker Bob Hunter, sprinter Brent Nash, and diver Dick Cashwell.

The Tar Heels will depend also on the fine relay teams; the 400-medley relay team andt he 400-freestyle relay squad.

Carolina had a 26-meet winning streak broken by Florida two weeks ago, but since then have rolled over two opponents with ease.

After the State meet tonight, Carolina has only Maryland to face before the ACC championships begin here in Chapel Hill on February 26.

Nichols Advises On Injury Cases

By EDWARD NEAL RINER

Preparing the case personal injury before the trial is just as important as presenting the case, according to Heck Lecturer, Perry Nichols, in his address "The Personal Injury Workshop: From Selection of the Jury through Final Argument," Tuesday night.

Speaking in the auditorium of the Institute of Goverment, the prominent Miami attorney named two main steps in preparing the personal injury case: interview with client and investigation. He indicated that winning a case depends 75% on investigation, 15% on court procedure and 10% on luck.

Nichols emphasized that in all cases both the client and the witnesses should tell the truth.

Bookles of procedure for clients and witnesses are also good ways to help a case. This way they know what to say to certain kinds of questions and the attorney "knows the answers to questions that the witness knows." One booklet is a list of do's and don't's in the courtroom. For instance, "never use the word 'insurance' in a courtroom."

Nichols gave some of his opinions on what makes a good juror and why. He said, "Do not have a woman on the jury if the plaintiff is a woman; they find fault with each other readily . . . young women are real harsh . . . older women are more sympathetic."

Race should be considered in the selection of a jury also. Nichols stated, "Jews are more sympathetic . . . German-Dutch people are not good . . . the Negro is sympathetic and easy to deal with."

In arguing the case, he stressed that the events should be given in the order in which they occurred, and the attorney should "stay on high points and strong points . . . facts don't lie." Liabilities and damages are being put before the jury; therefore, the attorney should get the jurors to think in the term of money. This can be done by listing liabilities and damages, by comparing liabilities on things other than human beings — "an Angus bull sold recently for $85,000; is a human being worth that?" — and by analysising handicaps in the terms of the jurors' lives.

Nichols used demonstrations and visual aids throughout the lecture. He limits his practice to trial work and specializes only in the plaintiff's side of personal injury litigation.

Grigg Claims Editor 'Misrepresented' Bill

By DEE DANIELS

Dave Grigg told the Universtiy Party last night that his resolution, introduced last week at Student Legislature, was "terribly misrep resented" by the editor of The Daily Tar Heel.

Titled " a resolution of policy concerning subsidiary organizations of the Student Legislature," Grigg claimed the bill is by no means a political issue, but it was made so by The Daily Tar Heel. "It is just one of the many bills passing through Legislature concerning its conduct," explained John Minter, party chairman.

Grigg said the editor wrote that the bill was furthering fraternity issues, but Grigg himself represents a dormitory district. He feels the editor is assuming that fraternity interests oppose dormitory interests.

Grigg further remarked, "If it becomes a party issue, it will not pass."

Also under discussion were deferred rush, abolition of discriminatory clauses and the changing of the judicial system to the effect that the IFC would have no judicial powers.

According to Minter, the pa i questions the ultimate aim of all three.

Minter continued, "Student Legislature certainly has the right to do these things and work toward them. But the ultimate aim we question is that of making fraternities and sororities into dining clubs. We don't think these are the feelings of the Student Party or of the campus as a whole, but rather of a few idealistic 'glory-seekers' who have had traumatic experiences with fraternities and sororities. Therefore, they are advocating these things."

Discussion of a legislative bill, concerning the possibility of a self-liquidating state loan for a new Student Union, was postponed in light of new information which is not definite yet.

UP election plans include committees in the fraternities, sororities, and dormitories to get out votes; a publicity committee, and a banquet, tentatively set for March 12, to "kick off" the spring campaign.

Suggestions for the party platform were discussed and the executive committee will decide upon a definite platform for presentation for approval of the party after nominations are completed.

Minter claims, "This year we're going to win the elections. There's no question in my mind about it."

Budget Criticism Intensifies

By DAVE JONES

"The governor and the Budget Bureau don't realize what a great University we have here in Chapel Hill," said Dr. B. L. Ullman, Kenan professor and head of the Department of Classics, when asked to comment on the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations for the 1959-61 Biennium.

"Our University is one of the greatest in the country and we ought to sacrifice to keep it up," he said. "Our department stands high and we must continue to do our share to uphold the integrity of the Univesrity."

Dr. Ullman listed three areas in which he felt the University must not be neglected or forced to retrogress. They are: "faculty salaries, for without increases we can't hold or attract people; new appointments, for without them we can't increase; and library, for it has to be a good library, and ours is still a long way from being what it should be."

He said he had been doing research at Duke, and next week he was going to Harvard to use their library. "I was not being serious, but I threatened to fly to London to use the library at the British Museum. It has some manuscripts that I could use."

Prof. R. L. Frautschi mentioned four fields in which he felt emphasis should be placed, and that cuts should not be allowed to impede. One is salaries, especially in the higher levels. He said senior members of the faculty are particularly penalized by inflation and other cost of living factors. He said he was afraid that a merit system of increases might make the raises a "political football" and he preferred across the board increases instead. Other areas mentioned were the library, which is the "heart of the University." He said the UNC library is not the

Lady Has Gap In Plate As Reminder Of Chat

By MARY ALICE ROWLETTE

A New Jersey license plate led to a gap in the dental plate of Mrs. Leland Olds of Washington, D. C., Sunday, Feb. 8.

The license plate belonged to the car of a UNC student, who, with two other students, was in Washington on that date.

Mrs. Olds called the Central Records last week and related her tale of woe, according to Mrs. Jean Hart, who works in the office.

Mrs. Olds said she was walking down a Washington street when she noticed the car stopped at a red light. As she is originally from New Jersey, she said, "Hello, Jersey, how are you?"

The three boys in the car answered her and she chatted with them a few seconds and found that they attend UNC.

Then the light changed and the car drove off. It was then that Mrs. Olds realized that one of her false teeth had fallen out.

A policeman stopped traffic, the boys were called back and they and several other gentlemen searched for the tooth.

Finally, one of the boys handed her a small white object which she thought was the missing tooth. However, after the boys were gone, Mrs. Olds put on her glasses and found that she had a small white pebble instead of a tooth.

Mrs. Olds said that the car was probably a 1950 Dodge and described one of the boys as about five feet, eight inches and dark, another as a blond who "looked like a football player" and the other as "so brilliant" she just couldn't remember what he looked like.

Any student who knows anything about the tooth may contact Mrs. Olds at 3236 McKinly St., N. W.; Washington 15, D. C.

'Y' Adds More Empasis

By BEN TAYLOR

YM-YWCA activities will take on new emphasis during the next few weeks in an attempt to "help more students help themselves by working together in a spirit of Christianity," Y officials said last week.

The Y, which reaches into almost every phase of campus activities, will utilize its member groups to urge students to join the Y and "let us help them in preparing themselves for a fuller job in life after graduation."

The YM-YWCA is a versatile accumulation of executive committees, cabinets, advisors, professional staffs and several hundred participating students.

The volunteer student staff of 12 to 15 people, the advisory group of Claude Shotts, Bill Carse and Miss Anne Queen, and the scores of students participating on cabinets and committees are all portions of the Y organization.

ADMINISTRATION

Two executive committees of 12 administrative officers meet weekly to carry on the business and administration work of the associations. Two cabinets of 46 officers and committee chairmen meet weekly to plan and direct the program of activities.

Over 200 committee members take responsibility for leadership and committee planning in the 25 active committees. An Advisory Board of 15 non-student and eight student members meet monthly to oversee, advise and stabilize the program.

Its scope of activities runs the gamut from the successful Freshman Camp and the publication of the Carolina Directory to the Graduate Club.

COMMITTEES

Its committees are numerous and varied. There is the dual-functioning Human Relations Committee, the Worships and Vespers Committee where the "women only" rule has been the norm, and the very successful student-run Finance Committee.

All in all, there are over the dozen separate committees or working groups within the joint organization.

Publicity officials of the YM-YWCA have planned explanatory articles on the organizations most important committees, aims and personnel.

Heel's No. One Rating Up For Grabs As Pack Invades Woollen Gym

All Tickets Are Gone; Game To Be Televised

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The feature game of the entire nation comes off here tonight at 8:30 when N. C. State's revenge-minded Wolfpack invades Chapel Hill for a rematch with Carolina's Tar Heels, the number one team in the country.

In the last running of the AP Poll, State was tied for sixth with Cincinnati and Carolina was first. This sets the stage for State, as the last time the two teams met the Pack was number one and lost to Carolina in overtime, 72-68.

Carolina has a 16-1 season record, its only loss coming against Michigan State in the Dixie Classic. Since then the Tar Heel have won 10 straight.

State has an 18-2 overall record, and has bowled over seven straight opponents since its loss to Carolina.

HEELS LEAD ACC

The Tar Heels are at the top of the heap in the ACC with a 10-0 mark, and the Wolfpack is a close second at 12-1. Tonight's game could well decide who will get the number one seeding in the ACC tournament, as this is State's last conference match.

Woollen Gym' 4,800 seats have been sold out for weeks, but the game is being carried by five North Carolina stations on regional television. In addition, it is being piped overseas to the Armed Force by the Tobacco Sports Network radio crew.

In its last game, State completely ran over Maryland's defending conference champions 53-377 in Raleigh. Carolina whipped Loyola of Chicago 76-57 its last time out.

The five Tar Heel starters, including two sophomores, continue to average in double figures. York Larese leads the parade at 16.5. Next comes Doug Moe (13.4), Lee Shaffer (13.4), Harvey Salz (11.4) and Dick Wepley (10.9).

RICHTER LEADS WOLFPACK

State is led by the number one scorer and rebounder in the ACC, big John Richter. Richter is averaging 16.9 points per game, followed by little Lou Pucillo at 14.4. George Stepanovich, Bob MacGillvary and Dan Englehardt round out the Pack's starting five.

Although much strategy was discussed before the last Carolina-State game, a sellout at Reynolds Coliseum, the game developed into the traditional Tar Heel-Pack game complete with fast breaking.

Since that game, Carolina's sparkling soph duo of Larese and Moe have each had a big night. Larese dumped in 32 against Maryland and Moe pumped through 32 against Duke.

State's latest big scorer is reliable rebounder Stepanovich, who hit his season high of 20 against Maryland Saturday.

Carolina brings the league leading offensive team into the game tonight and State will be facing the problem of stopping the slick-shooting Heels. The Tar Heels are averaging 74 points per game while limiting the opponents to only 62.

Satellite Launching Goes Off Smoothly

WASHINGTON — UP — An American satellite carrying a miniature, mechanical weather observer flashed into orbit around the earth yesterday.

The basketball-sized satellite is equipped to check up and report back on the earth's cloud cover and help spot storm clouds or tornadoes.

The satellite, Vanguard II, itself may whirl on through space for years or even centuries. But the batteries for its weather eyes — a pair of photoelectric cells — can operate continuously for only a fortnight.

And at first it may take two weeks to process the information relayed back to earthbound scientist by the 20-inch, 21½-pound globe.

STRIDE FORWARD

Yet the launching of the satellites was an epochal stride toward using man-made moons to help improve short and long-range weather forecasts. Still farther in the future is a possibility that satellites may help humans with the control of weather.

Dr. Richard Porter, head of the Salary Raises For Faculty Are One-Fifth Amount Asked

By NEIL MURPHY

Carolina professors and instructors will receive the raises requested for them by the administration if the recommendations of the Advisory Budget Commission are followed.

Of a requested $694,862 for faculty salary adjustments and increases only $147,724 was left by the advisory budget commission for the years 1959-60.

President William Friday said, "The overall increase in salaries seems to be about two per cent over present appropriations. We have requested a hearing before the joint appropriations committee and at that time we shall stress the great urgency of increasing the appropriation for faculty salaries, pointing out that this has our number one priority in the 'B' budget."

Presently the University operates spending $5,046,537 for academic salaries. This does not include the Division of Health Affairs.

The University has asked for $5,221,072; but $5,069,615 was recommended for 1959-60. For 1960-61 the University asked for $5,338,322; but $5,162,539 was recommended. The Advisory Budget Commission recommended less in 1960-61 than the University said was the minimum necessary to maintain UNC a its present level in 1959-60.

These salary increases can be compared to a 2.7 per cent increase in the cost of living increase from December of 1957 until December of 1958.

In the 'B' or improvements budget the University asked for $52,300 for each of the next two years to be spent on additional positions.

Orientation Committee To Get 18 Appointees

Orientation Committee to work with Chairman David Parker on a schedule for the fall orientation program.

Applications for committee members will be received through Friday in the student government office. Interviews with students will be held next week.

Eighteen Carolina students will be appointed next week to the Specific work of the committee will include planning such events as the Library and Planetarium tours and Merchants Day. Preparation of the orientation counselor's handbood and folder is another function of the committee.

As soon as the 18-member committee is named, one of its first jobs will be selection of orientation counselors to work during the fall with new students.

Within the Orientation Committee, these special positions are open: men's coordinator, women's coordinator, Nursing School coordinator, Pharmacy School coordinator, secretary and treasurer.

Orientation Chairman Parker said Tuesday the committee is being elected earlier this year so that the group may be able to prepare for an orientation program that will appeal to more individual students. To achieve this, Parker has several specific plans in mind: to conduct a more thorough training program for orientation counselors, to have continued the counselor-new student relationship past the one week of orientation and to include the men's dormitory graduate counselors as an effort to increase the graduate counselors' significance to new students throughout the year.

When students come for interviews next week, Parker has offered this advice: "They should have ideas about what they would add to the orientation program and be willing to give many hours of work."

Between five and seven members of the Orientation Committee will be coeds, Parker said

'Globes' Play For IDC's Annual Dance

The Globes from Durham will be playing for the annual IDC Sweetheart Dance Friday night in the basement of Cobb Dormitory.

A highlight of the dance will be the announcement and crowning of the 1959 Interdormitory Council Sweetheart. Selection of the sweetheart will be made Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial.

The dance Friday night will be free for all Carolina students. In charge of arrangements for the Sweetheart Contest and dance is Dave Alexander.

Cosmopolitans Debate Castro, 'New Cuba'

Cuba will be deabted at Sunday's meeting of the Cosmopolitan Club at 4 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memomrial.

Manuel Serro, a student just back from Cuba, and other Cuban students will take part in the discussion. In addition, students in Latin American history and political science and law students have been invited to sit in on a "judgment" of the Castro regime.

Refreshments will be served at the meeting.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Virginia Louise Crawley, Ellen Rae Smith, Jerry Sandra White, Sophie Meyers Martin, Mary Hannah Finch, James Edward Fox, Richard Curtis Bisbee, Howard Glenn Doyle and Michael Criss McGuckin.

Governor's Budget

The governor of this fair state is a Democrat, and as a Democrat, he has often lambasted the Eisenhower administration as it is customary for good political Democrats to do.

He has pointed out so many faults of the Eisenhower administration and done so well that one would think he were campaigning for office. Among his criticisms of the President has been his criticism of the President's financial policies.

And how rightly the governor criticized the financial policies of the President who recommended a neatly balanced budget and no new taxation to meet the needs in education and foreign aid. Indeed, the Eisenhower budget was bad and as currently proposed, it would do great harm to the nation.

Yet, it is amazing that the same critic of the President would pursue a policy identical to that of the President, for indeed what the governor presented to the General Assembly by way of the Advisory Budget Commission was no more or less than a neatly balanced budget without extra taxation and inadequate to meet the demands of the state.

But it is amazing what no new taxation and a balanced budget will do to someone's voting strength. Indeed, it appears that with the new budget the governor's campaign for whatever offices he is seeking has already begun. While the governor is running, it might be a good idea if he looked backward, for he might see that his balanced budget has balanced the state's leadership in various areas on the tenuous fulcrum of medicority.

Woman's College

As the Greensboro Daily News has pointed out Women's College is feeling the effects of the budget as much as any other school.

By some quirk Woman's College actually ended up with less money recommended for the next biennium than they had for the last.

According to one Daily News staff member, one of the most peculiar quirks of the entire budget was the fact that during the past two years the college was operating at a $100,000 deficit and that funds to make up for this deficit in the future were put on the B budget by either Woman's College officials or Consolidated University officials. This money is obviously necessary to maintain the WC operation at the present level during a period of growth, and consequently it should have been put on the A budget. However, it was not, and hence Woman's College in years of growth in actually losing money.

Apparently the effects of Consolidation are felt everywhere. Indeed, the Advisory Budget Commission should be given better material to work with, for although their cuts mean harm to the state as a whole, when the operating budget does not hold enough to meet current operating levels, then, if a period of wholesale B budget cutting begins, the chances to be able to operate on a par are very slim.

Absentee Ballot

There is a proposal currently before the General Assembly to eliminate the civilian absentee ballot. It has particular pertinence here in Chapel Hill for all those students who consider their home town their place of residence, for their franchise along with that of other citizens will be taken away.

It is perfectly within the bounds of the General Assembly's authority to set statutory qualifications that voters must have, but to disenfranchise a group of people because absentee balloting is open to abuse is not their prerogative.

The General Assembly may act with wisdom on the proposal by defeating it or by so modifying it that all citizens will be permitted to vote and all safeguards against fraud were taken.

Machines

The president of the IDC has informed the editor that machines were returned to Parker and Teague dormitories last week, but that the machine rooms were changed.

The editor stands partly corrected for his editorial on Sunday, but he is still scouting for cigarettes around the campus.

The University Needs More Capital

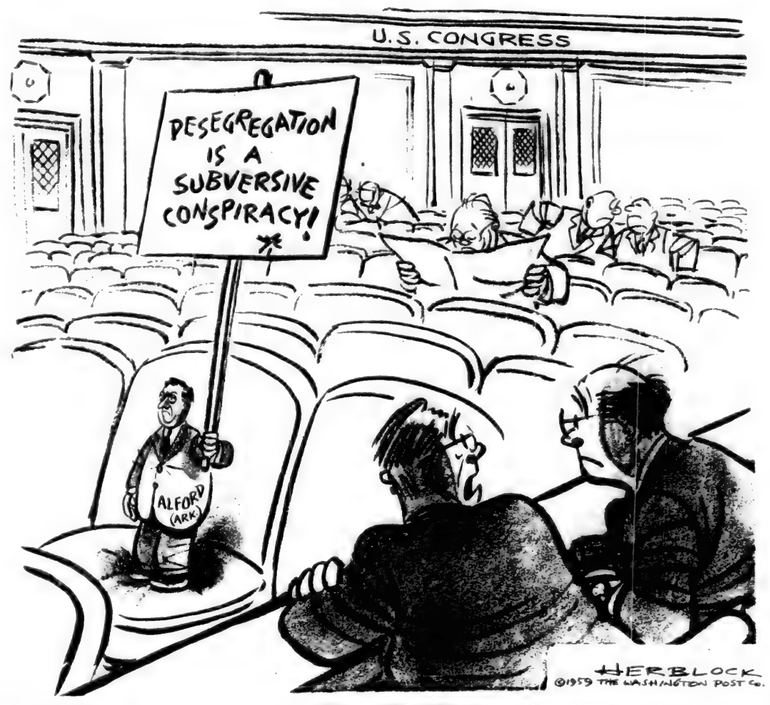
Editor:

I am the person quoted in your edition of February 12 and condemned in your editorial of the following day. Having seen other verbal statements of mine mangled in publication I follow, when possible, the cowardly principle of withholding my name until I learn with what sentiments it is to be identified. On the whole your reporter has done well, and I acknowledge that his summary represents substantially what I said in the classroom last Wednesday.

I have been considering whether to answer your editorial. The Tar Heel being a student publication, I am disposed to leave it to the students. But you raise an allegation against the University which I seem to confirm by my silence, and I do not wish to be a party, however unintentionally, to the demonstration of an untruth. There is no atmosphere of intimidation at Chapel Hill. If there were, the professors would say so. They are not the browbeaten cravens that you make them out. Accordingly, I enclose a signed statement on the report of the Advisory Budget Commission. You may publish it if you wish.

GEORGE V. TAYLOR

"He's Still Filling the Seat — in a Way"



Anyone who feels a concern for the University will be interested in the recommendations of the Advisory Budget Commission for the coming biennium. Those at interest include the administration, the faculty, the alumni, the students, and the parents of the students. Also involved are those people in the state who look forward to having their children study at Chapel Hill. The following statement is submitted by a faculty member writing as a friend of the University. Like all faculty members, he has intimate knowledge of day-to-day problems of instruction on the graduate and undergraduate levels. But this statement is in no sense a declaration of the faculty or the University.

It is an error to suppose that the University can be kept at its present level of excellence simply by renewing the existing budget and adding some classrooms, a dormitory, and a cafeteria. The present budget for personnel and resources is a deficient budget which the University has survived only through the genius of its administration, the patience of its staff, and the generosity of its friends. Promising young professors added during the last two years have been attracted by expectations rather than existing arrangements and facilities, and these expectations cannot be satisfied with facilities daily becoming more obsolete. The University's need for personnel, equipment, and books is like the need of any progressive and expanding enterprise, and to ignore this need halts growth and crushes the vitality of the organization. This is a principle well known in business and the professions. It applies here. Those who stand by the University in a time of rigid budgets, inflation, and disappointment cannot be expected to maintain their enthusiasm indefinitely. Nor can they be expected to remain when confronted with attractive offers from other institutions.

The University has an enviable reputation, which it acquired about thirty years ago. During the last decade it has become increasingly difficult to sustain that reputation either through scholarly production or excellent teaching. Rising numbers of students, many of them unprepared for collegiate work, impose a growing burden upon the faculty and administration. Consider, for example, a class of fifty students. At the final examination each students write for two or three hours. The resulting mass of material requires at least twenty-five hours to read and evaluate with the precision that fair grading requires. If term papers are assigned (and students need this kind of work more than any other) more than a hundred hours will be consumed in criticizing them. Instructors have three or four courses a term. In some of them enrollment reaches a hundred. Under these conditions how can one give individual office attention to those who fill these crowded classrooms, or even get to know their names?

The obligation to students is paramount. But how can an instructor now fulfill that obligation? And what becomes of his time for research?

One solution is to increase the faculty in proportion to the growth of the student body. The recommendation now pending proposes only a negligible increase.

A second solution is to find "new methods" of instruction, gadgets and routines that cost less than methods in which we now have confidence. In my survey courses I have already been obliged to use some of these "new methods." These include multiple-choice finals, fewer hour exams, the use of graduate readers, and the elimination of outside papers. Every one of these devices is unsatisfactory, and this is true of the graduate readers, even when they are careful, equitable, and professionally prepared, as most of them are. The student has a right to see his papers graded by the instructor. At Chapel Hill this is becoming impossible, even in the upper colleges.

Having taught in two midwestern factories of instruction where these devices are in use, I find the undergraduates and even the graduates short-changed. The impersonality and uniformity of these teeming academic centers crush individualism, initiative, and spontaneity and eliminate all means of developing the critical powers of the students, who, in my judgment, are being groomed only for a passive role in some collectivistic social pattern. The big lecture and the machine-graded examination are more suited to the adjustment of automatons than to the development of critical and imaginative minds. Televised instruction, hopefully urged by many, will easily extirpate whatever individuality remains. If these "new methods" are to be adopted in the University the public must understand that they constitute a poor substitute for education, particularly for students with talent and drive, and for the average students they insure a bad preparation for the responsibilities of work and citizenship. In effect this means substandard training for those who cannot raise the tuition for a private school, never a popular principle in this state.

As for the Library, its condition is critical and seems likely to become worse. Having purchased little during the the 'thirties, we have been unable to recover our competitive position in the South, and we are now buying essential items at high prices which we could have purchased for much less when they were first published. This is not economic. Increasingly, faculty and graduates have had to rely upon inter-library loans, particularly from Duke, and our borrowings from Duke, I am told, far exceed their borrowings from us. It is unwise to permit the University to become dependent upon an arrangement which is no longer truly reciprocal or to assume that our generous neighbor can afford to perpetuate this kindness. The loans cost money, and with the funds required for processing, postage, and insurance one might purchase at least a third of the books exchanged in this fashion—if they were still on sale.

Economies at Chapel Hill have been costly. It is less expensive to maintain an adequate library by annual purchases than to rebuild it after a few years of neglect. Similarly, it costs less to sustain the prestige this University now enjoys than it will to rebuild that prestige ten years from now.

This is not a wealthy state. No one has a right to recommend appropriations for luxuries and ornaments, and no one should demand tax increases to support frivolities. On the other hand, the people have a right to know what the new budget will mean to the future of the University and to take this into account in reaching a decision.

Dizzy Gillespie: Humor With A Point

Peter B. Young

(The writer of the following article has known Dizzy Gillespie for more than 10 years. In a rather sudden bit of impromptu mockery Gillespie introduced Young at the Germans concert as "my brother. He always makes the scene." —Editor.)

When the funny little man waddles up to the microphone, the silly little goatee tinged now with some distinguished gray, the bell of his horn tilting at a preposterous 45 degree angle towards the ceiling, any audience immediately feels warm sympathy and identification coupled with an uneasy sensation that the world of comfortable middle class values is about to be turned topsy turvy.

The Dizzy One surveys his audience, thinks of the surprise he has in store for them, and breaks into what can only be described as Gillespie's Gutteral Giggle.

Then: "I want to apologize for being a little late. We've just come from playing a benefit show for a very worthy cause, a fine organization — The Klan." The audience howls, and Gillespie, encouraged now, spins the routine on and on, dragging in every organization from the B'nai Brith to the NAACP, and concluding with: "It was really a delightful affair. It was held in the Central High School Gymnasium at Little Rock."

Gillespie picks up his horn and slides into one of his complicated solos. Unaccountably, a bizarre version of "Dixie" emerges from the cascade of notes. Nobody in the audience recognizes the sacred national anthem of the South. Is this not laughs and a half?

It's spiritual time now. All "darkies" play spirituals. But Gillespie's spiritual is entitled, "Swing Low, Sweet Cadillac." ("I looked over Jordan and what did I see/ Comin' for to carry me home/An El Dorado comin' after me/Comin' for to carry me home.") In a savage burlesque of the white sociologist, Gillespie explains: "The mores of the society have changed."

It is also a well known fact that rhythm is in their African blood. This necessitates an equally savage burlesque of jungle chants. But now the nature of Gillespie's dilemna is painfully clear.

The Dizzy One has the highest respect for both spirituals and the original tribal culture of his African forebears. His intent is not to satirize these earlier manifestations of Negro artistry; his intent is to satirize the stereotyped white response. Inevitably, though, the satire spills over and The Dizzy One is in the uncomfortably ambivalent position of attacking his own roots at the same time that he needles the dominant whites.

But if the Gillespie dilemna is at times painful in its ambivalence, it is as nothing compared to the dilemna which he poses for American whites.

"And now we'd like to play a number I picked up in India when I was over there representing you. That's right—the State Department sent me to Africa, the Middle East and Asia to represent you." What a hideous irony it is that The Dizzy One at home in the U.S.A. is not allowed to "represent" so much as a precinct. But when the nation is in trouble, when somebody other than a cookie-pushing diplomat is needed to tell our story to the teeming colored millions of Africa and Asia, then the State Department frantically recruits the great Negro artists like Marian Anderson and The Dizzy One to "represent" not just a precinct but the entire United States of America.

I would give anything to know what flashed through The Dizzy One's mind when he received his State Department invitation. I can only speculate that the sequence of his thought went something like this: "Lawsy (heh, heh) them white folks in the big house on the hill must be in (you should excuse the expression) DARK trouble. Heh, heh. So now they want ole Diz to go out there and stem the tide of colored nationalism. Well, I won't go. I'm glad they're in trouble, and it's a little late in the day to be calling on me. On the other hand—it's my country too. And if they're in trouble then I'm in trouble too. Oh, the hell with it . . . I'll go. Besides, there may be splendid chuckles for all."

The crowd was gone, the lights were dimmed. The boys in the band were packing their gear. Gillespie and I were in the 'Y' building. I was on the phone to Eastern Air Lines trying to make a reservation to New York for Gillespie and his men.

The nice female clerk required the names of the men in "Mr. Gillespie's party." I handed the phone to Dizzy.

In impeccable, pearl-shaped Oxford tones Dizzy said: "Gillespie here," and proceeded to give, beginning with "S. Jones," the names that were needed.

A sudden frown flitted across The Dizzy One's face. As the leader, he has a responsibility for his men. He lapsed into an extreme plantation dialect and asked the clerk: "Will the restaurant feed my musicians?"

The shift from Oxford to Magnolia was too much for the clerk. She completely misunderstood the purport of The Dizzy One's question. "Sir," she replied, "Our restaurant is always open."

Gillespie hung up the phone disgustedly.

"Dizzy," I said, "Why didn't you simply tell the lady you were colored when you asked about the restaurant?"

"Man, that's exactly the point!" The Dizzy One was almost shouting. "That's exactly what I won't say! Not because I'm ashamed of being colored, oh no! I'm proud of being colored! I found out last night in Cheraw that I'm descended from an African chief! Me, a chief! How about that! So I won't do this mealy-mouthed 'I'm colored' bit to get a meal. Nevertheless, my boys and I have got to eat. So, in a roundabout way I tried to find out whether the restaurant at the terminal would serve us. But, unfortunately, the chick was not wise. And since our plane leaves very shortly, we will just have to go over there and hope for the best."

★ ★ ★

The Dizzy One told the audience at Memorial Hall that I was his brother. Just prior to this bit of familial joviality he had bowed slavishly when I, in the role of the generous white boss, had handed him his mute which he had inconveniently left behind in the dressing room.

This is "humor" with a terrible sting. The only way to take the sting out of it is to accept the fact that I am his "brother." We are both passengers in the same leaky American boat. Regardless of what the politicians say, our destinies are hopelessly intertwined.

Our brotherhood with The Dizzy One is currently a rather tense partnership of necessity. With luck, with the magic of The Dizzy One's incomparable horn, with a little bit of magic of our own, we can transform this tense brotherhood of necessity into the genuine brotherhood of choice—and love.

We will wipe away the guilt and the pain. We will force The Dizzy One to concoct new jokes, new notes, for his growing American saga.

Editor:

As a new student at UNC, I was very thrilled to be able to get one of the few tickets for the Germans jazz concert. It seemed to me that $4.50 was a very reasonable price to hear three of the jazz greats. Now it is debatable whether or not the money was wasted.

First, Memorial Hall does not have sufficient sound reproduction to give jazz its true mood and flavor; the acoustics are really terrible. And, who ever heard of great jazz in the afternoon? This is something which I have only seen at the Newport Jazz Festival, and there they are careful not to have any of the great names billed for the afternoon shows.

Secondly, due to the fact that there is a restricted number of tickets for Germans, why did hundred or more people have to stand throughout the entire performance. Many of us stood when our dates sat in any seat the ushers could find for them.

I would venture to say that those people who heard the concert via the windows of Memorial Hall had as much, if not more enjoyment from the show than we "standers" had. They could at least smoke, move, and listen without fee, while we paid $4.50 to sit or stand, cramped in the aisles of Memorial Hall for three hours.

Apparently, someone did a pretty good job of arranging the entire jazz concert; there is certainly room for improvement during the planning of Spring Germans.

Editor:

These remarks are meant as a reply to the editorial entitled "Dulles," which appeared in The Daily Tar Heel on Sunday, Feb. 15. For months now the writer of this "letter to the editor" has endeavored to maintain more than a tolerant disposition toward the editorial outbursts on foreign affairs and Mr. Dulles which have appeared in this newspaper. Such a disposition was due to a knowledge of the editor's genuine and active concern in relation to the problems the United States faces in the world today, and to a profound belief in the value of constructive criticism. But often inherent within the editorial comments by The Tar Heel editor were the marks of irresponsibility and the inescapable signs of a pseudo-expert trying to give out with "the latest and the best" on what this country should or should not do, or should not have done, in the realm of foreign policy —and never did the editor miss a chance to "cut" Secretary Dulles. Such an attitude and approach on the part of the editor are below him

Certainly one may disagree with Mr. Dulles' philosophy as a Secretary of State, and may criticize him for running what at times has appeared to be a one-man organization. Furthermore, it may be said that Mr. Dulles is an impassioned reformer and an evangelist who has brought his gospel to a world which too often has found his preachaments to be rigidly conceived.

But it is quite a different thing indeed to say that the present Secretary of Sate "has helped the United States to fall from a pedestal of world supremacy to a position where the United States can only react to Soviet advances." Who is the editor of The Daily Tar Heel, or any other American, to make such a statement? Better to use a little prudence along with recurring radical outbursts. For too long, the editor and others have failed to understand that there are forces at work in the world which are independent of U. S. control, which present inescapable problems, and which are bound to affect adversely, at times, the conduct of American foreign policy. Such forces will never be adequately dealt with until frustrated individuals and groups cease to place the blame for all our troubles in the world at the feet of Secretary Dulles, and to regard every problem or difficulty in foreign policy as a disaster. The role of the United States in the world today is certainly not one of world supremacy. We are experiencing the burgeoning, the coming into its own, of the U.S.S.R., an independent and strong nation over which we have no control. The dynamic forces emanating from this phenomenon coupled with the communist ideology, and along side of the revolutions in the very existence of the people of Asia and Africa, lay before our nation the greatest challenge. We may desire a future Secretary of State who deals more in specifics and leave the moralizing to others, but we cannot expect him to be "master of the world situation," as many seem to expect of Mr. Dulles. Rather we can only hope that this nation will become better able to channel, to check, and to "season" those forces without our borders in a responsible and constructive manner. This is not a defeatist attitude, or a call for a rally to the status quo. Rather it demands that we do all we can in step with the times and with the dynamics of our Judaeo-Christian-American tradition providing the motivation, means and end.

The editor of the Daily Tar Heel maintains that "Mr. Dulles has not been a good Secretary of State" — and many would share this view. I, for one, believe that history will tell a different story. I, for one, believe that the present also tells a far different story. Certainly no one would question the unbounded energy and great courage of Mr. Dulles as Secretary of State. He has been an implacable foe of Communism and a true champion of the freedom of man. But more than these generalities, I am convinced that he has understood the behavior and designs of the Soviet leaders and has successfully met the Soviet threat with all the means he had at his disposal in various areas of the world. He has kept this counry on a realistic plane in dealing with the Soviets. He has faced formidable pressures from all sides while, with some success, charting the firm but adaptable course of American foreign policy among the young nations of the world. He has had the burdensome distinction of being the architect of American foreign policy in the most critical time of our history.

Mr. Dulles will probably resume his duties as Secretary of State. But if he should not, let it be kept in mind that he will have left behind a legacy of positive leadership which all successors will find difficult to maintain or surpass. Can our society produce men who can "successfully" fill the office of Secretary of State in the future?

best in the area, thus one less reason why a new professor should choose Chapel Hill. The final two areas were student faculty ratios, and the question of teaching large masses, or restricted groups that can enjoy high quality instruction.

Kenan Prof. of Greek, Emeritus, H. Epps said, "In my judgment, the thing is all out of kilter, and the way that they cut faculty salaries is just backwards. The faculty should be their first consideration, then I'd go down the line and build buildings and so forth with what is left."

As to the areas in which he felt emphasis should be made, Professor Epps cited good faculty, good library and labs and a good student body. "I have been here since 1912, and I think that I know what made this University great. I think that they need to keep it that way."

Prof. Russell Is Lecturer In Humanities

Professor Harry K. Russell of the UNC Department of English will be Humanities Faculty Lecturer for the spring semester. The lecture on the topic "The Fictional World" is scheduled for 8 p..m. Tuesday, Feb. in Carroll Hall.

The lecturer, whose courses in modern fiction have been distinguished among the department's offerings, says he plans "an examination of the distinctions that can be drawn between the world set up in fiction and the world of fact."

Professor Russell, a graduate of Davidson College, came to Chapel Hill after three years of teaching at the American University of Beirut, Syria. He received his Ph.D. degree here and has been professor of English since 1945.

He has served as president of the Virginia-North Carolina Section of the College English Association, was co-author in 1945 of the book, "A State University Survey the Humanities," and in 1948 was editor with Donald A. Stauffer and William Wells of "Literature in English."

Game On WUNC Radio

WUNC Radio will present a play-by-play description of the State-Carolina basketball game tonight at 8 o'clock. This will mark the first basketball broadcast handled by the station.

Tonight's broadcast will mark the second sports broadcast by WUNC. The station carried an account of the Duke-UNC football game in November.

The station, operating on a FM frequency of 91.5, will offer the only non-commercial description of the game.

Statisticians' Defense Role Lecture Topic

How statisticians contribute to the nation's defense weapons program will be brought out in a series of talks to be given weekly here, sponsored by the Department of Mathematical Statistics.

Dr. James M. Dobbie, who gave the first talk Monday afternoon, is a senior scientist with the Operations Evaluation Group, which does operations research for the Chief of Naval Operations through contract with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Other speakers will be senior operations research workers and statisticians from military, governmental and applied research groups.

Dr. Dobbie's discussion used as illustration the problem of possible enemy attack on the U. S., and most effective retaliation with our missile deterrent systems such as the land-based Titan and the submarine-based Polaris.

Before beginning his government work, Dr. Dobbie taught mathematics at Northwestern University. His operations evaluation assignments, dealing especially with air warfare, have included working with Navy forces in the Far East and with British researchers in London.

Vanguard Used In Launching

U. S. Satellite Panel for the International Geophysical Year, said today's launching is "the beginning of a new era in weather research." President Eisenhower congratulated "all who participated in the successful launching."

Out in the reaches of space, the new satellite is streaking along with Russia's huge Sputnik III and three American satellites still aloft. Its two electronic eyes peer out of its shiny shell. Other delicate instruments are packed inside the sphere.

VANGUARD USED

A remodeled version of the Vanguard rocket, which was a 100-million-dollar fizzle in six of seven earlier tries shot the satellite into orbit. Cape Canaveral, Fla., was the launching spot.

Appropriately for this project, a light rain began dripping down frmo a layer of gray strom clouds just before blast-off at 10:55 a.m. EST. Weather was no hindrance to the weather-eye satellite.

The slender, 72-foot rocket carrying it surged upward without a hitch. For 10 seconds it spewed out brilliant orange flames before slicing through the curtain of clouds and disappearing.

FIRING GOES SMOOTHLY

All three stages fired smoothly. Right from the start there was every indication the shoot was completely successful.

Then, two hours and 20 minutes later in Washington, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) announced that Vanguard II was in orbit.

Director T. Keith Glennan told a news conference the artificial moon is circling the earth every 126 minutes at altitudes varying from 335 to 2,050 miles.

First checks showed the speed varies from 14,000 to 18,000 miles an hour, with the satellite traveling faster when it is closer to the earth.

Trailing along behind was the 50-pound third stage of the rocket. The life of the satellite was computed at a decade at least, and perhaps hundreds of years.

SILVERSTEIN COMMENTS

Dr. Abe Silverstein, director of space flight development for NASA, offered those widely varying estimates on the basis of preliminary information.

Speaking of the satellite's lifetime at the news session, Silverstein remarked:

"We don't really know in the high reaches of the atmosphere what the density of the atmosphere is. And until we learn more about the drag on the satellite . . . it is pretty much anyone's guess."

Vanguard II isn't as far out in space as Vanguard I, and hence is in denser atmosphere. The first Vanguard, a grapefruit-sized moonlet launched last March, is expected to last perhaps 1,000 years.

AREA COVERED

Glennan said the new satellite swings 34 degrees north and south of the equator on each circuit of the earth. On that basis, Vanguard II should be able to check up every day on nearly a fourth of the earth's sunlit surface. Most of the area will be north of the equator.

Dr. Joseph Sirey, another NASA official, told newsmen early calculations "indicated that the performance is somewhat in excess of what we had expected."

He explained that the satellite reaches the point in its orbit nearest the earth a little after noon, when it is north of the equator. This means, he said, that conditions are particularly good for recording cloud cover over the sunlit portion of the world.

The photoelectric cells, the scientists said, should be able to distinguish between clouds, oceans, snow-covered ground and other features.

That is because the reflection from each type of surface is different.

INFORMATION HANDLING

The information is handled this way:

The reflections are converted into electrical signals which are tape recorded by the satellite. When ground stations give the right signal the stored information is transmitted to them and again recorded on tape.

The tapes will be rushed to Army Signal Corps experts at Ft. Monmouth, N. J., and fed into machines that will convert the data into crude pictures. The films can be patched together, much as a large aerial photograph is made up.

Dr. Hans Ziegler, director of the Astro-Electronics Division at the Ft. Monmouth Laboratory, said it will take at least two weeks to process the first data and get the first picture of Vanguard's cloud observations.

by the Budget Advisory Board.

"We thought and think now that our request was the minimum amount needed to maintain the present faculty, provide suitable replacements and needed additions to the faculty," said Chancellor William Aycock.

President Friday said "Faculty salaries have been and are now the number one priority subject in the 'B' budget. This stand has been taken by the Board of Trustees and the State Board of Education."

"I think that this item of academic salaries is the most thoughout, conservative item on the budget," said Dean of Faculty James Godfrey. "They (the legislators) don't appear to want the best men here or the best men in the teaching profession. The question is: under present conditions will first rate people come in and stay in the teaching profession?

"Presently there are two sorts of competition. First between schools for men in the teaching profession — we compete with the best schools in the country though not very sucessfully now — and we compete with other professions for men. In this second competition education is losing out.

"The figures of the budget speak for themselves. I don't think he Budget Advisory Board counted on the increased spending of other colleges. We are being threatened with being overtaken and passed by many other schools. Of course we'll have to spend more money!"

RECORD NOW 9-1

Swimmers Breeze Past State College 47-34

Carolina's talent-loaded swimmers breezed past State College 47-34 here last night, putting out just enough effort to assure a victory. The win upped the Dolphins' season record to 9-1.

Coach Pat Earey used tonight's meet as an experimental lab, trying new swimmers in new positions and shifting his regulars around.

Even with the shifting, the Tar Heels had no trouble in capturing eight of the ten events.

The biggest and most surprising star for the night was the latest in a long parade of talented sophomores, Harvey Hamrick. Hamrick anchored the victorious 400-medley relay team, and played a big part in the 400-freestyle relay.

Another new star was Vinnie Simonton, who was ineligible last semester. Simonton, probably the most versatile man on the team, has swum well since the semester break but won his first event last night. He took first place in the 440-freestyle relay, an event usually reserved for Harry Bloom.

Bloom did not swim in that event, but he did in the 220 and, as usual, he won. Bloom is undefeated in the water.

The other unbeaten man on the team, Randy Dodson, again romped to first place in his specialty, the 200-butterfly.

Bob Hunter continued his winning ways in the 200-backstroke, and Dick Cashwell and Jack Rudy put on a diving exhibition, as no State divers were entered.

Carolina's next meet is this Saturday afternoon when Maryland comes to Chapel Hill at 3:00. The Terps have a victory over Wake Forest under their belt and are not to be taken lightly.

THE SUMMARY

400-medley relay: Carolina (Hamrick, Douglas, Simonton and Barett) 4:17.6

220-freestyle: Bloom (C), Adams (S) 2:12.5 50-freestyle: Nash (C), Elams (S), Taborn (S) 24.1 1-meter diving: Rudy (C) and Cashwell (C) 215.4 200-butterfly: Dodson (C) Bittinger (S) 2:17.0 100-freestyle: Kahl (S), Barret (C), Hunter (C), Michaels (S) 2:20.9 440 - freestyle: Simonton (C), Adams (S) 5:11:5. 200 breaststroke: Ernull (S), Douglas (C), Wrye (C) 2:42:9. 400-freestyle relay: State (Adams, Elam, Taborn, Kahl) 3 3:54..0.

VPI Pins Grapplers By 35-3

By JOHN JUSTICE

The hopes of the Carolina wrestling team for a winning season took a dip Monday as they went down before the powerful Virginia Tech grapplers to the tune of 35-3. The loss leaves the Tar Heels with a 4-5 record for the season. The freshman squad also tasted defeat, 31-3.

Despite the one-sided score, the UNC team had nothing to be ashamed of in losing to the top team in the Southern Conference. The VPI squad was packed with no less than four wrestlers holding the conference championship in their weight division. Maryland, a powerhouse in the Atlantic Coast Conference, also failed to overcome the VP squad this year.

The one bright spot from the Carolina varsity's viewpoint was Captain Perrin Henderson's decision over Heller, the Southern Conference champion in the 137 lb. class. Henderson, remaining undefeated, came from behind to decision his old rival, 7-6. The same two wrestlers have met before, both in high school and earlier in college, with Heller coming out victorious in three matches. Pope Shuford provided the frosh with their points as he pinned his man in the 157 lb. bout.

Coach Sam Barnes, though naturally disappointed at the loss, nevertheless felt that his man, both varsity and freshmen wrestled well and gave a good account of themselves. "We were shooting," Barnes explained, "and the match was close."

Once again the Tar Heels will take to the road when they travel to Annapolis to meet the Midshipmen of Navy on Friday. The Middies have lost previously this year to the Maryland squad. Following the Navy match UNC plays host to the Maryland Terrapins on February 28 before entering the ACC Tournament.

ACC Statistics Show Why Tar Heels Are Number 1

GREENSBORO — (AP) — Carolina's fast-moving Tar Heels, just elevated to the No. 1 rank among the nation's major college basketball teams, have a team efficiency chart which shows why they occupy that lofty position.

Latest ACC Service Bureau compilations show the Tar Heels leading the Atlantic Coast Conference in three major categories of team efficiency and well up the ladder in the others.

Carolina boasts the best scoring average (73.3 points a game), the best average margin over the opposition (10.6 points a game) and the best field goal shooting average (44.2 per cent).

Defending ACC champion Maryland, though experiencing an assortment of woe this season, still has the best defensive average, having yielded an average of only 56.4 points a game though loser 11 times in 17 games through Saturday night.

North Carolina State, which is sixth in the latest ranking poll, tops the conference in rebounding with 49.1 recoveries a game and Clemson, one of the second-division teams leads in free throw accuracy at 72.4 per cent.

Carolina, which meets N. C. State in Chapel Hill Wednesday night, is a close second to the Wolfpack in rebounding, having picked off an average of 47.6 rebounds a game. The Tar Heels are fourth in free throw shooting with a very creditable accuracy mark of 69.0 per cent for 17 games.

Wake Forest and State rank just behind the Tar Heels in floor shooting. The Deacons have hit 40.9 per cent of their field goal tires, State 40.0 per cent. Virginia is second in free throw shooting with an accuracy mark of 71.5 per cent and Wake Forest is third at 69.4 per cent of their field goal tries State age margin over the opposition, 7.6 points per contest.

Big 4 Track Here Saturday

The University of North Carolina will be host here Saturday to a four-way indoor day long track meet in The Tin Can.

Duke, N. C. State and Wake Forest have accepted invitations to appear in the meet, along with the Tar Heels, with main competition beginning at 3 p.m.

It will be something of a preview to the Atlantic Coast Conference Indoor Games, with a full schedule of running and field events.

Among them will be two relays, the mile and two-mile, and Carolina will put its successful relay team into the competition.

Last week the Tar Heels took the two-mile relay in the Philadelphia Inquirer Games, with Dave Scurlock running the anchor behind John Sylvester, Wayne Bishop, and Cowles Llipfert. They came through in the excellent time of 7:45.4. Manhatten was second, Syracuse third and Villanova fourth.

The following night in the New York Athletic Club meet, this team finished third, behind Georgetown and Holy Cross.

Dave Scurlock failed to place in the 880 at New York, but Coach Dale Ranson says he is gradually rounding into shape following a lingering cold, and he expects him to be ready for the 880 and other competition in Saturday's meet.

Last Chance To Beat Wolflets

Tar Babies Meet State Frosh Tonight

By ELLIOTT COOPER

If the Tar Babies are going to beat the Wolflets from N. C. State this season it will have to be done tonight for this is the last chance.

The two squads tangle for the varsity contest. The Wolflets have emerged victorious from both of the previous meetings, beating the Carolina frosh 74-63 in Raleigh and 79-64 in Nashville.

Although Coach Dean Smith's cagers have a winning overall record of 7-5, they can show only one win against five defeats in Big Four competition. Their sole victory in this department came against Wake Forest, but the Deaclets won the other two games to give them a winning record over the Tar Babies.

Key Leads Wolflets

Currently on a two-game losing streak, the Tar Babies will once again face the man-sized job of trying to hold down State's John Key. In his two efforts against the Carolina frosh the big 6-8 center has scored a total of 34 points in addition to dominating the backboards.

Backing up Key in the forecourt are 6-6 Russ Marvel, 6-5 Jim Whitfield, and 6-3 Dan Wherry. Marvel had 16 points against the Tar Babies when the two teams met in Raleigh, but he did not play in the second game due to the fact that he forgot his shoes.

Backcourt Trio

At the guard positions Coach Lee Terrill has another trio which sees most of the action. When the Wolflets won in Nashville this threesome of Denny Lutz, George Finnegan, and Anton Muehlbauer accounted for 42 points.

In an effort to break this jinx, a jinx which has now extended itself over a two year period, Smith will go with the same starting lineup that he has used all season. This would put Jim Hudock at center with Ken McComb and Bill Hubbard at the forwards.

Order Of The Valkyries Taps 7 In Pre-Dawn Ceremony

MISS MARY LOUISE CRUMBLEY

MISS NOLA JEAN HATTEN

MISS ROSILAND TOY JOHNSON

MRS. WILLIAM AYCOCK

MISS BETSY HANNON MAY

MISS LUCY HELEN POSGATE

MISS CATHERINE STEWART

Six undergraduate women and one honorary member were tapped into Carolina's highest honorary organization for women the Order of the Valkyries, in a secret pre-dawn ceremony this morning.

Recognized were Mrs. William Aycock, Miss Mary Louise Crumbley, Miss Nola Jean Hatten, Miss Rosiland Toy Johnson, Miss Betsy Hannon May, Miss Lucy Helen Posgate, and Miss Catherine Jean Stewart.

The Valkyries began their candlelight march at 1:30 a.m. in their customary black robes and hoods. As the march proceeded through the women's residence halls, the sound of the golden gong called forth those women who were recognized for the Valkyrie ideals of scholarship, leadership, character, and service.

Following the secret ceremonies, a special breakfast was served at 6 a.m. in honor of the new members. Former members of the Order were also present for this conclusion of the ceremonies.

The Order of the Volkyries was begun on the Carolina campus in 1942 so that outstanding women students might be given special recognition for their services. The name of the organization is taken from an ancient Norwegian legend centered around the warrior god Odin, who represents Thought and Memory and who was mankind's benefactor.

Odin had nine select maiden attendants, the Valkyries, who were daughters of the gods and yet were mortals as well. These attendant maidens waited on the tables in Asgard, but their chief task was to go to the battlefield and decide at Odin's bidding who should win and who should die, and then to carry the brave dead to Valhalla, the hall of fame. It was considered a great honor to belong to this chosen group because they shared the glorious companionship of departed heroes.

The purpose of the Order as stated in the Volkyrie creed is: "As a Valkyrie I will strive to accomplish gladly and quietly the tasks which lie before us, to be unaffected by success and undaunted by failure, to have an active interest in the welfare of my fellow students; to act always with a spirit of helpfulness and to try to inspire co-operation in others; to be sincere and considerate on all occasions, to work toward a tolerant and sympathetic understanding of others, and yet to stand staunchly by my own convictions; to be above pettiness in all my dealings and to direct my thoughts and actions persistently toward the highest purposes; as a Valkyrie I will strive constantly toward those ideals of character, scholarship, leadership, and service for which our organization stands."

The citations read to the tappees were:

MRS. AYCOCK . . . "one who has taken an active interest in the student life of the University, over and above fulfilling the roles of a responsible member of her community, a wife, and a mother.

"Dignity, simplicity, and modesty are incorporated in Mrs. Aycock's every deed and action. She has exemplified to all around her a genuine spirit of helpfulness and consideration. Her guidance and wise judgment have channeled the thoughts of many students and her gentle encouragement has given many persons the desire to work toward higher aspirations."

MISS CRUMBEY . . . "one whose vivacious personality and genuine enthusiasm are revealed in her many contributions to campus activities. She has been extremely active in her major field of radio and television, exhibiting zeal and a ready willingness to participate in many student productions.

"Her dedicated service to the Women's Honor Council and to her sorority has been a challenge to those around her. Through the radiant example she sets for others, Miss Crumbley reveals her sincere pursuance of the highest ideals of womanhood."

MISS HATTEN . . . "one who has shown dynamic leadership in all her endeavors. Through her honesty and warmth she has gained the respect of all those who know her. Miss Hatten's ablity to grow as an individual and her respect and understanding of her fellow-man has been reflected in her outstanding work with the YWCA and the Cosmopolitan Club.

"As a graduate student, she has shown noteworthy scholastic ability. Yet she has found time to devote herself to the Graduate Club and the Orientation Committee."

MISS JOHNSON . . . "one who has served her fellow students cheerfully and effectively. As assistant editor of the Yackety-Yack, as a member of the Consolidated University Student Council, and in her sorority and her church, she has worked with dedication.

"Her enthusiasm has encouraged those who have worked with her to increased effort. The combination of intelligence, resourcefulness, and selfless concern found within her has made her contribution to the university outstanding."

MISS MAY . . . "one who is quiet in manner, soft-spoken in deeds, and humble in spirit. Her sincerity and high qualities of personal integrity are reflected in her work with people of every background.

"In her positions as Chairman of the United Nations Committee, Secretary of the Honor System Commssion, and in her other activities, Miss May combines the rare gift of taking care of administrative duties, while freeing those who work with her to do their best. She serves her activities with a deep sense of duty, and has dedicated herself to her fellow students."

MISS POSGATE. . . "one whose genuine concern for her fellow students and tireless efforts in serving her dormitory, the YWCA, Women's Residence Council, and her church, Miss Posgate has exhibited a steadiness of purpose and sincerity, which people of every nature recognize as excellent.

"She has given friendship a deeper and more beautiful meaning to all who know her well, and to all who come in contact with her, she presents a challenge to make of oneself an individual dedicated to the highest purposes."

MSS STEWART . . . "one who has exhibited determination, devotion and service in her capacity as Orientation Chairman and as an active member of Residence Council, Women's Council, and her sorority.

"Miss Stewart accomplishes her tasks with calmness and efficiency, never deviating in her thoughtful strivings toward those ideals which she holds before her. She has exhibited warm friendliness and a cheerful spirit which have served many as an inspiration and comfort. Miss Stewart, through her unselfishness and devotion has truly proven her desire to serve others."

Legislature Tackles 5 Bills In Phi Hall Session Tonight

The Student Legislature will consider five bills at its regular session tonight.

The solons will meet at 7:30 in Phi Hall, 4th floor, New East.

Under discussion will be a resolution, introduced by David Grigg (UP), of the Legislature's policy concerning subsidiary organizations.

At the last session, Jim Crownover (SP) presented a bill proposing the establishment of a student Carolina Athletic Council. Crownover said such a council would represent student opinion to the Carolina Athletic Association representatives and assist in making campus organizations concerned with athletics more effective.

Also on the agenda will be a bill, introduced on behalf of John Brooks by Norman B. Smith (SP), to allot $600 to the UNC Forensic Council to complete its year's program.

Further business will include a bill proposing the establishment of a bad check committee. Gordon Street (UP) presented this at the last session. Working through the Merchants Association to notify UNC students of their bad checks, the committee would in no way be a collection agency.

Dave Jones (SP) advocated an amendment to the revised election law to nominate the head cheerleader by a selections board in his bill last week. This will be considered tonight.

A bill to place ballot boxes in two more areas in the Town Men's districts will be introduced tonight by Charlie Gray (UP). Gray has conferred with the chairman of the Elections Board and found it would be possible for such action to be taken.

All candidates must turn in a statement from his dean to the effect that he is a student in good standing. However, this ruling does not hold for party endorsed candidates.

All nominations for office must be made in writing and presented to the Elections Board no later than 7 p.m. March 23, the night of a compulsory meeting of all candidates.

Number 1 Tar Heels Blast State Wolfpack By 74-67

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Heels, the number one team in the nation, lived up to their rating to the fullest extent here last night as they survived a late rally by sixth-ranked N. C. State to beat the Wolfpack 74-67.

A screaming sell-out crowd of 4,800 looked on as Frank McGuire's Tar Heels fell behind early, took the lead at the half, pulled away mid-way in the last half, then outlasted State in the final minutes.

The victory gave the high-ridin' Carolinians a 17-1 record on the season, left them unbeaten in the ACC at 11-0, and gave them their 11th straight verdict.

State jumped quickly into the lead, rolling to a 7-0 margin before Carolina could scratch. The Heels rallied to tie things up at 11-11 and go ahead 12-11, but fell behind again.

They began to rally streak at the 4:17 mark with the score 26-24 State. With soph sensations Doug Moe and York Larese leading the way, the Heels poured in 9 straight points and forged ahead 33-26 with less than two minutes left.

The squads exchanged baskets and Carolina went to the dressing room at intermission with a 7-point spread at 35-28.

They came charging back ont the floor after halftime and did the thing they are famous for — spurted quickly into a commanding lead. With everybody on the team connecting, Carolina romped to a 13-point lead at 45-32 their longest lead of the night.

But State wasn't willing to lay down and die, and the Pack kept chopping away at the Tar Heel lead, getting within two points once at 68-66.

From 62-50 Carolina, State hit six straight, then four more to pull within four at 64-60. Salz hit a lay-up with 2:07 left, but Richter's tap and Niewierowski's lay-up left State only two behind at 66-64.

From there it was nip and tuck and the issue was in doubt for a while. Larese hit two free throws to give Carolina a little breathing room but Niewierowski hit a jump and the score was 68-66, Carolina with only 1:06 remaining.

But then Lee Shaffer and Doug Moe hit successive lay-ups to pull Carolina ahead 72-66 and that was about the story with 26 seconds on the clock.

During the streak when the oncoming Pack almost caught the Tar Heels, it was little Lou Pucillo who led the charge. Two of State's big guns, George Stepanovich and Bob MacGillivray had fouled out earlier.

Lee Shaffer paced the Tar Heels with 23 points, followed closely by York Larese with 22. Harvey Salz had 12 and Doug Moe had 11. Moe provided the crowd with the usual thrills with his adept passing and play-making.

Salz and Larese stole the ball all night long, harrassing big John Richter every time he got his hands on the ball.

Richter led the Wolfpack with 19, followed by Lou Pucillo with 15 and Dan Englehardt with 11. MacGillivray and Stepanovich, who both fouled out, provided State with only 14 points between them.

Carolina hit 45% of its shots from the floor, while State hit 40%. The Heels hit 46% in the opening half.

New Taxes

Whether the citizens of the state like it or not, the state needs new sources of revenue in the form of taxes.

One need only take the University as as an example of what the present budget recommendation will do to the state if adopted. The present budget that the Advisory Budget Commission recommended to the General Assembly is inadequate to keep the standards of the University at a high level.

The prospect that is before the University is not very pretty. It presents a picture of a library falling from third in the South to fourth, and further in the near future. It presents a student-faculty ratio that is already too high to meet the demands of a high caliber University getting even higher.

Indeed, the future eminence of the University in the state, South, and nation rests largely on those legislators in Raleigh, and in their ultimate wisdom they will have to decide whether they will lose the next election because they recommended a tax hike.

The whole educational structure of the state is dependent on the ability of the legislators to take the necessary leadership in asking for higher taxation. It is incumbent upon those in responsible positions, such as those at the head of the University in Chapel Hill and the Consolidated University and all other state agencies to point out to the legislators the desparate fiscals needs, and if necessary to urge higher taxation. This state at present does not have the revenues to support its agencies adequately, but can have that revenue if it wants to.

It is time for all those with influence in the state to come out fighting. The results may well be very worthwhile.

The United Front

Student action on the budget has been impeded by the united front that says that one must support the entire budget, and if carried to the Consolidated level, one must support three budgets.

There were three basic student budgetary aims. The first aim is to have a representative library that would attract high quality students and professors to Chapel Hill. The second aim was to have adequate faculty salary monies so that the many qualified professors and subprofessors would not leave, and to procure a competent faculty additions in order to provide for a large faculty and a closer student-teacher relationship. The students were also interested in a student union to meet the very definite need on this campus

However, when the Committee on State Affairs was organized it was charged with the task of presenting the entire budget. Indeed, there was a small administrative-student squabble about the exclusion of the Division of Health Affairs from the committee's report. In this area the administration was right, for if the committee undertook to present the budget in its entirety, it had to present the health affairs picture also.

However, the committee should not have been saddled with this responsibility. It should have presented those things that were basic student concern, and only these things. They should have had a brochure devoted almost entirely to faculty salaries, library, and student union to the exclusion of all other topics. However, their analysis of these areas should have been so thorough and so penetrating as to leave no doubt in a legislator's mind that these were the most important University issues at stake, and that the need for these was real and great.

The result, of course, did not do what was necessary. However, all efforts in any direction have been temporarily thwarted. It is up to the student now to shift their ground to the salient areas, and to meet these critical needs. If the students can do this, they will be performing a service, and they will be one of the main breaks in the United front that has hampered the University for so long.

On The Movies

Bill Bailey

I envy the age of the old timers and the days gone by. What a relief to the drama critic and the general theater-goer of the present age if he could see some real, corn-fed actors trouping through the village to set up their stage within the painted walls of the local dance hall; to see them projecting themselves before glaring footlights and an audience of the local townfolk. What do we of the twentieth century have? Why, we have the movies. Where does one take his gal? the movies. Where does one go for enjoyment? the movies. Where does one go to avoid work in general? the movies. So it is with us poor unfortunates: burrowing into a convenient cinema, one sits for two hours (three to six in the worse one), watching a pack of morons prance in a quasi-primate fashion, while the eyes are banged with seething flashes of color and the ears assailed by ninety-one drums and three score trumpets. Do I then think that the stage actor or producer is a superior fellow . . . superior at least to his movie counterpart? No. Not particularly. I haven't even seen too many stage shows. To know what is before you is what my bones ache for: know that the actors, however lowly they may be, are acting, not merely a patched-up piece film; to know that the director is pulling his hair and dying a thousand deaths behind the curtain; to know that that fellow shaking and shivering in the seat on the last row is the producer; to hear the applause—or the lack of it—at the end of a well-turned scene. These are the things I long for. This is why I envy you, O aged one.

Aye, laddie, its with a sigh that I turn from the nostalgic days past to the revolting future. But it must be done. I sound the tin horn of complaint in the ear of the deaf. The movie is here to stay. So let's be content to disembowel and show it for its real self, i.e., its congenital scabrousness. There are, in all my movie-going hours, a minimum of three and a maximum of five shows worth recalling: none were top-billed; none received awards; none were spectacular; one was in color. The rest are clumped, from the class D mediocrity on down, running helter-skelter off the end of the alphabet. Most people would get more out of reading comic books. These movies leave one with a mental blank . . if one goes into a theater thinking of fried eggs, one leaves and picks up the train of thought going in: fried eggs. This usual type of rubbish generally follows a ethos-pathos-ethos pattern in which the principals are shown happily clinging about one another neck; the middle section takes us into a heart-rending situation where one, or perhaps both, is torn from his lovers arms to be tempted by the devil or Moloch to break one or all of the belated Ten Commandments, giving in perhaps a bit to secure a point; the last section is the happy one . . . the harsh, clashing tones are resolved into a harmonious tonic; winds shift, for the gale is over—Adam has refused the apple; tears roll down stained cheeks as the cast clasps hands and all is forgiven. Danger over. Alls well. Love. Happiness. Ptooey.

This is a mixture of the sublime and the absurd . . . life pictured through the glazed glass of the village church window. No ideas; literally the tundra of globular originality. They tell me that the background music is a formula fed into a watered-down Univac: that one tells the machine whether one wants loud music or soft, strings or horns; and presto—the score is fed out in preforated ticker-tape. If this is true, then I might be led to secretly believe that the script has its conception in the same manner: no writing; no thinking; only manual dexterity. Take this script, a group of braying asses to act, a name director, and a moneyed producer; add a pinch of advance publicity (all lies), mix well in a 2,000 volt Hollywood set, and bake before a gullible public for as long as it takes to squeeze admission price from every possible fool . . . and you have the usual blarney proffered to the American public for two hours and a half a buck. Even some of the literate minority who are forced into movie halls are beginning to sit by with unflinching eyes of glass, nodding their heads with approval, creasing their faces with false smiles, and coming back for more the next night. The pity of the whole thing is that we cannot chop down these houses of boredom; neither can we hang the idiots who produce the things . . . they are fostered by the law.

So go ye to the movies . . . pay your homage to the muse in the foul manner that you must. Heed not the call of reason . . . but I dream of something . . . I see movement before painted scenery; hear voices that ring true in my ears . . . I can boo, I can clap, or sleep . . .

Foreign Policy Decision

Letters

Editor:

In February 1933, as a UNC freshman, I stepped to the foul line at old Wake Forest gym with the score tied and only a few seconds remaining. Here, within my power, was a chance to win this basketball game. But the Wake Forest student body had more power. And they wouldn't give a visitor a chance. Boos such as I've never heard before or since filled the gym, and as a result my foul shot was short and wide to the right . . . just as the booers had directed. Wake then got the ball and won.

So the crudity of Wake Forest has been instilled in my memory, and I was not surprised at the finale of the Carolina-Wake Forest game the other night. Wake Forest will do it every time. Apparently they not only feel vastly interior, they are. In the Big Four, they should always rate No. 4 — until the students are trained to be gentlemen.

The University Party made a big move towards regaining its position of political prominence on campus in adopting on last Tuesday night a new system of representation for its nominating conventions. The Chairman of the UP and the executive committee are to be congratulated for this.

To guarantee good student government it is necessary hat we have at least two strong political parties. One of he best things that could happen to boost student government here is for the University Party to once again become a party which at least tries to represent the entire campus and no just fraternities. The new nominating rules, if properly implemented, will go a long way towards giving the non-fraternity man a chance to receive UP endorsement. With a rejuvenated University Party an all-out challenge can be thrown to the Student Party. A University Party which is a party once again can then not only bring about a better UP, but a better SP and Student Government as well.

Students should be encouraged to become members of the UP. I understand that a campaign for membership is now underway with UP officials and old members eagerly seeking new blood. I hope that this drive is successful. If the UP can make its membership more representative, rid itself of excessive block voting and adopt some kind of positive political philosophy, which is neither too conservative nor bordering on radicalism. I think that the University Party will be a party to which one is proud to belong and a party in power.

A Letter

Editor:

I must admit that I was surprised to read Saturday morning's attack of my resolution presented before the Student Legislature. I was even more surprised to find that you used this means of making a personal attack on my intregity as a legislator. I will not justify myself to you. But mainly to the students in Dorm Men's IV do I address this letter; I hope that every resident of this, my district, will read it throughout. They are the ones to whose criticism I will listen; they are the ones to whom I must make this explanation.

I have always voted and conducted myself in Student Legislature in a manner which I believe to be representative of those who elected me. In every vote I cast I always consider their best interests. This fact I have stated on the floor of legislature (to the awe of some of my colleagues) that we must vote in a way that we believe the students who elected us would have us to vote. Only in this way can we have a truly representative Student Legislature.

But now to turn to my resolution so bitterly attacked and so grossly misinterpreted. My resolution was depicted by the DTH front page news article as aimed at "limiting" the Student Legislature. This is simply incorrect. I find nowhere in the DTH the title of my resolution. "A Resolution of Policy Concerning Subsidiary Organizations of the Student Legislature." The purpose is plainly stated as that of policy. The word "limit" or no word comparable to it ever appears in this resolution. This legislation in no way affects the power of the Student Legislature.

In other words the bill says to subsidiary organizations (especially I have in mind those which receive funds from student government), "As long as you are doing your job, we will try to do it for you, but when you cease to do your job, we are free to pass legislation accordingly." The resolution does not say that the Student Legislature cannot or in some cases should not pass legislation concerning these organizations or their interest areas. The Student Legislature is the supreme legislative body on the campus; of this there can be no doubt.

Two experiences of mine during the last session of legislature caused me iniatiate this resolution. First, I introduced a bill to provide bicycle racks for the new dorms. I was told that the IDC was already working toward this end. Secondly, I drew up a bill to provide sideboards for phones in dormitories. Before introducing this I talked with the President of the IDC and found that here too, work had already begun. There have been similar experiences by other legislators I'm sure. I felt that a policy should be stated in regard to this situation, thus my resolution.

The conflict I am trying to alleviate is between two groups trying to accomplish the same end, not a conflict between the campus as a whole and a part of it. The idea is not to prevent progress, but to remove the stumbling blocks from its path. This, to anyone with an open mind, is the purpose of my resolution. The resolution does not limit the power of Student Legislature, so it could not be used to protect any area from needed legislation. Moreover, if any organization could be singled out as being most affected by his resolution it could be no other than the IDC.

This next point I offer to the campus as a whole. The editor seems to feel that my legislation, had it been representative of fraternity interests, would have been damnable since I represent Dorm Men's IV. But as I have stated, this legislation could not be used as a protection by fraternities or any other body from legislation. The important thing to point out is the false assumption the editor has made. Here he assumes that dormitory and fraternity interests are in conflict. This is a false assumption! While the idea has been exploited by various campus politicians in the past, an examination of the assumption will yield its falicies. I have yet to find an issue that I felt conflicted hese two groups — for instance; delayed rush, dormitory social rooms, dormitory phone booths, discriminatory clauses — how do these conflict? I suggest that all of us be wary of anyone would seek to divide us with this falsehood. "Together we stand, divided we fall," it's a worn out phrase, but it sums up the situation very well. Those who would divide us are putting other interests ahead of those which are best for the campus as a whole. It is not necessary that we fight among ourselves. With a harmonious united front there are no bounds to the progress that student government can make.

Neither Black Nor White... Mostly Shades Of Grey

Norman B. Smith

Every day it was the same. He tried first to participate, to join in their activities with as much enthusiasm and exertion, though not as much skill because he was awkward still, as they showed. Then he tried to laugh, agree, apolgize, to go out of his way to do favors. When this too failed he turned to aloofness and aloneness, but even then they sought him out.

They sought him out to hit him, to insult him, to curse him, to trip him, to betray him. There were fights which he usually lost because if he appeared to be gaining advantage, he would suddenly be fighting two instead of one. There were clothes torn. There were pencils, lunches, notepaper stolen, not out of need, only maljce. When the lunch wasn't stolen even that became an object of ridicule because the inverted snobbery of the others (who had been brought up on cold biscuit lunches and who now that they were in the eighth grade had been elevated to the honor of carrying sandwiches made with store-bought bread) was offended when he carried the homemade bread in his dinner-pail which according to his mother who was unsophisticated by their standards was "a special treat just for you." When the teacher walked into the room in anger because he had heard the commotion down at the other end of the building, accusing fingers pointed at him alone, pointed from hands that had gripped in the universal pact of non-betrayal between pupils against teachers; thus it was he who was whipped.

"Why?" he asked himself countless times, keeping time to his footfalls by uttering silently the simple monosyllabic word that has been the spark generated by the flint of self rasping against the steel of world ever since man has been a thinking being, initiating through the friction of existence these sparking whys which lead him sometimes, occasionally on to the discovery of knowledge, but usually only serve to bring him to a sense of frustration, lead him to an impasse of unknowability. "Why?" he asked himself as he walked home from school to avoid being on the bus where they would there too tease, poke, curse.

The answer didn't come from the long discussions with his parents during which he sat on the braided rug, the sympathetic fire with its hearty, good-natured crackle casting his shadow on the wall, lengthening, then widening, then shifting his silhouette as though frantically trying to help him reshape himself in hopes that from some new form or perspective he could find the answer and thus the solution. He described all those agonies to them and told them how it felt to be ringed with laughter and scorn the day long. They tried to tell him that all this was temporary, that he was in the process of growing up, yet they weren't convinced themselves, and after he went off to sleep they would stay up unproving all the things they had tried to prove to him and end their talk with the ceaseless, ubiquitous "why?."

Nor did the answer come in a personal revelation from God that he had been taught he could expect, for he prayed every night for a long time, pleading for an answer, and to prove that his prayers weren't really selfishly motivated he included lengthy clauses asking for the welfare of all his kinfolk, thanking God for what he had been told were God-given blessings, and in desperation he even prayed for the ones who tormented him. The only response he received was a sighing, disconsolate echo of his "Why?" wafting through the open window from treetops stirring in the night breezes outside.

Yet he was doomed to the life of an onlooker. He could never, never would be able to do, to participate. Understanding of others and others understanding of him enough to make him a part of the group was something that he could not, would not attain. He would always feel uneasy among people, would want to leave so he could walk out alone by himself and think clearly in his own mind rather than muddling everything by trying to explain himself to others. He would expect others not to do what they had pledged they would, and his extreme sense of self-dependence would actually give him a feeling of gratification in having this suspicion confirmed.

He was doomed because he carried tatooed against his soul the most heinous sin recognized by society, the sin for the punishment of which the ground around guillotines has become soggy, mouldering bones manacled in ancient dungeons lie, and schoolboys suffer: individuality.

The UP certainly is doing a nice job of kicking itself in the face by the quality of party campaigning for membership which its leaders are permitting.

I was approached by one of the legislators from the Dorm Women's I district. She asked if I were a member of the SP. When I said no, she thrust forward a pen and a piece of paper and asked me to join the UP. I declined, and she tried to press the point by such statements as "There are no dues!" and "You don't have to do anything. We would just like you to join. You don't even have to vote UP."

Since this episode I have been wondering the value of spending a lot of time getting the signatures of people who neither are interested in the party nor think five minutes about the paper they are signing. The gimmick here seems to be that there are no dues and that the signee "does not have to do anything." Doesn't this party have a platform? Don't its members know or care what the platform is? Aren't the leaders concerned with the bad publicity this type of campaigning is giving the University Party?

If those people in responsible positions do not care and are not wise in such matters as these, the people on campus who think for themselves will avoid the University Party as though it were the Black Plague.

Name Withheld By Request

P.S. I didn't join.

Within the next few weeks students here at Carolina will not only be exposed to political issues and figures, they will also be encourage to participate in campus politics in one way or another. It is my hope that as many students as possible will take it upon themselves to study what is said and discussed. The responsibility of each potential voter is at least to acquaint himself or herself with how particular policies will affect the principle of fairness and legality as it regarded by each individual's sense of justice.

With the belief that politics should be everyone's concern to some extent, I feel that the program and energetic campaign of the University Party to attain more and new representaion should be granted attention and study, if nothing else. Every student is being encouraged strongly to represent his views and opinions for the participation of all campus groups as exercised within the party. The details of the delegate system can easily be attained, and I feel will show without a doubt the sincere interest and effort of the party to acquire more members for a campus-wide representation.

Another important factor of the party"s program is to acquaint students with significant knowledge of issues and problems on cammpus. Much ime has been sacrificed to provide students with knowledge valuable in making political decisions.

Although I cannot go into detail, I feel that a sincere effort is being made to bring the party to all students at Carolina. Each student, it is believed, has a significance because of his due representation. Because of this, I feel that the main purpose of this party is to provide for all students not only a moral but also a consitutional justice of administration.

Tar Babies Overcome Wolflets 47-39

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The Tar Babies insured themselves of a winning season last night in Woollen Gym and avenged two losses to the N. C. State Wolflets at the same time as they played control basketball to defeat their arch rivals from Raleigh 47-39.

For the Carolina frosh the victory marked their eighth win of the season against five losses with only two more contests left on the slate. In their two previous meetings the State frosh had brought home the bacon both times, but last night the Wolflets were unable to win the one that would have given them a complete sweep for the year.

Tar Baby Coach Dean Smith scrapped his pet man-for-man defense for a zone, and in the second half this change was definitely a factor in bringing the Carolina frosh victory. For State the effects were exactly opposite as their second-half zone defense was not as effective as their opening half man-to-man.

From the beginning of the game it was apparent that the Tar Babies were not going to run with their opponents this time. It was 4:22 before Don Walsh sunk a foul shot for the first score of the contest. The Wolflets seemed ready to play this brand of ball, however, and built themselves a 15-9 lead late in the first half, the biggest they ever enjoyed.

At this point the Tar Babies began to rally and with three seconds left in the half Yogi Poteet hit on a one-hander to tie the score at 17-17 after twenty minutes.

In this conservative, but nevertheless always interesting game, only two players managed to score in double figures. For the Tar Babies Jim Hudock was high man wth 16 while the losers were led by Anton Muehlbauer who had 10.

The second half was a repetition of the first with the exception that the Tar Babies dominated play. The game was tied twice a 19-19 and 23-23, but the lead only changed hands once when the Wolflets went ahead 28-27 on a shot by Dan Wherry. The losers held sway until Hudock got a tap and gave the Carolina frosh the lead for keeps.

The game was a spirited contest throughout and even had the makings of a fight when State's Denny Lutz and Walsh went after a free ball. For the Tar Babies the unsung hero of the evening was Pep Callahan whose floor play sparked the frosh despite scoring only one point.

The Scoring

Carolina — McComb, 8; Hubbard, 5; Hudock, 16; Poteet, 8; Walsh, 9; Callahan, 1; Phillips.

State — Marvel, 5; Key, 2; Wherry, 6; Whitfield, 8; Lutz, 8; Muehlbauer, 10; Yates; Coward.

Tar Heels Prove Who Should Be Number One

Stan Niewierowski took a two hand set from half court, the horn blew, and there was no doubt in anybody's mind who was Number One.

It was Carolina's Tar Heels victors over State College by a 74-67 margin. Before a full house at Woollen Gym, Frank McGuire's crew had proved to Everett Case for the second time this year who had the best team in the ACC.

For the Carolina student body, the ones who were lucky enough to be present and those who couldn't get a ticket, the win was a dream come true. They had seen their team climb week after week up the newspaper polls until this week they were on top of the heap, the best team in the country in the minds of the sportswriters and coaches.

Now there is no question about whether or not the Tar Heels will stay on top for just a week. The Wolfpack came to Chapel Hill determined to knock Carolina out of first place just as the Tar Heels had done to them a little over a month ago in Raleigh. But such was not to be, the Pack made a run at the winners in the final minutes getting as close as 2 only to be slapped back down.

From start to finish the Carolina rooters who filled the stands made old Woollen Gym shake with chants of "We're Number One." There could be no objections to the tremendous vocal support given the Heels by the fans, it started when Doug Moe was introduced and didn't stop.

After the game McGuire expressed everyone's opinion when he said, "It's great to be Number One."

Budget Seen As Desire To Enlarge Class Size

By DAVE JONES

"Apparently there seems to be a desire to enlarge the size of the classes" began Prof. Harry Davis, acting chairman of the Department of Dramatic Art, when asked what he felt of the implications of the new advisory budget.

"For a great many courses, such as the ones we teach here, that means that there will be a sort of mechanical mass education instead of individual attention. Both the professor and the student lose, but it is the student who really has to pay the price."

SPACE PROBLEM

In commenting on the Dramatic Art Department specifically, Davis said," Our main problem here is that we are scattered around so much. It would be a great physical and moral advantage if we were in one building. The University is keeping that in mind and is trying to resolve this problem for us, as a part of a larger space and facility problem. Actually, we are only one aspect of a total problem of space for the whole University."

Dr. H. D. Crawford, acting chairman of the Department of Chemistry declined comment when asked about the budget.

NEED SALARY RAISES

Prof. Samuel B. Knight, of the Department of Chemistry, said, "On Salaries I feel that we're going to have to have more money if we hope to compete nationally for professors in all grades, but especially for full professors."

"We've got to move," Knight continued, "if the anticipated expansion comes upon us. We've got to move especially in the realm of undergraduate teaching, as well as in research. And we've got to have more money for equipment."

PRICES RISE

"Laboratory equipment and aparratus has jumped up by leaps and bounds—instruments we used to get for $500 now cost $2,000—and we never have enough money for books."

Prof. Norman E. Eliason, of the Department of English said, "The amounts provided for as salaries and for the library are totally inadequate. Unless the amounts are greatly increased, the University will suffer. This will become apparent almost immediately, and a year or two hence the prestige and effectiveness of the University will have declined so much that it will be necessary to spend far greater sums to bring them back to where they are now."

Deadline Near For Positions On GMAB

Today is the deadline for applications for the offices of president, vice-president, and secretary of GMAB.

Interviews will be held next week by a committee composed of Bob Cantor, the acting president; Howard Henry, director of Graham Memorial; and Don Furtado, president of the student body.

The officers will be approved by the GM Board of Directors and will work with the old officers for about two months in an orientation and planning program.

New committee chairmen will be appointed after the officers have been elected. Any student is eligible for these offices.

Deadline Is Extended

The deadline for applications for the orientation committee has been extended until Feb. 26. David Parker, chairman, announced Thursday.

Parker urged all interested persons to come to the student government office in Graham Memorial for interviews. The interviews will last Monday through Thursday; students will "sign up for these interviews on a first come, first served basis."

Applicants for secretary and treasurer are particularly desired, he said.

All the interviews will be conducted by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board and will be held in the Woodhouse Conference Room.

Appointments will be made on Feb. 27.

Legislature Approves Athletic Council

By DEE DANIELS

The Student Legislature sanctioned the establishment of a student Carolina Athletic Council last night.

According to Jim Crownover (SP), originator of the bill proposing such action, its basic purposes are to coordinate student desires concerning athletics, to have an organization connected with athletics close to the Legislature and to provide a coordinating agency for the budget requests of all organizations concerned with athletics.

The article dealing with budgetary matters was deleted in an amendment by Charlie Gray (UP).

The bill was approved as amended.

Further business included the appropriation of $310 to the Forensic Council for carrying out its intercollegiate debating program. The bill was introduced last session by Norman B. Smith (SP) on behalf of John Brooks, chairman and treasurer of the Council.

The original request was for $600. The amount was decreased to $310 by the Finance Committee.

The solons sanctioned a bill, introduced by Gordon Street (UP), advocating the establishment of a bad check committee.

The committee, in no way a collection agency, would notify UNC students of their bad checks. Working through the Merchants Association, Street called the action a step forward in relations between the Association and the student body.

He further explained it would insure the student privilege of cashing checks with no questions asked.

Street called the committee "a beginning in the education of the student of the Merchants Association and the ideals of what good credit rating means."

Dave Jones' (SP) bill providing for the election of head cheerleader was passed.

Women's Fees Illegal Says Student Council

The $2 social fee and the $1 activities fee collected in women's dorms is unconstitutional, according to a decision of the Student Council last night. This fee has been levied by the Women's Residence Council.

The decision of the Student Council is not retroactive, according to Jim Long, chairman of the Council, but will go into effect at the end of the present semester. The fees which have been already collected this semester, need not be returned.

The case was brought before the Student Legislature by Mary Alice Rowlette and Jeannete Hornsby. While Miss Rowlette had paid her $3 social fee for the semester, Miss Hornsby had not.

The Student Council made no ruling as to whether or not the House Council of Miss Hornsby's dorm had the power to force payment of her fee.

Jim Long said that she would have to bring that question up before the Council as a separate case. Miss Hornsby was not available for comment as to whether or not she intended to pay the $3 or take her case before Student Council.

In giving the decision the Council stated that it is nowhere implied in the Student Constitution that a student organization has the power to levy fees, and that only the Student Legislature can appropriate funds.

The Council suggested that a legal means of collecting fees would be for the Residence Council to request the Student Legislature to request a referendum of the women students.

If a majority voted for the social fee, the request would be sent to the Board of Trustees and, if approved by them, the University would collect the fees.

Chairman Long emphasized that the above procedure was only a suggestion.

Thefts Cost UNC $500 Since Oct.

Over $139 has been stolen from vending machines on the campus during the past week.

W. P. Blevins of the Vendapak corporation reported that eight cigarette machines have been opened during the past weeks by breaking open locks on the machines and taking out the money.

In all, according to Blevins, over $500 has been stolen since October from vending machines, and he added that the company is operating at a loss on the campus and will have to cease servicing cigarette and candy machines if these thefts continue.

The comany is offering a $250 reward for information leading to the apprehension of those who are stealing from these machines. The company has promised to keep the identity of any person supplying information confidential.

The company reminded students that three cents out of every pack of cigarettes goes to the University scholarship fund and 15 per cent of all candy proceeds goes to the University for scholarships for any student in the student body.

Blevins asked any student who has information about the thefts to call the Vendapak of North Carolina, Inc. offices at 807 Knight St. in Durham..

Phi Officers' Inauguration Set Tuesday

Officers of the Philanthropic Society for the current semester will be inaugurated Tuesday in Phi Hall, fourth floor of New East, at 8 p.m. State Senator Dr. Robert Lee Humber, of Pitt County, will deliver the key address for the occasion.

To be installed are John Brooks, president; David Matthews, president pro tem; Stan Black, parliamentarian; Glen Johnson, critic and representative to the Forensic Council; Hobort Steele, sergeant-at-arms; Bill Jackson, treasurer; and Lee Arbogast, recording clerk.

Dr. Humber, who was elected to the state senate last fall, received an honorary Ph. D. degree from the University of North Carolina in June. He is founder of the North Carolina Art Gallery in Raleigh and president of the North Carolina Art Society.

Retiring president Jess Stribling will preside over the meeting, with Rev. Bob Johnson of the University Methodist Church giving the invocation. Following Dr. Humber's address, Stribling will swear in the new officers, and the new president will speak.

A reception in Phi Hall follows the business. The public is invited.

New 'Y' Head Outlines Vast Policy Changes

By BEN TAYLOR

Recently elected YMCA President Randy Shelton yesterday outlined a vast program of Y policy changes slated to "realign the programs of the Y into a more effective calendar."

Shelton, who took over the reigns of the Y upon the resignation of Bill Sugg, expressed doubt that "the Y is communicating as it should to the entire student body."

"The Y leadership and advisory boards are analyzing and attempting to realign their policies to meet the needs of every student regardless of race or religion," he said.

The Winston-Salem senior commented that his work for the remainder of the year will center around carrying out the program plans of Sugg, publicizing the 'Y' cabinets and future changes of policy, and drawing more students into the program.

Speaking about the YM-YWCA on an international level, Shelton stated the big question the Y must deal with today is: "Does the word Christian' in YMCA hinder or help its position in a student community ast becoming international in nature?"

Shelton, 25, an Air Force veteran, as recently accepted by the American Friends Committe to attend work camp in Europe. Following his summer tour, he plans to enter UNC Law School.

Student Has Minor Injuries After Wreck

Roger L. Earnhardt, UNC student from Monroe, N. C., received multiple lacerations and contusions late yesterday afternoon when the car he was driving went out of control on the Pittsboro Rd. near Merritt's Service Station.

According to Robert F. Neal, student and employee of The Chapel Hill Weekly, who arrived an estimated three minutes after the accident ocurred, Earnhardt was traveling south when the car left the road and traveled approximately 65 yards during which the car jumped a ditch and snapped a telephone pole guy wire. The car came to a stop pointed north and lying on its side against an embankment.

Earnhardt was taken to the UNC student infirmary where Dr. T. P. Harris reported him suffering from multiple lacerations and bruises. Harris said he did not appear seriously injured.

State Highway Patrolman Tom Winborne, investigating officer, stated that from the estimated 200 feet between where the car left the road and where it finally stopped, he would conclude that Earnhardt was traveling faster than the 35 m.p.h. speed limit for that area. Winborne in continuing investigation of the accident.

Both Neal and Winborne estimated the car, 1958 model Thunderbird, as a total loss.

Neal said Earnhardt was cuts about the head and face. He was alone at the time of the accident.

Passing motorists removed Earnhardt from the car.

The date of the second annual Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree, originally scheduled for March 10-11, has been changed to March 17-18.

Cyprus Is Free; Conference Votes Island Freedom

LONDON—(AP)—Peace came to Cyprus yesterday after four years of violence. A five-party conference reached agreement on independence for the island after 31 years under the British Flag.

A historic document establishing the Mediterranean island as a republic was initialed tonight in a London hospital room by the Prime Ministers of Britain, Greece and Turkey.

Prime Minister MacMillan and Greek Premier Constantine Karamanlis carried the official document to the bedside of Turkish Premier Adnan Menderes, recovering from injuries suffered in a plane crash outside London Tuesday.

CONFERENCE MARRED

The agreement came in the third and final session of a conference dogged by rumors of discord and snarled by the Menderes plane crash.

Archbishop Makarios, 45-year-old exiled leader of the Greek cypriots, ended up by signing the agreement after dropping earlier objections to some of its clauses.

With Turkish cypriot leader, Dr. Gazil Kutchuk—who also signed—Makarios accepted Britain's proposals that military bases on Cyprus remain under British control.

SEVERAL SIGN

The agreement—actually a complex series of documents—also was signed by Greek Foreign Minister Evanghelos Averoff, Turkish Foreign Minister Fatin Zorlu and British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd.

The three prime ministers initiated a cover document, making it official.

"I'm very happy with the accord," said Makarios in his Dorchester hotel suite.

Asked if he would be returning to Cyprus, the bearded archbishop smiled and replied: "Yes, in a few days." He is expected to be the first president of Cyprus.

Makarios was sent into exile by the British in 1956. The British charged he supported the Greek Cypriot underground, EOKA, which backed its demands for union with Greece with bombs and bullets.

AGREEMENT ENDS RIFT

The agreement at last heals the serious rift between NATO partners Greece and Turkey that had threatened the Atlantic Alliance on its vital southern flank. Both once demanded possession of the strategic island.

The agreement means that 400,000 Greek speaking Cypriots and 100,000 turkish Cypriots will be running their own affairs, perhaps within a year when independence is proclaimed.

A bill must be passed in the British Parliament before surrender of British sovereignty over most of Cyprus becomes a reality. The measure may be submitted by MacMillan's government within the next six months.

DETAILS VAGUE

Many details of the Cyprus constitution still have to be worked out. But in essence, it will follow the broad outlines of the plan worked out by Karamanlis and Menderes in Zurich last week. This calls for a Greek Cypriot President of Cyprus and a Turkish Cypriot vice president. Each will have veto powers.

There will be a national assembly, 70 per cent Greek Cypriot and 30 percent Turkish Cypriot. This proportion also would be applied in comfairs.

munal assembles handling local af-

There is a chance that Cypriots may decide to become members of the British commonwealth.

A major advantage would be to have the continued commercial protection of the sterling area. A powerful segment of the Cyprus busines community is believed to favor commonwealth status.

CAN STAY IN COMMONWEALTH

MacMillan said tonight in the House of Commons that "if, in due course, the government of Cyprus declares its desire to remain associated with the Commonwealth, Britain, in consultation with other members of the Commonwealth, will consider sympathetically now that desire can most properly be satisfied."

The full details of the agreement will be announced in London, Ankara, Athens and Nicosia next Monday.

The participants in the London conference, held in the cream and gold music room of Lancaster House, all seemed happy with the results.

Averoff's Turkish counterpart, Zorlu, rushed to the London clinic to talk with Menderes. He smiled at the clinic entrance and told correspondents: "I'm very, very happy."

Spring Blazer Sale Today By IDC

The IDC Honorary Society will hold its annual spring blazer sale today in the YMCA. Fittings will be conducted in the 'Y' cabinet room, 9 a.m. until 4:30 p.m.

Society officials have noted that the blazer, once a popular article of campus wear, seems to be enjoying a revival of popularity on campus. The fall sale indicated an increased demand over last year.

This year an Ivy League jacket is available for the first time, as is a lower priced men's model. Both men and women's blazers are available in several colors and fabrics. Also for the first time blazers are available with embroidered fraternity and sorority emblems on the pocket.

Profits from the sale are used by the IDC Honorary Society for awarding scholarships to needy and deserving students.

Daniels Named Head Of Women's Handbook

Dee Daniels will edit the Carolina Women's Handbook this spring for distribution to new coeds during the summer.

Miss Daniels was selected this week as editor by the Women's Residence Council from four applications for the position.

The theme she will use for the Handbook is "Fredom and Responsibility."

"Through the Women's Handbook this year, by using a theme of 'Freedom and Responsibility,' I hope to convey to the incoming coed the concept that as an individual she will achieve a freedom for the growth of her own ideas and philosophies and for which she alone is responsible," Miss Daniels said.

The new Handbook editor has asked that coeds interested in helping with the publication contact her at 8-9142 or at The Daily Tar Heel office.

A transfer from Stephens College in Missouri, Miss Daniels is majoring in journalism at UNC.

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Virginia Louise Crawley, Joanne Kay Zimmerman, Sophie Meyers Martin, Mary Hannah Finch, Jo Anne Hardin, Albert Joseph Lank, Bryan Grimes, William Anderson Voncanon, David James McGraw, Junius Daniel Grimes, III, James Edward Fox, Richard Curtis Bisbee, Howard Glenn Doyle, George William Rose, David Bruce Pollock and Purcell Ezra Rose.

Budgetary Needs

It is clear that new tax money is necessary. It is evident that in many cases the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations did not square with the increase in cost of living.

The allotment for amount of faculty salary increases here at the University was such that the increases would net a loss for faculty personnel with respect to the cost of living.

The cost of living went up 2.7% between 1957-58 and went up more during 1958-59. so that the increase of 2.1% in faculty salaries does not help anyone. From what the elementary and secondary schools have been saying, the situation is not too different.

It is obvious that whatever the stated commitment of the governor to education, that commitment lies only for pet projects such as the Research Triangle or for scientific betterment. Education for education's sake seems to have been lost to the ears of the state's political leaders.

And the need now is dire. Perhaps those in Raleigh might awaken before it is too late, and present to the people a system that will meet their needs, if not entirely please their palates.

Budget

The University was reasonable, if not somewhat timid in its requests for finances to the General Assembly.

The recommendation of $260,000 total funds for the library in the first year of the next biennium was barely enough to maintain the University's position; it was a request for total funds that would have made the University fourth in book buying in the South, and was nowhere near the estimate in a University booklet of future needs called "Planning for the Future." This estimate was for an annual books buying budget of $400,000 or enough to, over a period of several years, gradually erase the deficit that made the University third instead of first.

In the area of faculty salaries the original request was entirely adequate, but after it was pared by $2,000,000 by the Board of Higher Education, it represented a mediocre effort to keep the University's faculty at full strength with needed additions and improvements.

However, after the cutting by the Advisory Budget Commission, this University, once called the Harvard of the South, would stand in a position to lose its emminence in the fields most central to its purpose of bringing to the state an institution interested in presenting knowledge of knowledge's sake. Plenty of funds may be available for another member of the Consolidated University which is training people for scientific vocations, but nobody in the post-Sputnik era seems to recognize the need for a liberal education.

The University leadership in Chapel Hill will have to come out swinging hard for the idea of this University, and will have to perhaps argue for the original figures on faculty salaries and a larger figure on the Library. It is only with a concerted push and new taxation that the University can be saved from the mass exodus that preceded the last biennium's budget. If this exodus occurs, this University will have a hard time holding its own against competition.

Harper's Bizarre

We were taking a coffee break the other afternoon, when an acquaintance approached.

"Sit in," we offered.

He picked up a cup and sat down. "How you doing?"

"OK. You?"

"Been out job hunting. I finished in January."

"What kind of job?" we asked.

"I been thinking of selling. Hardware, I think. You know, wholesaling. It's a better deal. I mean, when you're retailing you're selling yourself. You have to sell yourself to the woman so's she'll buy something, where in wholesaling you're selling the product."

"Where do you want to work?"

"I can't say yet, but I didn't interview one company because they didn't have no jobs open I liked."

"Yeah. I'm definite about that. This is something I thought out for myself, you know. I mean, you don't have to sell yourself so much

"And you think you'd like wholesaling work best?"

Some guys make a lot selling little things too. Like cups, or socks, or just nails. But I want something general. Now in hardware, the product sells itself. You talk with the man, and he knows pretty well what he wants, so he buys it.

"I want to get married next summer," he continued, "so I'd like to get a job as soon as I can. You know, selling isn't so hard. Where I worked last Summer the salesmen would come in and talk with the boss, and he'd cuss and swear, and they'd stand right there laughing, an when he got through they'd get an order for maybe $150. That's all there is to it. Just have to be able to take all the bunk the people dish out. I figured this out for myself, and talking with salesmen."

"What did you major in?" we asked.

"English."

Foreign Policy Decision

In's And Out's

Frank Crowther

I'll have to confess at the outset that I'm prejudiced. That, admittedly, has become a bad word; so have finalized, didactic, cacophony and mother (with all due credit for the latter to Mr. Sinatra). I also admit to being a part-time expatriate (another bad word) and Frenchman by adoption. My pre-conceived opinion or bias is in the form of an aversion to the American tourists who annually plague the French capital. (And I have friends.) Actually, these eager dollar-bearers are not such a bad lot but habitually impress their hosts as being insensitive, arogant, uncultured and basically rather stupid. Any French policeman will readily attest to the fact that Americans are forever asking questions though rarely seem to know just where it is they want to go. Also, they spend the most money and get the least in return as tourists.

Desperate as the situation appears to be, all is not perdu and I would like to offer an alternative to the many pamphlets, folders and misguided guidebooks now available, which only serve to confuse and bewilder these well-meaning souls. Everybody, of course, has his or her personal or professional advice for these urbanites (or, better, troglodytes) as they prepare the seasonal onslaught, but this little mode de combat is directed to those unfortunate few who find themselves borderline cases in the world of "IN" and "OUT." I realize that this cosmic-top-secret information may be intercepted by those perverted beasts who are lifetime members of the "Out" society and always manage to foul up everything in sight, but feel obligated—it's really my savior complex—to take the risk. Therefore, I here begin (with apologies to Esquire Magazine) the first French reader of "IN" and "OUT" for the smart young man a Paris:

Making previous travel arrangements is definitely "OUT" but secreting away during your lunch break without telling anyone is "In." You're "OUT" if you travel to Europe by plane or ship; driving or taking the Norfolk & Western is "IN." While this may prove a bit difficult, it will provide you with a coup de grace in conversation at the Ritz Bar (which happens to be "OUT"). The Left Bank is "OUT", but then so is the Right Bank, so you'd better find a room on the Ile de la Cite to be safe. Be careful not to be associated with the forlorn American artists who spend their days painting Notre Dame on postcards for the American Embassy commissary—they're way 'OUT.' Once you're comfortably ettled in a chambre d'action, the sudden urge to pick up the trail of Brigitte Bardot may possess you, but she's "OUT" so forget it. Before moving up to the big game, one must first learn to shoot duck, n'est pas?

Since this is your voyage de bapteme, you naturally want to see the sights but that is also "OUT" except between the hour of 3 a.m. and 5 a.m. on Monday mornings in a "fly-it-yourself" helicopter. Carrying a camera and a guidebook or wearing some ridiculous Alpine hat littered with emblems from countries one has supposedly visited is positively "OUT." To keep from looking obvious and being spotted as a touriste americain, try strolling along some petite rue while actually studying a Japanese almanac, a Polynesian cookbook or new plans for blowing up the Suez Canal. For transportation, one walks or takes the Metro. (Roller skating is very shiek but not recommended for the nouvea arrive.) Second class on the Metro is "OUT" and First class "IN" only if you travel with a Second class ticket. (Remember to eat plenty of garlic before taking the Metro.) If the chef de train should check tickets during your ride, don't let on that you speak French, English or German. Try answering his demands for your billet in Punjabi, Gubhajius or Azerbaijani and you may pull it off. There will be a slight penalty if caught. Wherever you go, staring at Parisian landmarks is "OUT." Walking around taking notes from the kiosks is "IN" and probably the most informative means of passing the mornings until drinking time.

Bar hopping is "IN" for those who speak French fluently. If you speak no foreign languages, you're "OUT", must drink only in the American Legion Bar and should have stayed home in the first place. For the linguists, Basque is "IN" on the Left Bank, Zwihili on the Right. While playing the bar game, drinking American whisky or French wine is "OUT." Two drinks that are "IN" for the moment are Orval, a Belgian beer brewed by trappist monks (you'll be "IN" for a while but "OUT" very soon), and California champagne mixed with Creme de Menthe (these two don't mix too well, but look extremely weird in a brandy snifter). Frozen Drambuie floats in Guiness beer are "IN" and good for you.. Drinking licorice brandy from a paper bag is rather smart, but botas and two liter glass boots are absolument interdit.

The following establishments are "OUT": the Deux Magots (Sartre stopped frequenting this cafe years ago), the Crazy Horse Saloon, the George V Bar, the Cafe de la Paix (unless you peddle oriental rugs and smoked whale blubber from a push cart) and the upstairs tearoom at Smith's Bookshop. For a limited time only, the following are to be considered "IN": Le Village in St. Germain des Pres, the Lapin Agile, Storyville (for ancient jazz recordings, anonymity and claustrophobia), Le Chapiteau and Belgique Joyeuse (which are in Brussels where you'll find the World's Fair less crowded this year), the Scheherazade (tell the doorman that Remarque sent you), Madame Arthur (only if you can distinguish between odd and even) and the Caveau de la Bolee (for a late rampage). Crashing the cocktail parties of the diplomatic corps is "IN" and practically a lost art.

If you find yourself slightly confused at this point, you must be getting the message. Our next installment will give you "IN"-formation on the restaurants, how to play the artsy-craftsy role and the obscure facts guaranteed to make one an overnight success.

Tuesday Evening Series: A Good Recital

Arthur Lessing

It is a pleasure to report that the sonata recital of Mr. Edgar Alden and Mr. William Newman in Hill Hall last Tuesday evening was representative of both artists' deep and honest devotion to the art of the sonata, and was, for that reason, not only an artistic success but a personal triumph as well for the two performers.

Mr. Alden and Mr. Newman performed violin sonatas of Beethoven, Brahms, and Prokofieff. In all three they showed taste, refinement, and a through knowledge of the music. Mr. Alden's violin tone is honest and healthy in character, and in its clarity is both pure and focused. It is a tone created by a sure bowing arm which moves without breaks or uneveness. Throughout his playing there was not a single rough stroke all evening. Though one could wish for a larger range of sound at times during his playing, one could not help but admire his sense of delicacy in selecting his dynamics in proportion to what the music asks of his violin. It was a schema of dynamics beautifully adapted to not only the musical demand in loudness or softness, but (and this is the mark of an artist) also satisfied the shape and movement of the individual phrase. Everything that can be said of Mr. Alden's playing applies equally well to Mr. Newman's performance at the piano. In fact, this identity of tone, temperament, and musical conception of dynamics, phrasing, tempo, and sense of intimate drama added greatly to an ensemble playing of the highest musicianship. In this ensemble there was almost a complete complimentarity of musical purpose and intent.

The program opened with a delicate reading of Beethoven's "Spring" Sonata in F Major, Opus 24, a work that, appropriately, shows the budding of Beethoven' musical genius. At times it is touchingly fresh and open to the ear, while at other times (particularly in the monotonous Alberti bass accompaniment of the opening theme in the second movement) Beethoven seems almost frankly academic. I wished Mr. Newman would have even more underplayed this particular section as he already did, for the stilted accompaniment at this spot seriously interferes with our enjoyment of the flowing theme. Both performers were superb in the last movement of this sonata.

The high point of the evening, however, was the performance of Brahms' Sonata in G Major, Opus 78, for me personally the most touching of the three works he wrote for the violin and piano. The opening and principle themes of the first and last movement rank among the greatest moments in musical melody: they are melodies of almost superhuman beauty that touches the heart painfully and directly. Mr. Alden's playing of the opening of the first movement of this sonata was absolutely glorious. He showed himself to be completely sympathetic to the phrasing of the theme and executed it with tenderness and extreme care. I would have preferred a slightly faster tempo for the Adagio movement that followed; as they played it, however, one could only be amazed at the performers' ability to hold together the flow of this difficult movement in spite of a tempo that could easily have destroyed the sense of line. Mr. Newman's playing particularly in this movement was true to the music: subtle and with gentleness. A beautifully detailed reading of the final movement of Brahms' perfect union of melancholy poignancy with will joyfulness in this sonata brought to a close the first part of the evening's concert. Here was not the restless and driving Brahms in this performance, but rather the gentle, relaxed, and, above all, expansive Brahms - an interpretation which was both consistent and completely valid in the performance violinist Alden and pianist Newman gave it.

(Incidentally, couldn't something be done in Hill Hall about adequately warning the public that the intermission is over, so that we do not have to insult our performing artists by having them wait on the stage until the audience is seated? As it is now, I do think it disrespectful and irritating to have our performers subjected to this practice.)

The concert concluded with a delightfully light and airy performance of Prokofieff's Sonata in D Major, one of this composer's most characteristic works. With its neo-classic melodies and harmony, it is a sonata of beautiful shape and style. Again the performance was in complete sympathy with the composer's intent. Both the artists showed a concern with detail in the very difficult Presto and subtle Andante. The final movement brought the sonata to a clearly-defined end, although, I must admit, I am bothered by the middle section of this movement which does not seem to work well with the rest of the movement either in terms of contrast or change.

Except for a certain lack of direct involvement with the music the artists played, this was a concert of refined feeling and delicate performance. Again, it showed a deep devotion on the part of both Mr. Alden and Mr. Newman to the art of the sonata. The audience showed in its enthusiastic applause that it was grateful to the gentlemen for sharing this devotion with them. I join the audience in this sentiment.

Editor:

The members of the Student Legislature Ways and Means Committee have requested that I make a statement to the press regarding the disposition of RW-26-22, A Resolution of Policy Concerning Subsidiary Organizations of the Student Legislature, introduced by David Grigg (UP). The resolution was tabled indefinitely to committee, and the introducer who was present, stated that he had no intentions of trying to force its consideration before the Legislature.

The members of the committee felt (unanimously I can say) that Representative Grigg's intentions in introducing the resolution were unquestionably sincere in an attempt to relieve the Legislature of legislation dealing with minor and unimportant minutia that could be adequately dealt with or was already being dealt with by an organiation subsidiary to the Legislature to which the Legislature had expressly delegated authority to deal with such matters. We deplored the manufacture out of the introduction of this resolution of a political issue which has provided an additional rupture to the cancerous sore of dormitory-fraternity rivalry which constantly plagues this campus. We agreed that your editorial of February 14 and defensive statements made in the University Party meeting of February 17 both contributed to this rupture.

Reasons for our tabling of the resolution included: (1) the recognition of a statute passed by the Student Legislature in the 25th Session which made it a recommended duty of the prospective introducer of a piece of legislation to consult with the party or parties and/or organization or organizations which would be materially affected by the proposed legislation in order to determine whether or not the intentions of the proposed legislation had been, were being, or soon would be carried out under auspices other than that of the Legislature. (2) the realization that it is the responsibility of the standing committees of the Student Legislature to ferret out irresponsible, unnecessary, and inadequate legislation in committee sessions before such legislation gains a second reading on the floor of the Legislature, and (3) the suspicion that a legislative body can not constitutionally limit its own powers in fulfilling its legislative function, a limitation which we felt was being imposed by the proposed resolution's wording, i.e. ". . . the Student Legislature will refrain from passing legislation which could better be handled . . ."

Repreentative Grigg took part in our discussion in a very self-composed and indeed interesting manner, and he accepted the decision of the committee gracefully. I can truthfully say that at no time during the discussion of his resolution did tempers become frayed.

Editor:

Much comment has been heard around campus about the changes in the reorganization of the University Party. Most of it is good and rightly so because now there will be equal representation for all campus units with no one group controlling the vote by having a strong block of all its members present. There will be more dorm participation with the new campaign to reach every member of the student body through personal interviews.

As in the past the University Party has been attacked often on the grounds that it is the party of fraternities and sororities. In the present this argument cannot stand. The University Party has always been open to any student on campus. Its organization was divided into fraternity, sorority, and dormitory units. This was a logical division based on living quarters and interest. Because the fraternities and sororities had the power to tell their pledges to come to the meetings and the dorms had no such power, the former presented a larger and stronger group. This was not the fault of the party or of the fraternities and sororities, but rather the fault of the individual who pushes work off on someone else and doesn't do his part unless compelled to do so by an authority. As the new system stands there will be no need to force the masses to attend, but rather those interested can become delegates and attend every meeting through interest.

The success of this new system is partly assured since it is thoroughly democratic with each group having equal representation and equal voting power. It is more feasible and practical than the old system. Its total success depends largely on the enthusiasm and ability of the preent University Party members.

Historian Tindall Appraises Odum

Five years after his death, Howard W. Odum emerges at the South's No. 1 observer of the first 50 years of the 20th century.

That is the appraisal of UNC historian George B. Tindall, writing in the current edition of "The Journal of Southern History."

Dr. Tindall presents the late sociologist as one often dismayed by the reaction he received from results of his studies—but no less determined to seek truth and present his facts regardless of the commotion his social findings might arouse.

Odum is labeled "the most perceptive observer of the Southern scene during the first half of the century."

HE SAW THE SOUTH

Dr. Tindall said Dr. Odum saw the South and saw it in all its parts. "He saw it whole, the old and new, the folk and the academic, the agrarian and the industrial, the spiteful and the generous—and saw it with a profound sensitivity and respect."

The UNC history professor declared that Odum was "a scholar in a grand manner."

Odum was a "rare academic specimen whose scholarship had practical implications which he himself sought to apply in social action."

GEORGE TINDALL

Dr. Tindall said:

"Beyond the surveys and theory, he looked and planned toward a better future in which the South should not set its face against the world with periodic forays into sectionalism, but would seek to blend modern technique of social science with the best of its folkways to create a South capable and willing to work out its economic, social and political problems by means of scientific methods and persistent effort."

CONTRIBUTES IN 4 AREAS

Four areas in which Odum made contributions to Southern history were listed:

1) Activities at UNC: founding the Sociology Department, School of Social Work, the Institute for Research in Social Science, the publication "Social Forces" and the Department of Planning.

2) His body of descriptive writings on the South, especially about the people, white and black.

3) The rich body of papers on many aspects of Southern development.

4) The "Odumesque development of regionalism," in which he called for implementation in social action and planning.

Dr. Odum strived for overall regional planning, but present agencies fall short of what Odum envisioned, Dr. Tindall said.

"A part of the responsibility for this condition must be assigned to Odum himelf," declared Tindall. "He suffered from the occupational hazard of academicians (not only sociologists), difficulty in expressing his advanced concepts with absolute clarity, in his case partly because of his addiction to sociological terminology; but also partly because he never reached the ultimate synthesis and explanation of his ideas."

SUFFERS ACADEMIC TIMIDITY

Dr. Tindall went further, saying there is some suspicion that Odum "suffered from an academic timidity that made it difficult to express his ideas with full clarity because he inwardly shrank from the controversies they would inspire—and from their inevitable corollary of political action. That he could achieve clairty is evident from the heights of artistry that he reached at times."

Beginning with a quotation from the Washington Post, the author agreed that "Howard W. Odum was the Eli Whitney of the Modern South. He inspired a revolution. Certainly there was one one—unless it was Franklin Roosevelt—whose influence was greater than Odum's on the development of the region below the Potomac."

Tindall said misunderstandings and criticisms of Odum's program reached a peak when his magnum opus, "Southern Regions," was banned from public schools in his native state of Georgia by Eugene Talmade's state school board.

Odum's role in race relations, with its emphasis on interracial cooperation led to his participation in organizing the Southern Regional Council. Odum wanted the council to grow into a more general regional-development organization.

Stop Peace-Time Draft Bill Is Narrowly Defeated In Phi

By HOBART STEELE

A resolution for the abolishment of the peace-time military draft was defeated by a narrow margin by the Philanthropic Literary Society Tuesday night.

The resolution stated that in this age of great technical advancement America needs professional soldiers who will stay in the armed services for terms long enough to justify the vast technical training they must receive. This would eliminate the great turnover of men now evident in the present selective service. This army of "professional soldiers" would be maintained by means of better pay and better living quarters.

Rep. David Matthews, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, spoke in favor of the bill. Matthews said that America is a land of freedom, and that the present draft system was a breach of this freedom. He said an increase in military prestige and pay would enable a "comparatively small professional military force to be maintained."

In opposition to the bill, Representatives Stan Black and Bill Jackson both agreed that a strong land force was necessary to maintain our strong position in world affairs. Black said that a smaller technically trained force would make atomic warfare inevitable.

Rep. Don Jacobs said in opposition to the bill, that professional militarism was in direct conflict with free government. He showed that throughout history, the rise of a professional army inevitably led to the overthrow of the government.

Rep. O. A. Lopez spoke as a "Marine and physicist." He said that if the draft were abolished in peacetime, people of lower intelligence would dominate the armed services.

The resolution was defeated by a small majority of representatives and also of a vote of all members in the hall, including guests.

Glen Simpson, critic, reported that the debate had stimulating effects and was of "excellent" quality. He named Rep. David Matthews Speaker of the Evening.

This advertisement is one of a series of facts about the lawful sale of Malt Beverages

"Legal Control" Deserves Your Support!

The North Carolina "legal control" system for the sale of alcoholic beverages has proven in the last 25 years that it works in the best interests of all the people . . . it has also shown to have worked in the best interests of temperance and moderation, according to the latest statistics on alcoholic beverage consumption. North Carolina has the lowest per capita consumption of beer of any state in the union.

Any system that has such a record is deserving of the support of all the people, regardless of their personal convictions, because the alternative to "legal control" is prohibition — or no control.

Prohibition not only fails in its intent and purpose, but it breeds crime and disrespect for the law. It fails to change the personal habits of anyone. It provides for no effective control, which results in its demoralizing influences adversely affecting every law-abiding community where it has been tried.

That is why the progressive leadership in more and more localities is recognizing the fact that "legal control" is the best method of handling the sale of beer and ale — that it works in the best interests of all the people, and of the communities where they live. That is why the advocates of the "legal control" system firmly believe it is deserving of your support.

Pianist Featured In Musicale

One of America's leading young pianists, Alexander Fiorillo, will be featured in the second of a series of concerts to be given this semester by Les Petites Musicals of the GMAB. The public is invited to attend this concert which will be held in the main lounge of GM at 8 p.m. Sunday, Feb. 22.

Noted Lecturer Will Speak In Annual 'Y' Conference

Michael Harrington, noted free-lancer and political affairs lecturer, has been slated to speak at the 'Y' during its annual YMCA-YWCA Conference March 6-8.

Harrington spoke on campus twice during 1958. He was a guest speaker for the Symposium on Survival in the 1958 spring semester and also spoke to Carolina students during summer school.

He attended Holy Cross University, Yale Law School, and the University of Chicago where he received an English Literary Degree. Since graduation, has has been associated editor of The Catholic Worker, a writer for The New Republic, and is presently a free-lance writer for Commonweal magazine. He is engaged also in research for the Fund for The Republic under auspices of the Ford Foundation.

Harrington has been characterized by several literary magazines as "a dynamic speaker with uncanny understanding of modern problems and with some definite ideas as to the solution of these problems."

Miss Anne Queen, Y adviser, will talk with Harrington in New York City over the weekend when she is there in connection with the Y's UN Seminar. She called Harrington "an authority on American foreign policy and a very able speaker on public affairs."

Conference Committee Co-Chairman Jerry Hocutt stated that no definite topic for Harrington's speech has been selected as of yet.

Bank on the future—but don't write checks against it.

Limited Opening Of Stacks To Be Tried In Library

By A. PRINGLE PIPKIN

The stacks of Wilson Library will be partially opened to persons attached to the University" on a trial basis beginning on March 1, the student library committee announced recently.

Attendants will still be maintained at the circulation desk to get books for those who do not wish to go into the stacks. All books coming from the stacks will continue to be checked out at the circulation desk.

This move was taken so that "a person not desiring to wait . . . while a staff member runs for a book for that person might go into the stacks and get the book," the committee's recommendation states.

The committee expects that this procedure will free more staff members from the circulation desk so they can spend more time in keeping the books in the stacks straight.

The procedure will also relieve some of the pressure of the increasing student body and will "enable the students to come into closer contact with, and thus more fully realize the available resources of the library."

The recommendation of the library committee, chaired by Larry Taylor, was signed by the committee and presented to Dr. Jerrold Orne, librarian, last Tuesday night. He has approved the recommendations.

At the present time the library committee is making signs to make it easier to find books and to remind students of the rules:

1) Smoking in the stacks is absolutely forbidden.

2) Books are not, under any circumstance, to be returned to the shelves of the stacks. Books removed from the shelves will be placed on a centrally located table and reshelved by staff members.

3) Noise is to be kept to a minimum.

4) Vacant carrels may be used to look at a book, but the carrels must be vacated when their possessors want to use them.

At the end of a six week period this policy will be re-evaluated.

Marvin Tatum, committee member who was in charge of the recent library book sale, termed the sale as "right successful." Funds from the sale will be used to buy new furniture for the Graduate Lounge adjoining the stacks.

Alpha Kappa Psi Tours Tobacco Co.

To inform themselves more about tobacco processing, approximately 30 members and pledges of Alpha Kappa Psi fraternity toured the plant and physical facilities of Leggett & Myers Tobacco Co. in Durham.

The Leggett & Myers hostesses showed the group how each process was related in producing the product and getting the product to the consumer.

Each process was broken down into its component parts in order to give the viewers a better idea of how much labor and material go into the production of a single cigarette..

Following the tour the group joined in an informal smoker in the company's lounge.

Fidel Castro, Debate Topic Of Club In GM

Is Fidel Castro a new dictator in Latin America or has he been a beneficiary to the people of Cuba?

The Cosmopolitan Club has invited the student body to hely decide the issue. They are especially interested in having the political science and law students of the University give their opinions.

The meeting is scheduled for Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial.

People interested in joining the Cosmopolitan Club are invited to attend the meeting that will also include taking in new members.

Chess Club Has 30-30 Tournament

The UNC Chest Club is sponsoring a "30-30" tournament of the Swiss type to begin Sunday, Dan Gallik, club president, announced.

The tournament will be a six round "Swiss type" with the first three rounds to be played Sunday and the final three rounds on the following Sunday, Feb. 29. Registration will begin at noon Sunday in Roland Parker Lounge No. 1 in Graham Memorial.

The designation "30-30" refers to the time of the tournament. Each player must move at the rate of 30 moves per 30 minutes. Gallik said that this is faster than normal tournament play where 20 or 25 moves per hour are required, but it is considerably slower than "rapid transit" chess in which each player has ten seconds per move.

All players are urged to bring their own sets and especially chess clocks since all games must be timed.

Any interested chess players are urged to enter.

CHARLOTTE GRADUATE CENTER

Dean Appraises UNC Branch In Charlotte

By RON SHUMATE

"I think this is one of the finest operations the University has."

The dean of the UNC School of Education, Arnold Perry, was speaking of the Charlotte Graduate Center.

Dean Perry went said the center is "larger than we ever expected it to be. Our relations with Charlotte College have been especially good all around."

The Center, which holds its classes in the same building being used by Charlotte College, has had an average enrollment, since its beginning in the fall of 1954, of about 100 students.

COURSES OFFERED

Courses offered at the Center may be taken for advanced undergraduate or graduate credit and may also be applied toward a certificate or toward certificate renewal.

"We offer only those courses that can be taught on campus as well as off campus," Dean Perry said. All courses offered thus far have been in professional education.

The standards of the Center are identical with the standards at the University. The only difference, according to Dean Perry, is that the students may take only two courses for a total of six semester hours of 30 required for a master's degree.

MANY GRAD STUDENTS

Graduate students and special students with bachelor's degrees take most of the courses, with more than 95 per cent of these being fully qualified graduate students.

"Most of them," said Dean Perry, "are housewives and business people who hold a bachelor's degree and wish credit toward a teaching degree. Few advanced undergraduates take the courses."

Dean Perry said many of the courses now offered are directly related to the work the teachers are doing on the job. Therefore they "are more meaningful and more helpful than would be the case for persons who are not actually teaching."

All courses are taught by regular members of the graduate faculty at the University. "We've even had Kenan professors traveling to Charlotte to teach classes," Dean Perry said.

PROFESSORS COMMUTE

The professors leave Chapel Hill around noon each Tuesday, drive to Charlotte teach classes and arrive back here around midnight. When the roads are icy the professors fly to Charlotte, leaving the Raleigh-Durham airport about 2 p.m. and returning about 8:30 p.m.

Books for the Center are provided through the Extension Division Library, the Peabody Curriculum Library, the Charlotte College library and through a special collection bought by the school of Education.

The report on the five-year period will be submitted to the administrative board of the graduate school at UNC. The project will be evaluated on the basis of reports from professors, Charlotte College, the Charlotte city school administration and on the enrollment.

Dean Perry said when Charlotte College moves to its new campus "we hope the courses offered will be extended and we hope to provide graduate training in fields other than professional education."

Interviews Slated For YW Directors

Are you interested in professional YWCA work?

The National Board of the YWCA is sending a representative to the Placement Service February 23 and 24, to interview interested women.

These jobs include directing teenage programs and young adult programs in community YWCA's throughout the United States. The YWCA offers jobs which are varied, important, satisfying, flexible and give the employe a chance to use all of her abilities.

In YWCA work there is always something new and interesting to try, and it is a job which a woman can keep after marriage.

College graduates with a liberal arts background are eligible for these positions. Interested students should see the Placement Service to arrange for an interview.

Grail-Mural Sports Fest Postponed Until March 17

The second annual Grail-Mural Sports Jamboree, originally scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday, March 10 and 11, has been postponed to Tuesday and Wednesday, March 17 and 18.

The change is due to the ACC Track Meet March 14, which will preclude the use of Woollen Gym on the previously scheduled dates. Entries will still be due March 2.

The purpose of the Grail-Mural Jamboree is to promote a greater degree of friendship and sportsmanship between fraternity and dormitory men, while providing an opportunity for the top intramural athletes on campus to engage in keenly competitive sports contests.

The program consists of handball, table tennis, badminton, half court basketball, archery, foul shooting, foot relays and swimming. The swimming competition, including for the first time this year, will consist of two relays: a free style relay and a medley event involving four different strokes. The swimming teams will consist of four men, two from each organization.

Each fraternity will be paired with a dormitory and the two will compete as a team throughout the jamboree. All organizations are urged to become acquainted and to schedule practice sessions as soon as the pairings are announced, which will be soon after the March 2 meeting of the Joint Intramural Council.

The Order of the Grail has purchased 30 trophies for individual event winners and two large trophies for the organizations comprising the team winning the jamboree championship.

The Grail and the Intramural Department, co-sponsors of the Jamboree, have suggested that each organization hold a series of tournaments within their group to determine the best performers in each event, thus assuring the keenest possible competition and maximizing each group's chances of winning.

Bridge Winners Announced

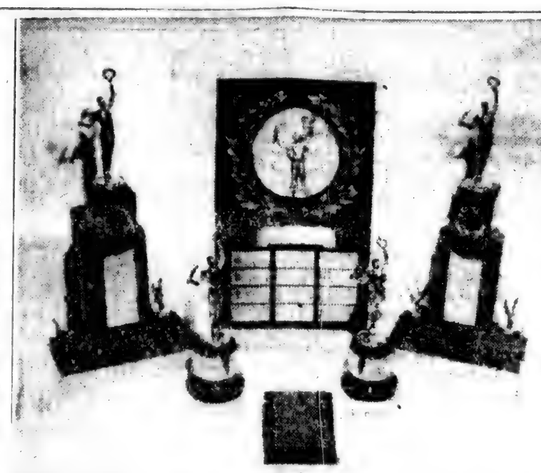
Barry Karp and Phil Moss, East West, Section B, won first place among the students in the February Master Point Tourney.

Twenty tables divided into two sections were used in the Monday night event. The following is a list of the student winners:

Don Gray and Jim Butler won second place, and Milburn Gibbs and Ralph Macklin won third place in East West, Section B. In the North South direction of Section B, only Bill Caison was among student winners winning second place.

In Section A, Peter Williams and an Indian student, Krishna Murthy, won second place East West, while John Embry and Narvel Crawford won third place.

The bridge club took special time out during the evening to honor Mr. and Mrs. Paul Smith who have especially assisted the club in its activities.



GRAIL-MURALS—Pictured above are trophies that will be awarded to winners of the second annual Grail Mural Jamboree. The winning organizations will receive large trophies, and the small ones will be awarded to individual winners.

Judicial System Discussed By Di

The Dialectic Senate discussed the campus judicial system Tuesday night in Di Hall, in an informal discussion that largely pitted Paddy Wall and Nancy Adams against Don Dotson in a verbal battle over the Women's Honor Council.

The meeting began with an explanation by Miss Adams, chairman of the Women's Honor Council, of the function, procedures and mechanisams of the Council.

Included in Miss Adams' presentation was an explanation of the dual jurisdiction of the Council over violations of both honor and social codes.

Senator Don Dotson questioned on what basis the members of the Council handed down their decisions—whether it was on the basis of feelings or was an objective assessment of the facts.

Miss Adams answered that the jurors convicted a defendent of circumstantial evidence alone.

Questions concerning the secrecy of the trials were answered by Paddy Wall. She advised the Senate to put themselves in the place of a defendent to understand why trials are not published.

The only reason trials are not published is to assure the privacy of the girls on trial, acording to Miss Wall.

Mary Ann Weaver suggested that the student body should be made familiar with all trials. "In case an injustice is done or an undue punishment is given," said Miss Weaver, "There would be someone to stand behind the student, as a girl may feel that her punishment is unjust, but is afraid to appeal."

Nancy Adams answered that she "didn't feel it is fair to ask the campus to judge on sketchy information and it isn't fair to the defendent to reveal all the facts in the case."

Miss Adams answered a question as to the necessity of character witnesses by saying that, while they may not be particularly necessary or beneficial, they had always been recommended to the Council and the defendent should be allowed to decide whether she wanted them or not.

Paddy Wall added that she felt that the presence of character witnesses raised the morale of the person on trial.

She said the main duty of the Council is to see that rules are carried out and kept flexible. She noted that the rules are very intangible. "Rules must be intangible," she said.

"It is up to us to see that the rules are carried out," she added.

Following Miss Wall's explanation, Senator Dotson asked for a defination of "social rule."

Tony Brady, dormitory repreentative to Residence Council, said that a social rule "should respect each person as an individual, giving them the privacy due them, but not going overboard."

Senator Dotson then asked if social rules do what they are supposed to do.

The answer to his question was yes.

Senator Dotsin asked to whom the Councils look as ultimate sovereigns.

Nancy Adams answered that Honor Council looks to the Student-Faculty Advisory Board, which hears appeals of Honor Council cases.

Paddy Wall said that Residence Council has absolute authority, but the faculty are consulted.

We're in. Unless something unforeseen happens, Carolina will represent he Atlantic Coast Conference in the NCAA championship tournament.

Here's the basis for this specuiation—the Tar Heels have an 11-0 record in the ACC with 3 games to play. Their closest, and only, contender is North Carolina State and the Wolfpack closed its ACC season with a 12-2 record.

Unless Carolina loses two of its last three conference games, it will go into the ACC tourney as the top-seeded team. State has clinched second place, so the two teams can't possibly meet until the finals. Since State is on probation, it can't represent the ACC.

Therefore, if Carolina can get into the finals of the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament against N.C. State, it will represent the league, win or lose.

* * *

Of course, things could happen which don't' seem possible right now. But we'll go on record as saying the Tar Heels will not only go into the tournament leading the ACC, but will be the team that represents the loop in NCAA action.

The way the pairings are set up, the number one team meets the number eight team on opening night. That means the Tar Heels will probably face South Carolina. The next night they would meet the winner of the game between numbers 4 and 5. That would be either Maryland or Wake Forest.

The last night, theoretically, they would meet the winner of the State (2)-Duke (3) game for the championship. So unless Duke can get by State, it looks like a clear shot.

If it weren't for the out-dated conference rule that provides for the ACC tournament to furnish a champ, there would be no sweat. As it is, things could conceivably get rough.

As for number one in the nation, we should be "in" there too The win over State was essential in holding the top position, as now the Tar Heels figure to finish up with a 20-1 season record.

Of course, Auburn, number two, and Kentucky, number three, meet this week. Auburn is undefeated and if they beat the Wildcats they could conceivably jump to number one. But the Plainsmen have a lack-luster schedule: they haven't played a team in the top ten all season.

Should Kentucky win they could vault back up to the position they held so long, but it is improbable. The Cats have lost two games, and Carolina has lost but one.

Neither can the men who vote in the polls disregard the fact that Carolina has won three games over teams who have held the coveted number one position. They whipped Cincinatti once and State twice.

So, it looks like from here that the Tar Heels are having quite a "rebuilding" year. And it looks like they may have the best chance of any team in the country to win the national championship. That's a long way off, but in 1957 it was a long way off and what happened is history.

ACC Commissioner To Rule On Fight

GREENSBORO — (AP) — Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner Jim Weaver said Thursday he expects to hand down a ruling over the weekend in the case of the free-for-all fight which marred last Thursday's North Carolina at Wake Forest basketball game.

He has gathered testimony and evidence from various sources and now is engaged in studying it before reaching a conclusion.

"I've talked to players at both schools, coaches, athletic directors, faculty chairmen and game officials and have studied films of the game," said Weaver.

He said he would, under ACC rules, first mail his findings to the two schools and then release the decision publicly after the institutions had had time to receive the first word from him.

Trouble erupted in the final 30 seconds of a game won by North Carolina at Winston-Salem 75-66. Players scuffled for a loose ball and in an instant others from the benches joined in the fray. Coaches and police sought to restore order.

Many in the crowd of 8,200 then entered the milling and trouble broke out at an increased tempo. After the fighting subsided, the game's final 30 seconds were completed with each coach sending out a new unit of reserves. No players were ejected.

The two schools figured in another fighting incident three years ago, at Chapel Hill.

Weaver fined North Carolina and Wake Forest $500 each after that one and suspended two players, North Carolina's Bob Cunningham and Wake Forest's Bill Tucker, until the day after the windup of the conference tournament.

Mural Wrestling Set

The weigh-ins for the Intramural Wrestling tournament have been extended until 6 p.m. tonight. This will be the only registration that will be necesary for the tournament. Also at the time of registration a medical rating of "A" will be necesary.

The weight classes are 123, 130, 137, 147, 157, 167, 177, and unlimited. Organizations may have only one entry in each weight class.

The events will begin on Tuesday the 24th of March, and the tournament will be on the single elimination basis in all weight classes.

It will be necessary for all persons who reach the semi-finals to be re-weighed in order to meet their weight requirements. There will be no weight allowance. The contestants must weigh-in within 24 hours of their match and no later than ten minutes prior to the scheduled starting time of their match.

The tournament will represent groups in only three of the Intramural divisions. All participates from the fraternities will wrestle in the blue division. The dormitory and graduate divisions will remain separate.

Individual trophies will be awarded to all winners, and team plaques will go to the winning organizations in each division.

State-Carolina Sidelights

Score Hard To Believe

By RUSTY HAMMOND

It was almost unbelievable, the spectacle that unfolded itself in Woollen Gym Wednesday night. The scoreboard said Carolina 45, State 32, and that meant the Tar Heels held a 13-point lead over the Wolfpack.

Yet true it was, and even though things got fast and furious in the closing minutes, it was obvious who had the better team. Frank McGuire stated after the game that he thought his team "lacked the killer instinct." Carolina doesn't pile up big margins.

Could the Tar Heels have really poured it on and run State into the ground? Maybe McGuire added jokingly, "That finish must have been for TV, cause it sure wasn't for me."

The unsung hero of the contest was Harvey Salz, whose ball-hawking and quarterbacking keyed the victory. Salz, only scored 12 points, but he was the sparkplug.

Lee Shaffer's phenomenal ability to shoot while suspended in mid-air in all kinds of positions paid dividends of 23 points. Both he and York Larese, who had 22, broke into the clear under the basket frequently for lay-ups.

Moe Great Passes

The men feeding them were Salz and Doug Moe. Moe is the best passer we've seen all season. He has an uncanny ability to put the ball where it will do the most good in the shortest time.

Although the statistics would be hard to compile, we wonder just by how much Carolina has outscored the opposition in the first five minutes of the second half in all its games. Against State is was 9-4, against Duke it was 11-2, and so on down the line.

It seems that that particular point of the game is Carolina's best. Why? Maybe what Frank McGuire says in the dressing room, maybe the rest, maybe because the Heels are ready and the other team is caught flat-footed. It could be any one of a number of factors, but it holds true in almost every game.

Larese Had Trick

York Larese had a trick up his sleeve Wednesday night that paid off in blue chips. He had noticed that almost every time State's John Richter gets the ball, he has a tendency to turn his back to the basket. Larese was cutting around Richter's blind side, getting in front of him and stealing the ball.

And Larese wasn't the only robber. When Carolina pulled away late in the first half, Harvey Salz accomplished a thing rarely done-he stole the ball from Lou Pucillo.

New Cheer

The students had a novel cheer, one that will probably grow in popularity as the season goes on. "We're number one, who in hell are you!" shook the rafters Wednesday night.

When the Tar Heels were introduced individually before the start of the game, Doug Moe was presented first. Moe trotted out to the center of the court and got a standing ovation that showed no signs of stopping. He was looking around for help, but at last the other members of the team came out, one by one, even though it was impossible to hear their names called on the PA system.

Woollen Was Packed

The gym holds 4,800 but there were more than that present. By 7:00 the place was ¾ full and by 7:30 there was hardly a seat left. Yet they kept coming in, and at game time there were many standing around the sidlines.

What if Bob MacGillvary and George Stepanovich hadn't fouled out? Would it have been a different story? Possibly, but fouling out is part of basketball. Maybe if the two State stars had remained in the game the Tar Heels wouldn't have staged their "TV" finish.

WAA Point Standings

The point system for giving recognition for participation in W.A.A. activities is a system under which an individual may earn points for an organization by participating in team or individual intramural tournaments. Ten entry points are given for each team entered in a tournament provided one game is played (won or lost) or is won by forfeit.

In individual sports one entry point is given to an organization for each person entered (maximum ten). Additional entries may be made, but not counted, for entry points. Entry points are not awarded unless one game is played (won or lost) or won by forfeit. Eight points are given to an organization for winning a match played or won by forfeit. Ten additional points are awarded to an organization for winning an individual or team tournament. Three points are awarded to the loser of a match played.

Awards Day Picnic

Two all-sports cups, one to the dormitory and one to the sorority division, are going to be awarded at the Awards Day Picnic on May 5. The awards will be given to the organization accumulating the greatest number of points during the year.

Organization standings so far are:

Matmen Out To Break Jinx

This Saturday afternoon the Carolina wrestling team will be attempting to break a strong jinx. They will invade Annapolis, Md. for a battle with Navy, a team which they have yet to defeat. Further, the Tar Heels will have to rebound from a 31-3 defeat at the hands of powerful Virginia Tech.

The Navy squad has lost previously this season to Maryland, who invades Woollen Gym on Feb. 28 to meet the Heels. Coach Sam Barnes stated that he expects a tough match with the Middies. Their strongest positions are the top three weights.

Much will depend upon the capable Perrin Henderson, the undefeated captain of the Carolina squad. Only he escaped defeat in the rout at VPI last Monday.

The Lineup: Champlin—123; Rhyne or Suttle—130; Henderson—137; Perrini—147; Russell—157; Atkinson—167; Matney—177 and Hurley—Heavy.

Trustees To Meet On Budget

Committee Tables Grigg Resolution On Policy

By STAN BLACK

The David Grigg resolution concerning the policy toward subsidiary organizations of Student Legislature, particularly the IDC and the IFC, was tabled by the Ways and Means Committee after its controversial reception last week.

The purpose of the resolution was to have the Legislature limit its own power in passing legislation dealing with dormitory and fraternity policy. This would have left the IDC and IFC free to legislate without the close supervision of the Student Legislature, as long as they continued "to follow the high purposes for which they were created and best serve the interests of those they represent."

Norman B. Smith, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, gave these reasons for tabling the resolution: its possible unconstitutionality and the recognition of a present statute making it the recommended duty of the introducer of a bill to consult with the persons or organizations affected by the proposed legislation. Rep. Grigg concurred in allowing his resolution to be tabled.

Bills introduced in the Legislature's meeting Thursday night concerned revisions in the Election Law and the establishment of a picnic and recreational area in Victory Village.

Dave Jones (SP) introduced a bill providing that residents of Teague Dorm, who are mainly medical and pharmaceutical students, vote in Parker Dorm. A bill introduced by Charlie Gray (UP) provided that two polling places be set up in both Town Men's I and Town Men's III. This would facilitate voting by students living in areas distant from the present single polling place in each district, he said:

Troy Blanton and Bill Miller coauthored the bill on a Victory Village recreational area. The bill calls for the appointment of a committee of three to study the problem and report back to the Legislature its findings as to the necessity and feasibility of such a project.

TOP RATING GETS TEST

Maryland Terps Play Host To Heels Tonight

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Heels, the number one team in the nation, put their top ranking on the line tonight when they journey to Maryland to battle the defending Atlantic Coast Conference champion Terrapins at 8 o'clock.

The powerful Tar Heels will be gunning for their 12 straight victory, and if win tonight can clinch at least a tie for the regular season ACC championship. Carolina's conference record is 11-0 with three games remaining.

Coach Bud Millikan's crew will need a victory over the Heels to stay in the league's first division. The Terps are currently in fourth place with a 5-7 record; their overall mark is 7-12.

Heels Won First Game

Carolina has defeated Maryland once this season, beating the Terps 64-57 in Chapel Hill. York Larese developed hot hands in that one and banged in 32 points for the winners.

Maryland considered a definite conference threat before the season began, has disappointed us in its so-so play. In their last outing, the Terrapins bowed to lowly Virginia 62-50.

Carolina's last game saw them whip sixth-rated North Carolina State for the second time this season, this time by 74-67.

The Terps' finest hour came early in the season in a losing cause when they pushed then first-ranked Kentucky to the limit before bowing 56-54.

Last season Maryland lured the Tar Heels into their spacious coliseum and handed them their first conference loss before a booing sellout crowd of 13,000. Carolina later reversed the decision in Chapel Hill.

17-1 Record

The Tar Heels, who go into the contest with a 17-1 overall record, continue to place all five starters in a double figure scoring average. Sop guard York Larese leads the pack with 16.8, followed by Lee Shaffer (13.9), Doug Moe (13.2), Harvey Salz (11.4) and Dick Keppley (10.6).

The big guns for Maryland will be Charlie McNeil, Al Bunge and Jim Halleck. Gene Danko and Bill Murphy will probably fill out the Terrapin line-up.

Coach Frank McGuire said of the game, "It's time for Maryland to have a big game, and this being number one can be a dangerous thing. Maryland has some fine ball players, fellows like Bunge, McNeil and Halleck."

Says He Will Seek Both Parties' Support

Davis Young, sophomore class president and former editor of the UNC Summer School Weekly, yesterday became the first candidate to announce for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel in the spring elections.

Young has worked on The Daily Tar Heel as a reporter, columnist and feature editor.

In addition to his class presidency and college newspaper activities, Young has worked with the Carolina Symposium, Student Legislature, Student Party, Orientation, Honor Council Jury, Current Affairs Committee, State Student Legislature and the Consolidated University Council. He is a member of the Chi Phi social fraternity

SEEKS TWO PARTY SUPPORT

Young announced he will seek the support of both the Student Party and the University Party. He said that he will not, however, align himself with either party as editor.

DAVIS YOUNG

Young issued the following statement on his candidacy:

"The issues facing The Daily Heel editor can be conveniently divided into three categories: (1) The Daily Tar Heel itself; (2) the campus; (3) miscellaneous.

"Naturally, I favor the continued independence and student control of The Daily Tar Heel. However, the price of student freedom is student responsibility.

EDITORIAL IRRESPONSIBILITY

"A good example of editorial irresponsibility was the recent series on sex at UNC by Cort Edwards. Sex is a delicate subject at any time; there is always a thin line between comment which is in good taste and comment which is vulgar and/or childishly obscene. Had it been my decision, this particular series would have found its way into the waste basket.

"As editor, my first act will be to restore Peanuts, Pogo, and Li'l Abner to the editorial page, from which space nothing short of World War III will remove them.

"All other campus issues are now secondary in importance to the overriding need for more money. We need more money for the serfs who toil on our faculty; we need more money for the library which is now inadequate and daily growing more so; we need more money for a decent gymnasium to house the national champs; we need more money for a student union. In short, the University must have more money. As editor, I can assure you that the paper will emphasize this problem and give loyal support to President Friday and Chancellor Aycock in this crucial area.

GIVES POLITICAL STAND

"My general political stance is that of a Lyndon Johnson Democrat. I agree with the political leadership of North Carolina that Supreme Court decisions are the law of the land. On foreign policy problems I am with Senator Fullbright of Arkansas who seems to think that talking with the Russians is better than fighting them.

"I am not a crusader; I do not own a soap box. It has been my experience that crusaders and soap boxers never achieve their objectives. The dogmatic fanaticism of the crusader is not to be confused with a genuine liberalism which gets results.

I will amplify this basic platform in subsequent statements and speeches in the course of the campaign."

Budget Skips Areas Vital To Research Triangle

By DAVE JONES

The Research Triangle, the downgrading of public servants, public school finance and a Student Union were among the topics touched upon by memebrs of the faculty of the Economics Department when asked about the 1959-61 Budget.

"The governor seems to be inconsistent in placing so much emphasis on the Research Triangle and then neglecting two of the three organizationsup on which it is most dependent, UNC and State," said Prof. Paul N. Guthrie, chairman of the Department of Economics.

"One thing that seems to be forgotten is that the Legislature, even when it does well, makes appropriations to match existing needs—not realizing that by the time that the biennium ends, we may have 1,000 more students who will have needs to be taken care of," Guthrie said.

ATTRACTING PROFS PROBLEM

"One of the greatest concerns I have is the problem of holding full professors and of attracting new full professors. If the sort of recommendation as those made is adopted, it would place us in an almost impossible position. We are competing not only with other colleges but with business and with government. This is especially true in economics and business administration.

"If the University is going to compete for professors, our competition will not only be local or regional—and this is where a lot of people delude themselves—but will be national. We must compete with Yale, Harvard, California and universities all over the country." Guthrie concluded.

Prof. Lowell D. Ashby said, "In general it's invreasingly difficult for the University to maintain itself at bargain prices." He said that it was impossible to "maintain a good department in absence of a good salary for the staff, even with a good dean and research facilities."

UNIVERSITIES RATED LOW

"The fact is that universities are generally rated low and that other government services are also low. The public takes little pride in its public servants." In pursuing this line of reasoning Ashby recommended "The Affluent Society" by John Kenneth Galbraith as a good primer.

UNC Leaders Present Views Before Board

Five Consolidated University of North Carolina leaders will present their viewpoint on the present budget as recommended by the Advisory Budget Commission at a meeting of the full Board of Trustees to be held Monday, at 11 a.m. at the Capitol in Raleigh.

President William Friday, Chancellors William Aycock, Gordon Blackwell, and Carey Bostian of Carolina, State, and Woman's College will give their commentary as a kickoff in a campaign to get funds for the three Universities.

At a Chancelor's Cabinet meeting held yesterday, Aycock announced that the University would present its recommendations for the capital improvements budget to the Board of Higher Education, March 6.

MEETING TO FIX POLICY

The meeting will be held to fix the Board's policy towards the capital improvements of the various institutions in light of the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations.

The Consolidated University of North Carolina officials will also meet with the joint appropriations committee March 18, where approximately three hours is reserved for them.

The Chancellor gave the group a breakdown on the budget figure which was prepared during the past several days, when many meeting have been held to study the budget.

APPEAL TO STUDENTS

Both Aycock and Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver appealed to the students to help out with the budget and to stay with the University team in fighting for an adequate budget.

The Chancellor made it clear that no person was being told to keep silent and that the right to express opinion was something that he had no wish to tamper with, however, he added that local commentary, notably by The Daily Tar Heel, was in his opinion makng progress more difficult rather than easier.

LIBRARY SITUATION

In commenting of the library situation, Aycock pointed out that the University was trying to achieve a 400,000 annual book buying budget by 1970 and added that the University in recommending $527,000 for book buying in the biennium had raised their request with respect to the last biennium's appropriations by $130,000, a figure approximately $50,000 more than was necessary to build a gradual program until 1970 to a two year spending total of $800,000.

Nominations Begin In UP For Offices

Nominations for 45 campus offices and Legislature seats will be made by the University Party at meetings Monday and Tuesday next week. Both party meetings will be held at 7 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

UP Charman John Minter outlined nominating procedure this week: only delegates may vote for candidates. This means neither nominees nor their speakers will be allowed to vote.

Students interested in running for office should contact a UP delegate in their dormitory or fraternity or sorority house, Minter said.

For all offices and Legislature seats, the nominees will speak for themselves. Nominees for student body offices and editor of The Daily Tar Heel will be allowed two speakers. All other nominees will be allowed one speaker.

At Monday night's UP meeting candidates for the following positions will be selected: editor of The Daily Tar Heel, editor of the Yackety Yack, senior class officers (president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and social chairman), chairman of Women's Residence Council, president of the Carolina Athletic Association, president of the Women's Athletic Association and head cheerleader.

Candidates for these Legislature seats will also be elected Monday: one one-year seat and one six-month seat in Dorm Men's I, two one-year seats in Dorm Men's IV, one one-year seat in Dorm Men's V, one one-year seat in Dorm Women's I, one one-year seat and one six-month seat in Town Men's I and three one-year seats and one six-month seat in Town Men's III.

Tuesday night the following offices will be up for nomination: student body president, vice presi-

Morehead Scholars Asked To Attend Meet

Morehead scholars have been asked to attend a meeting to discuss the forthcoming competition for new scholars.

Roy Armstrong, executive secretary for the Morehead Foundation, has announced that this meeting will be held Monday at 5 p.m. in the Morehead Building.

Candidates for new scholarships will arrive in Chapel Hill next week for the final elimination round.

Women's Dean Visits Grads

Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, dean of women, will visit women's dormitories and sorority houses to speak with graduating seniors Monday, Feb. 23, through Wednesday, March 4.

The purpose of her 11 p.m. visits is to answer any questions about the University, records and getting jobs that seniors may have.

Her schedule for the dorms is as follows: Carr, Feb. 23; Alderman, Feb. 24; Smith, Feb. 25; McIver, Feb. 26; Spencer, March 2; Whitehead, March 3, and School of Nursing, March 4.

Investigation Started Of Coed Study Rooms

An investigation to determine facilities needed for study rooms of women's dormitories has been launched by J. S. Bennett, director of operations.

The probe is in answer to a letter from student body President Don Furtado, in which were reported the findngs of a committee formed to determine the need of such facilities and to suggest solutions to the study problems existing.

"My department will do all we can to fill these needs," said Bennett, "but the biggest problem is money. There's so much to be done by way of improvement that my department must make sure that the items suggested in Mr. Furtado's letter are of more importance then improved necessary. I can't say anything further until we have time to look over the dorms."

According to Furtado's letter, "It was pointed out (by the committee on improvements) that the physical facilities of the study rooms in the women's dormitories were often not conducive to the maintenance of the atmosphere of study."

Listed in Furtado's letter were the following suggestions for improvement, as compiled by Charlene Bass, member of the Women's Residence Council:

Whitehead Dorm, at least three floor lamps, comfortable chairs for the study room;

Spencer, at least two card tables for the study room;

Alderman, lamps for every desk in the social room, better heating in the study room, some place to type after hours;

McIver, lamps for tables in the study room, new file cabinet, comfortable chairs for the study room;

Carr, a study room, as no facilities of any nature are available at present; and

Smith and Nurses Dorms, nothing needed.

Bennett has conferred with women's Dean Katherine Carmichael, who reports full backing of the project.

Irregularities Found, But No Dishonesty

By NEIL MURPHY

The Institute of Government's records were found to contain "irregularities" by the State Audit Board yesterday. The board also reported there was no evidence of dishonesty.

W. D. Carmichael Jr., vice president and finance officer of the University, said the criticism in the audit report "was aimed at procedures" and "there was no shortage of funds."

The report said, "Due to the lack of internal control, the inadequate records and receipts, and the loose manner of handling cash, the total amount of receipts could not be accurately determined. Since the records were inadequate, it was not possible to make a final determination of the unrecorded receipts.

"Therefore," the report said, "we have relied on the memorandums of disbursements as being a more accurate basis for establishing the amount of unrecorded receipts."

A member of the Institute of Government staff said, "It is all caused by state red tape. At times money was simply taken in and spent without recording or depositing it in the usual way."

Noon Deadline For Orientation Coordinator

Junior coeds have until noon today to file for women's orientation coordinator.

Originally, this position was women's orientation chairman until two separate men's and women's orientation committees combined to operate under one chairman. However, the women's coordinator still has virtually the same responsibilities.

Applications for the position may be made in the dean of women's office. Interviews with applicants will be held next week by the Women's Residence Council and Orientation Chairman David Parker. These interviews will eliminate all but three nominees for the position. The final selection will rest with the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

MAY 5, TENTATIVE DATE

Senior Day Activities, Meeting Announced

Senior Class Day this year has been tentatively set for May 5.

Jeff Hare, senior class president, announced the May 5 date and various activities and meetings planned during the day.

Traditionally, seniors are excused from classes on Senior Class Day. A class meeting will be held early in the day and a party, possibly at the Patio, has also been planned.

Seniors at the party will receive free food and free cigaretts, Hare said. A talent contest with prizes donated by local merchants will be the featured entertainment. An ugly contest might also be held, Hare said.

To carry out class activities, Hare has appointed seniors to the following committees:

Alumni Committee, Wade Hampton Lefler Jr., chairman; Lucy Ann Forsyth, William Oliver King, Susan Murphy Saunders and Alvin Jack Secrest;

Finance Committee, John Clarke Whitaker Jr., chairman; Lulu Sue Ballantine, James Edgar Moore and Martha Elizabeth Wheeler;

Gift Committee, Harley Ferguson Shuford Jr., chairman; Virginia Lee Arbogast, Robert Wilson Carter, Rudolph Lee Edwards, Kenneth Craig Gibbons, Mary Eleanor Montgomery, Helen Camille Pilcher, Elizabeth Camp Sojourner, John Clarke Whitaker Jr. and Llewellyn White;

Publicity Committee, Betty Irene Root, chairman; Jerome R. Adams, Virginia Lee Arbogast, Alan Laverne Pultz, Ann Battle Smith, Joyce King Strickland, Jane Rhea White and Betty Grace Zeh; and

INFIRMARY

Students in the Infirmary yesterday included:

Mrs. Mary Snyder Steele, Virginia Louise Crawley, Joanne Kay Zimmerman, Sophie Meyers Martin, Mary Hannah Finch, Jo Anne Hardin, Carolyn Sue Cohen, Bryan Grimes, William Anderson Von Canon, David James McGraw, Junius Daniel Grimes, James Edward Fox, Richard Curtis Bisbee, Howard Glenn Doyle, George William Rose, David Bruce Pollock, Francis William Lowrey, Roger Larry Earnhardt and Purcell Ezra Rose.

Student Council

Notwithstanding the Student Council's affinity for prosecuting gambling rule violators, the Student Council last night re-established themselves in the eyes of many as the fairest, most competent single group of people on campus.

In handing down their decision on Women's dormitory social fees, they displayed an honesty that is outstanding.

In doing so, they gave the Women's Residence Council a few problems to work on, and no doubt the group will start work on this soon. It is probable that the Women's Residence Council will be able to make a just and fair solution to the social fee problem.

Candidates

Each year around election time, the editor must make a decision as to how to deal with candidates' statements and how to balance the play so that no candidate gets more opportunity than any other.

Beginning with the University Party nominations next week, the following policies will go into effect.

(1) A every third day basis will be applied to news material for the first and third pages. The first day will be presidential candidates' statements. The second day will contain editorial candidates' material, and the third day will be reserved for other candidates' or student leaders' statements neither dealing with the two offices that have specific days reserved for them. The Daily Tar Heel will endeavor to keep an equal space policy on the news pages for opposition candidates.

(2) As in the fall, all legislative candidates will be asked questions on issues and their replies will be reported accurately on the editorial page. No legislative candidates will be allowed separate statements on the news pages.

(3) The right hand column on the editorial page will be reserved for letters to the editor dealing with the candidates and the parties on the basis of issues alone. A proportional number of letters pro and con will be printed in direct proportion to the amount received. Any campaign letters received which do not devote themselves to the issues but are in effect just campaign pleas will be referred to the advertising department where the rate for insertion is 90 cents per column inch, an item which must be included in a party's or candidate's expense account.

With these ground rules in mind, candidates are forewarned that these rules will remain inflexible and that no more than 30 inches each day will be alloted on the editorial page to election letters.

The Meeting

Those students who have an interest in the University and who wish to help with the University's push for restoration of budget items cut by the Advisory Budget Commission are invited to a meeting on Tuesday afternoon at 4 p.m. in Carroll Hall. The Chancellor will be present at that meeting, and it will be a good opportunity for students who are interested to learn in what ways they can be of assistance to the University.

Students are usually apathetic, but maybe there will be a decent turnout at the meeting. The future of this institution is at stake.

This And That

Sidney Dakar

Some of us have observed that it is always easy to recognize a frat man because they all wear the same color and style of clothes. One friend says that he is sure that the frat council makes up a "uniform of the day" and has it posted on the bulletin boards of all the "houses."

* * *

Speaking of houses, I received a letter from a girl friend who has a mid-town apartment in the East 50's in New York. She says that I should come up for a visit, that she and her roommate have made a house out of a home. Wonder what she meant by that?

* * *

Here is a note for those who entertain foreign students, fresh from their countries. In many parts of the world, especially in the Far East and Latin America, it is not considered polite to accept at once the various dishes on the dinner table. I recall the story of a Far Eastern diplomat who was at a state dinner at the White House. He missed the first seven courses before he realized that the waiters would take him at his word when he said no to their first offers.

* * *

My roommate and I have been trying for some time to win the favor of a certain very interesting and beautiful Carolina coed. We have received only a cold rebuff for all of our efforts to be friendly. The superior manner of this coed has exasperated my roommate. He has decided that this girl was born in the young era. He maintains that she should have been Queen of England at the peak of its imperial glory.

* * *

Let me give a word of advice to all beautiful girls. You are not beautiful because of some thing that you have or have not done. Beauty is a thing that is given, not earned. Beauty implies no achievement on the part of the person possessing it. Very beautiful women are found among the rich and the poor, among the intelligent and the stupid.

* * *

Without doubt, one of the great unsolved mysteries of our time is the existence of the concept that "all men are equal under the sight of God" and the naive belief that "right will prevail in the end." Even though these beliefs are not supported by observation, they are still held by millions.

* * *

I saw an interesting sight in a Restaurant outside of Atlanta recently. In the men's room there was a large bottle of corncobs, conveniently placed over the toilet tissue. A sign above the sealed bottle read: "In case of emergency, BREAK GLASS."

"These May Be A Little Harder To Execute"

Life On A University Salary

Floyd Hunter

(Dr. Hunter is a professor in social work.)

To be silent while one is being shorn may be a virtue of meekness, but if the shearers begin to take flesh in the clumsiness of their cutting, then it seems to me that one should give at least a small bleat. This is a belated bleat in relation to the last cut now being incised by the shepherds of higher education in our state. Yet, in the bawling and wrangling of those who point the way for us all, it seems unlikely that cries of distress from the flock will be heard.

Ten years ago I came to the University as a graduate student in the social sciences. I had a family; a wife and four small children whom I supported during two years of schooling here. I had a small amount of savings from the sale of some property which made a part of my education possible. During my last year of student work, I received a merit fellowship on vote of the faculty for which I was very grateful. My wife and I managed a rooming house on East Rosemary Street for several months in order to have two rooms for our family. As is the case of many students, we ate (uncomplainingly for we dreamed of better days ahead) a lot of macaroni and used soup bones for seasoning, but in spite of all our economics, we had to borrow five hundred dollars from the University to finally make it.

At the end of my student tenure, I was offered a position on the faculty of the University, and because we had come to love the community of Chapel Hill and what it has always stood for, I gladly accepted the teaching position—at a salary that was nearly forty percent lower than the one I had received in private employment two years previously. My wife and I assured ourselves that we were making the right decision in terms of professional work, and we reassured ourselves that with earnest endeavor I could get a promotion in due time and all would be well. We had faith in the good will of those who administered the University, and still have. We were happy with the prospects and glad to be a part of the proud history of our center of learning.

After a couple of year here, I had published a book, and was on my way to a second. My students, in the civic specialty I teach, were going into good positions and doing well. Their starting salaries, incidentally, were almost equal to mine. We had moved into a house from our two rooms, and in time, through a lot of soul searching, figuring, and second mortgaging, we took possession of the used, six room place. We took on an auto mortgage of an auto in the lowest rung of its model rather than the top model we had owned in pre-University days. But we were happy. We had begun to eat hamburger and meat loaf done in various ways instead of soup bone. But quite suddenly what had seemed such an adequate income for a few months became a monthly nightmare. We began to juggle the budget and our creditors began to joggle us. One of the most insistent was the University loan office.

I began rather desperately to seek outside research jobs to supplement our income, but research related to my particular field was difficult to find. I did some unrelated work. My book publication was subsidized by one of the University institutes which received royalties on the book on the basis that the press was unsure that the book would pay its way, and the state budget did not provide risk funds to the press for scholarly publications. The book turned out to be a good seller, and long after the publication subsidy has been paid off, the University continues to take royalties on the book. I tried to get this situation changed, but was told that "a contract is a contract," and that the bureau being subsidized by my work needed the money because they could not get enough money for their work from the legislature. Thus did I begin, and still do subsidize the research program of the University.

I began to press hard for a raise in rank, but was told, as a stand off, that while my teaching and publication record was good, the University administration was very concerned over the fact that I still owed the University loan fund a sum of money, and that two or three town merchants had complained that we were "slow pay" —not no pay, but slow pay. This in the opinion of those in authority cast some doubt on my "moral fitness" to be higher ranked in the faculty system. Since only my economic morals were involved, I pointed out my economic situation in some detail, stressing the fact that my salary with the University was, with the continuing inflation, less than half of what I had earned on my very first job after graduating from college several years previously, and while I had taken on the responsibilities of a family and household in the intervening years, my income had slid to less than that with which I had started my career alone. My faculty superiors, distressed over their tight budgets, sympathized with me, but countered with the fact that I still owed seventy-five dollars of the five-hundred (after two years of paying) I had borrowed from the University. I felt ashamed of my failures along this line. I hoped that my students and friends would not find out that I was such a dead-beat. I cringed and dreaded to answer the phone at the first of the month knowing that I would be demeaned and belittled by one or another of the town's businessmen. In my inner heart I knew that I was not squandering money. All that I earned went to others within a day or two after pay day, but there did not seem to be enough!

I finally paid the University the seventy-five dollars, and tried to understand that the loan fund officials are pressed, too, in their budgeting. It strained my charitable impulses a little to be so forgiving, but I felt good about being rid of the pesky bill. After two more years of negotiating (getting offers from other places, writing letters to assorted Deans, and pleading the indignity of poverty), I was given an increase of rank for my proficiency (at yelling, I think!). I was humbly grateful for the adjustment, and quietly began to bring the family budget into line—into closer balance. And to make sure that it was not my own poor management of finance, I asked my wife to try her hand at meeting all the obligations, and I put myself on a very small monthly allowance. I thought this move would free me to teach and research without the fuss of money matters. After a few months of trying her hand at the budget, my wife reluctantly concluded that the only hope in the situation was for her to go to work and supplement the family income.

Shortly after the last legislative raise, I noted that my students had at last begun to go to starting jobs after graduation at salaries higher than mine. Those who were not able to do so usually pass me within a year or two, and I rejoice with them at professional conferences which I attend in order that coming classes of students can more easily enter their chosen profession. I subsidize these conferences out of my income. The University does not allow enough in travel to meet the cost of it, and at most only allows for one meeting a year when in my case at least three meetings are professionally prerequisite.

A few months ago, my name was suggested as one to fill a vacancy in the local city council. In the preliminary debate over my nomination that went on prior to a vote on the matter, it was brought out that I had been slow pay in meeting my University obligation, and that the director of the local credit bureau had privately told one of the town alderman that a dental bill for one of my children (which seemed inordinately high to me, in terms of a fair exchange of professional services, but which I had agreed to eventually pay) was long overdue, and that I had been curt an somewhat impudent in asking whether it was the function of the credit bureau to make collections for its members. It was also brought out that one of the leaders of the real estate-insurance-banker alliance which controls the communities' political life thought that such a credit record should obviously keep me from serving the community. And I rather think they each may have been right, that is, if one lives in a budget balancing climate of opinion. A climate with which I heartily agree, I hasten to add, but it is one that is only possible of success when income keeps pace with normal outgo. Since our own outgo, with the possible exception of the heavy burden of taxation for strange purposes and personnally that we bear because so little goes to the constructive purposes of education, is normal, I can only conclude that my own budgetary troubles stem from the fact that the income side is badly off balance.

And yet, I understand from reading the newspapers that the budget bureau and those in authority in Raleigh, at the instigation of the tax-savers, the very men who make me feel so ashamed from time to time, that our salaries are to be reduced again through legislative contrariness and inflation, and while the bills mount, I shall be asked once more to bear greater and greater blame for not producing more and more for the shearers.

Noting that has been covered now remains unrevealed. In my economic impotence and nakedness I can only bleat. How different am I? Am I utterly alone?

Carolina's Budget Needs Enrichment

Charles Henderson Jr.

(Dr. Henderson is an associate professor in the Classics Dept.)

Actually it is a little too soon to panic, no matter how dark the report of the Advisory Budget Commission. I have enough confidence in the people of North Carolina and in their representatives in the legislature to believe that most of the more drastic cuts will be adjusted. If they are not, it seems to me that we ourselves are partly to blame, for we will have failed in past years to educate our present leadership as to what a University really is.

Particularly dangerous, it seems to me, is the idea that an educational institution is little more than a business organization, so that financial "efficiency" is its chief goal, and that the first steps to economy are to reduce the Library's budget for buying books, to keep salaries virtually static in a period of desperate competition for faculty talent, and to increase the student-teacher ratio.

A better economy might be to send back home those students who persist in playing around, and in thus wasting the time of everybody concerned, and to admit in their place those students who don't much care where they sleep or eat, so long as they are getting first class instruction from a first-class faculty. This might cut our "overhead" considerably, particularly in the Library's replacement budget for "lost" books.

But who is to measure the cost or the value of education? What is it worth to take a boy out of the piney woods and open his mind to wonder, to reason, to all of the marvelous things man's insatiable mind has discovered or his heart has felt? It happens rarely, I grant you, perhaps no more than 100 times a year here, but each such instance ought to be worth at least a million dollars. Perhaps a $100,000,000 budget would be a fair one.

Actually if the prospect of the gradual decline to mediocrity of a University so long loved, sacrificed, and fought for were not so pathetic, the situation would be almost comical. Here we may have the picture of a University straining to greatness, eager against tremendous odds to compete with the heavyweights of the North and West in the pursuit of knowledge, suddenly abandoned by its sponsors when the going gets rough.

As I have said, it is too soon to panic. The University has many friends, and they have come to her aid before. If they do not, and if the budget is not restored, I hope that we have the gusts either to bear our wounds in silence, or to quit.

In's And Out's

Frank Crowther

Here beginneth the second lesson in rules for "IN" and "OUT" procedure when descending upon Paris in tourist season.

We certainly don't have to tell you that Paris is a gastronomic dream, but dining out is a delicate matter. Anyone who must eat before midnight is "OUT"; in fact, you're "OUT" if you go out before midnight during your first two weeks. The Tour d'Argent, Laperouse and the American Embassy restaurant are "OUT." The Beaujolais, Au Mouton de Panurge (recommend this one to local members of the D.A.R.), A la Cloche d'Or (the only place in Paris where you may eat onion soup) and the Pearl River (try egg rolls with chop sticks) are "IN." Raw oysters at the Jouer et Nuit are very sick-making but great for hangovers. Also remember that bouillabaisse, foie gras and frog's legs are "OUT." Eskimo Pie, soggy croissants and scorpion under glass are "IN."

The artsy-craftsy role is only "IN" for those who have the right attitude and proper information. You'll find that Art Buchwald is "IN" but the Paris Herald Tribune is "OUT." Martine Carol is always "OUT." Arguing politics is the national sport, therefore "OUT." If you must know, De Gaulle is "IN", Soustelle is "IN" but may be blasted "OUT" momentarily and the Committees for Public Safety are unsafe. The French police are "IN" and you'd better remember it. Dr. Zhivago and Pasternak are both "OUT" if you know what I mean. Lolita finally made it "IN." Ezra Pound is "OUT."

Claiming to be a struggling writer in a slump is "OUT" unless you carry at least 15 rejection slips (including those from the National Bowlers Journal and Billiard Revue and the Illinois Rural Electric News). The existential pit is "OUT" since you don't know what you're talking about unless you have a Ph.D. in Philosophy. You may, however, briefly discuss existentialism if you thoroughly understand Tolstoy's Confession, The Castle by Kafka, Husserl's Ideas, all of Kierkegaard, Satre's Being and Nothingness, Nietzsche's Joyful Wisdom, Heidegger's Sein und Zeit, and May's Existence. Should you be this erudit, you are "IN" but will probably be an early suicide thus putting yourself "OUT" after all, so GIVE IT UP! All you really must know is that Beckett has gone so far "OUT" that he had to be reclassified as "IN." Picasso's blue period is "IN." Modighani has been "IN" for a long time but the film "Montparnasse 19" and Life Magazine almost succeeded in putting him "OUT." Magritte is "IN" but Buffet and Dali have been ill. The Lost and Beat Generations went "OUT" with the Ouija board and the Houla Hoop.

The philogynists will be pleased to know that there are many more women than men in Paris. However, all prostitutes are "OUT" (especially after 9 p.m.). Visiting the Louvre with a woman is "IN" if you keep your mouths shut inside. While there, trying to steal the "Mona Lisa" is "OUT" but sneaking off with the "Venus de Milo" in your lunch basket is a gasser. Versailles is "OUT" excepting those occasions when going for a swim au naturel with your jeune fille while playing Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette—this, need I say, is "IN." Riding a bicycle around the Arc de Triomphe the wrong way between the hours of 4 and 6 p.m. with your young lady on the handle bars is "IN." (The American Hospital is "IN.") Being seen with an American girl, especially a Smith College girl, is positively "OUT." Having an Italian mistress is "IN" only if you both speak Spanish. Going Dutch with a Dane is "IN."

All Americans are full of facts (among other things), but the only one you should commit to memory is that the gestation period for an ass is 340-385 days. This will establish your reputation in any conversation.

Mooching on the International Set is "IN," particularly Elsa Maxwell's parties. For a dry run, try crashing Maxim's on Friday night dressed in your skin diving equipment with an anaconda slung casually over your arm. Ask anybody approaching you, "Which way is the bench?" If you make it to the bar, order a drink for the snake. Two things I forgot to mention: (1) if you stay in a hotel, washing your socks in the bidget is "OUT"; (2) on rainy days, picking pockets in the American Express is good for laughs.

Last of all is Harry's New York Bar. This is "IN" since all Americans eventually end up here anyhow and the ambiance is relaxing. If Andy MacElhone certifies you as a desirable, you may break your "IN" and "OUT" rules. You may not, however, sing American songs with the downstairs piano player or sit around dribbling sorrowfully into your beer and mumbling about the "good old U.S.A."—these are grounds for excommunication and two-time losers are guilotined in the back room.

Now, chers amis, you know where to go, what to look for and how to act "IN" even if you are close to being "OUT." If you by some chance "goof" and find yourself voluntarily enlisted in the French Foreign Legion to go play Buster Crabbe on the African desert, don't despair; send me a cablegram at your convenience and I'll forward you the second French reader via camel.

POVERTY CAN BE FUN

It is no disgrace to be poor. It is an error, but it is no disgrace.

So if your purse is empty, do not skulk and brood and hide your head in shame. Stand tall. Admit your poverty. Admit it freely and frankly and all kinds of good things will happen to you. Take, for instance, the case of Blossom Sigafoos.

Blossom, an impecunious freshman at an Eastern girls' college, was smart as a whip and round as a dumpling, and scarcely a day went by when she didn't get invited to a party weekend at one of the nearby men's schools. But Blossom never accepted. She did not have the rail fare; she did not have the clothes. Weekend after weekend, while her classmates went frolicking, Blossom sat alone, saved from utter despair only by her pack of Marlboros, for even an exchequer as slim as Blossom's can afford the joys of Marlboro—joys far beyond their paltry price: rich, mellow tobaccos, lovingly cured and carefully packed; a new improved filter that works like a charm. Croesus himself could not buy a better cigarette!

However, Marlboro's most passionate admirers—among whose number I am paid to count myself—would not claim that Marlboro can entirely replace love and romance, and Blossom grew steadily moroser.

Then one day came a phone call from an intelligent sophomore named Tom O'Shanter at a nearby men's college. "Blossom," said Tom, "I want you to come down next week for the barley festival, and I won't take no for an answer."

"No," said Blossom.

"Foolish girl," said Tom gently. "I know why you refuse me. It is because you are poor, isn't it?"

"Yes," said Blossom.

"I will send you a railroad ticket," said Tom. "Also a small salami in case you get hungry on the train."

"But I have nothing to wear," said Blossom.

Tom replied, "I will send you one suit of cashmere, two gowns of lace, three slacks of velvet, four shoes of calf, five socks of nylon, and a partridge in a pear tree."

"That is most kind," said Blossom, "but I fear I cannot dance and enjoy myself while back home my poor lame brother Tiny Tim lies abed."

"Send him to Mayo Brothers and put it on my tab," said Tom.

"You are terribly decent," said Blossom, "but I cannot come to your party because all the other girls at the party will be from rich, distinguished families, and my father is but a humble woodcutter."

"I will buy him Yosemite," said Tom.

"You have a great heart," said Blossom. "Hold the phone while I ask our wise and kindly old Dean of Women whether it is proper for me to accept all these gifts."

She went forthwith and asked the Dean of Women, and the Dean of Women laid her wise and kindly old hand on Blossom's cheek and said, "Child, let not false pride rob you of happiness. Accept these gifts from Tom."

"Lord love you, Wise and Kindly," breathed Blossom, dropping grateful tears into the Dean's reticule. "I must run and tell Tom."

"Yes, run, child," said the Dean, a smile wrinkling her wise and kindly old eyes. "And ask him has he got an older brother."

Mermen Meet Maryland Here

Carolina's varsity swimmers shoot for their 10th win of the season here today when Maryland invades Bowman-Gray pool for the last meet of the regular season.

The Tar Heels have been beaten just once, by Florida, and have swept over nine other opponents. Their conference record is an unbeaten 5-0.

Beat State 47-34

Last Monday the talented Dolphins rolled past sister-institution State 47-34, with Coach Pat Earey shifting his squad around on an experimental basis.

The Terrapins of Maryland enter today's meet as decided underdogs although they are not to be taken lightly. The Terps recently whipped Big Four team Wake Forest.

Bloom Undefeated

Sophomore wonder-boy Harry Bloom will be expected to come through with his usual two victories for the Tar Heels today. Bloom, a sprinter, is undefeated.

His undefeated mate in the 200-butterfly, soph Randy Dodson, should be able to keep his streak going.

Others who should star for the mermen include Bob Hunter, backstroke; Dick Cashwell and Jack Rudy, diving; Kit Mercer, breaststroke, and Brent Nash, sprinter.

Newcomers Make Bid

Along with the old veterans are a host of up-and-coming young stars who threaten to make a place for themselves on the team. The most brilliant appears to be sprinter Vinnie Simonton, the most versatile man on the team. Simonton was ineligible last semester, but has come on very strong this semester.

Sam Douglas and Harvey Hamrick are another pair to watch. Hamrick triggered Carolina's victory in the 400-medley relap against State.

Mural Basketball

Now that the basketball season is drawing to a close, three Intramural teams are in the quarter-finals. The graduate divisions still have a few games to go, but they will be in the quarter finals after Monday's games.

In the three divisions that are now in the quarter finals, all three champions from last year are still in the running. These defending champs are: SAE, from the fraternity blue division; PiKA, from the fraternity white division; and Winston, dormitory division.

Seven other teams are also in contention with the champs and promise to give them a rough time for the championship. The quarter final games will be played on Tuesday; the semi-finals on Thurday.

THE REAL THING IN MILDNESS...
THE REAL THING IN FINE TOBACCO TASTE!

It doesn't take a ΦBK to know why new Dual Filter Tareytons have become so popular so quickly! It's because the unique Dual Filter does more than just give you high filtration. It selects and balances the flavor elements in the smoke to bring out the best in fine tobacco taste. Try Tareytons today—you'll see!

Here's why Tareyton's Dual Filter filters as no single filter can:

1. It combines the efficient filtering action of a pure white outer filter . . .

Big Four Track Meet Here Today

By BING SOMERS

Carolina's Tin Can, that awesome and antiquated aid to Woollen Gym, serves as the site for the initial Big Four Invitational Indoor Track Meet today as the Tar Heels play host to Duke, State, and Wake Forest.

Both varsity and freshmen will compete in this day-night affair which begins at 1:00 p.m. and will finally be wrapped up at around nine tonight with an hour break for supper.

As a full team, the Tar Heels will be making their first appearance this year and offer as stellar attractions two first class runners in All-American Dave Scurlock and Captain Wayne Bishop.

A 6' 4½", crew-cut senior from Greensboro, Scurlock will probably play cat-and-mouse with the field in the 880 and chew them up just when and where he wants.

The wily, feather-footed Bishop will run and should easily win the two mile, which develops into a supreme picture of mass confusion as it progresses. Bishop is in fine shape and may finish under 19:10.

Other UNC men to look for are John Sylvester in the 440, Cowles Liipfert in the mile, and big Don Kemper in the shot.

Lyndon DeBorde should unfold over the high hurdles nimbly enough for a first there, and Ward Sims may hoist himself high enough in the vault for another.

The freshman team, supposedly the strongest in years and itching to flex its muscles, has perhaps more pure strength comparatively than the varsity. They feature a 13' 3" vaulter in Barry Tiedeman, a 50-plus quarter miler in Dennis Rash, and a 1:56.4 high school All-American half miler in Dave Peltz.

A 6' 2" high jumper named Jim Whicker, two whole-sized shot putters named Dan Sheehan and Harvey Henry, plus a horde of others make this a greedy, gruesome group for any team to have to face.

The time for each event is as follows:

1:00 p.m.—Pole vault
2:30 p.m.—Shot
3:30 p.m.—High jump
3:30 p.m.—440 semifinals
3:45 p.m.—Two mile relay
4:05 p.m.—1 mile
4:15 p.m.—440 finals
4:25 p.m.—880
4:40 p.m.—2 mile
5:00 p.m.—1 mile relay
7:00 p.m.—Broad jump
7:30 p.m.—60-yd. dash
8:00 p.m.—High hurdles
8:30 p.m.—Low hurdles

Mural Handball

As a result of the Handball finals, only one of the defending champions retained their championship. Cobb dormitory managed to defeat Joyner to continue their handball victories.

The Dental Sch who were champs in the graduate division were toppled from the top position by Law Sch. In the fraternity division SAE rose up to defeat DKE to take the championship in that division.

OUTING CLUB

The meeting of the UNC Outing Club that was prevesiously set for Monday the 23 of February has been changed to Thursday of the same week, which will be February 26. The program will be announced at the first of the week.

Matmen Meet Middies At Annapolis Today

By JOHN JUSTICE

Today is the big day for the Tar Heel wrestling squad. This afternoon they will be trying to defeat the tough Navy grapplers at Annapolis.

If the Carolina matmen do win over the service team, it will be a double victory for Coach Sam Barnes and his men. First, a Tar Heel win would be somewhat of an upset against Navy, a team whose record overshadows that of Carolina's, 4-5. Second, and perhaps even more of an achievement, a win over the Naval Academy would be the first in the history of Carolina. Coach Barnes, while guiding the VMI wrestlers, defeated the Middies, but he has yet to turn the trick here.

After Navy today, the Tar Heels jump out of the frying pan into the fire on Feb. 28, when Maryland come to Woollen. The Terrapins have never been defeated in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The freshman will not be making the trip today. Their next bout is also on the 28th when they take on the Duke frosh, a team whom they have already beaten this year.

The lineup: 123—Curt Champlin; 130—Henry Rhyne or Bill Suttle; 137—Perrin Henderson; 147 — Joe Perrini; 157—Ray Russell; 167—David Atkinson; 177—John Matney; Heavy—Gordon Hurley.

DUKE TICKETS

Students can now exchange passbooks for tickets to the Duke-Carolina basketball game in Woollen Gym Feb. 28. The ticket priority period is over, so all students have an equal opportunity. The game is an afternoon contest, beginning at 3 o'clock.

The last time Duke and Carolina met, in Durham, the Tar Heels came from behind in the second half to win 89-80.

Red-Hot Maryland Cools Off High-Riding Tar Heels 69-51; Jerry Bechtle Pumps In 28

COLLEGE PARK, MD. — Maryland's off and on Terrapins turned hot as a two-dollar pistoy here last night to cool off Carolina's Tar Heels, the number one team in the nation, 69-51.

Led by Jerry Bechtle, who pumped in 28 points, the Terps gunned to a 37-25 halftime lead and coasted home with almost no trouble.

The turning point of the game if there was one, came late in the second half. Carolina had sliced the Maryland lead to seven points at 46-53. Harvey Salz went up for a shot, it was blocked and went out of bounds. It would have been Carolina on the out-of-bounds, but Salz protested the call and was thrown from the game. A technical foul was called, and converted, and Maryland got the ball after the foul and scored.

From the point that Salz got the heave-ho, Maryland scored 16 straight points to make it 63-46 and from there it was no contest.

It was by far Carolina's worst game of the season, but nothing can be taken away from the Terps, who played their best game of the season. Maryland was terrific on their tight man-to-man defence and had hot hands from the floor all night.

Maryand jumped off to an early lead of from 2-4 points, but their spurt really began at 15-14 Carolina. They scored 9 straight points to run up a 23-15 lead, then kept working at it and raised it to 32-22. The Heels rallied briefly to 32-24, but Maryland started hitting again and left the floor with a 12-point lead at 37-25.

The Tar Heels failed to come up with their usual hot spurt at the beginning of the second half, and the teams stayed fairly even until the Heels started to show signs of a rally.

With the score 51-36 Maryland, Ray Stanley scored four straight and Lee Shaffer added two more to pull the Carolinians within 7 at 51-44. Bechtle hit for Maryland, Salz hit for Carolina and the Heels still trailed by seven. But then Salz was ejected from the game and Maryland ran away with it.

Beginning at 65-33 Maryland and going through 59-46 Maryland Bechtle hit an aamzing total of 14 traight points for the Terps.

Carolina's record was dropped to 17-2. It was their first conference loss of the season; their record is 11-1 in the ACC. A victory last night would have assured the Heels of at least a tie for the league crown. It also brought to an abrupt end an 11-game winning streak.

Maryand enters the contest with only a 5-7 league record and a 7-12 overall record.

In addition to Bechtle's great 28-point performance, Charlie McNeil ladded 17 and Al Bunge had 10.

Carolina's sophomore duo, Doug Moe and York Larese, had only 11 points betewen them, with Moe getting 5 and Larese 6. Although every starting Tar Heel was averaging in double figures, only one Harvey Salz, scored over 8 points. Salz had 14. Lee Shaffer added 8.

Carolina earlier defeated the Terrapins in Chapel Hill 64-57 but it was a completely different story last night. Last year the Terps turned the same trick at College Park when they knocked off the Tar Heels before 13,000.

The contestant mentioned in yesterday's story on the IDC sweetheart as having been sponsored by Graham Dorm is Miss Jane Newsom, of San Juan, Puerto Rico. Miss Newsom is a Music Major.

In a story earlier this week the Daily Tar Heel said that Dr. Robert L. Humber had received an honorary Ph.D. The degree was an honorary Doctor of Laws. The University gives no honorary Ph. D.

Kentner Performs Monday

A noted European pianist, Louis Kentner, will be featured in the last program on this season's Chapel Hill Concert Series Monday, March 2, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall.

The program will be co-sponsored by the Chapel Hill Concert Series and the Student Entertainment Committee of Graham Memorial Student Union.

UNC students will be admitted free to the concert on admission of Identification Cards.

A number of familiar compositions by well-known masters will be played during the program. Selections include: Fantasia in C Minor by Mozart, Sonata in E Major by Beethoven, Ballades in G Minor and A-flat Major by Chopin and Arabesque and Toccata by Schumann.

Several pieces by Liszt will be performed by the pianist including Petrarch Sonnet, No. 47; Forest Murmurs, Dance of the Gnomes, La Cloche Sonna, Valsette and Chant de Berceau.

Kentner will end the program with performance of Balahirew's Islamey.

Born in Karvin, Silesia, in 1905, Kentner enrolled in the Royal Academy of Music in Budapest at the age of six. At the age of 13, he gave his first major recital in Budapest.

Traveling throughout the capitals of the world, he has achieved an international reputation as a recitalist and orchestra soloist. He has also displayed his talents as a European radio and television performer.

Kentner made his first appearance on the American scene during the 1956-57 season in New York City. Since his first concert in the United States, he has toured the country performing in numerous towns and on college campuses.

DENTON LOTZ, THAL ELLIOTT . . . off to Goettingen

GO TO GOETTINGEN

Scholarship Winners Named

Denton Lotz and Thal Elliott are Carolina's two new Goettingen scholars. Shortly after the spring semester ends the two will leave for a year of study at the University in Goettingen, Germany.

The scholarship winners were selected last week foom a field of 16 applications by the UNC Foreign Students Scholarship Committee. Larkin Kirkman, chairman of the committee, released the names of the two winners Saturday.

If Lotz or Eliott is unable to attend the German University, two alternates were also named by the Foreign Students Scholarship Committee. The alternates are Lewis Rush and Robert Foxworth.

This committee interviewed the 16 applicants and based its selection on scholarship, ability to represent the University, personality, and the condition that the scholars would return to UC for at least one year of undergraduate work, Kirkman said.

Lotz, a junior from Northport, N. Y., is president of the local Baptist Student Union, a member of the Grail of Campus Chest Committee. After graduation he plans to enter the ministry. His major at UNC is German.

Elliott is a sophomore pre-med major from Whiteville. His activities at the University include work with the YMCA, of which he is secretary, and United Student Association, of which he is vice president.

The value of each Goettingen scholarship is $1,500, Kirkman said. This figure does not, however, include expenses for food, which is also provided free to Goettingen scholars.

In an exchange agreement with the University at Goettingen, the expenses for scholars from UNC and from the German University are paid by scholarship committees here and there. UNC's Foreign Students Scholarship Committee pays for the transportation of local scholars and the costs of German scholars here.

Goettingen arranges for the transportation of the German exchange scholars and for the expenses of UNC scholars at the University there.

Financial support for the local Goettingen scholarships comes from these sources: Campus Chest, student government, Order of the Grail, Faculty Scholarship Commitee, the Interdormitory Council and Interfraternity Council. In addition, UNC fraternities bear food expenses of the exchange German scholars, who eat at a different house each month.

In the fall, the University at Goettingen will send one boy and girl to study here for a year. This will be the first time for a girl to come to UNC from Germany under this program.

At Goettingen this year, Bob Noble and Frances Reynolds are UNC's exchange scholars. Both will return here in the fall.

The two German scholarship holders at UNC this year are Peter Nicolaisen and Heinrich Hamke.

Political Science Dept. Gives Views Of Budget

By DAVE JONES

"Judging from the newspaper accounts, the budget of the University as submitted by the Advisory Budget Commission appears totally unrealistic," said Prof. Fred Cleveland, chairman of the Department of Political Science, when asked for his opinion.

"Levels of production and income in North Carolina are close to their peak and the tempo of the times is one of growth and development. Yet this budget would require the University to absorb increasingly large numbers of students with no provisions for faculty expansion, or program development in teaching and research, and indeed, with inadequate salaries to withstand the competition of other Universities for our faculty and staff," said Cleveland.

Benjamin Walter, an instructor in the Department of Political Science, said, "If the ratio of students to teachers expands the University of North Carolina will develop a sort of cafeteria style education. A student will graduate with an array of ill digested and ill assorted bits of curious information lacking the analyticals kills that can be developed only in a small class atmosphere with individual attention."

Speaking of libraries and research, Walter said, "They are intimately connected. If you impoverish the quality of the library you deprive any University of its major functions. It is the primary service part of any University, and if the staff is shrunk, and necessary books and journals are not purchased, the deterioration of the entire University will not be far behind."

Prof. Donald R. Matthews said that he was "shocked by the budget," in particular by the provisions for salaries, which are "poor here, even by local standards."

Prof. Matthews referred to the spring 1958 issue of the Bulletin of the American Association of University Professors, in which a survey and a rating of University pay scales was published. The University of North Carolina received a rating of "D" on a scale that rated schools from "AA" to "F".

He said, "There's no substitute for money and professors are going to have to be paid more if they are to remain on the staff here.

"The whole philosophy of the budget, with its notion of trying to get more for less, is not the way to build a great University," Matthews added.

Budget Battle Begins With Monday Meeting

The University will launch its campaign for budget restorations at the meeting of the entire Board of Trustees tomorrow morning at 11.

In meeting open to the public at the House chambers in the state capitol in Raleigh, President William Friday, Chancellors William Aycock, Gordon Blackwell, and Carey Bostian of UNC, Woman's College and N. S. State will present their views on the budget in the hopes of mobilizing support for the University request. Also included on the program will be William Carmichael, vice president and finance officer of the Consolidated University.

Also scheduled to come up at this meeting of the Board of Trustees is the question of loyalty oaths which the Chancellor and President advocated removal of about two months ago.

In a Chancellor's cabinet meeting Friday, Chancellor Aycock also announced a meeting to be held Tuesday at 4 p.m. in Carroll Hall to mobilize University forces in the battle for the budget. Students, administrative personnel, and faculty were invited by the Chancellor.

Musicale Features Fiorillo

Pianist Alexander Fiorillo will be featured in the second Petite Musicale of the spring semester today at 8 p.m. in the main lounge of Graham Memorial.

The concert is free to the public.

The program for today's concert will include the following selections: Chaconne in D Minor by Bach-Busheni, Sonata, Opus 53, by Beethoven; Intermezzo No. 1, 2 and 3 and Rhapsody No. 4 by Brahms; Ricercare and Tocatto by Menotti, Nocturne, Opus 48, No. 2 and Ballade, Opus 47, No. 3 by Chopin, and Hungarian Rhapsody No. 6 by Liszt.

Fiorillo appeared as soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra at the age of 12. In 1955 he won the Philadelphia Musical Academy Gold Medal Piano Award. He is presently working for this Bachelor of Music degree under a full scholarship at the Academy where he is a student of Madam Genia Robinor.

His accomplishment at the piano won for him the Beta Chapter Award given by Dexel Institute in 1956. That same year he was named "Young Artist Award Winner" by the Pennsylvania Music Clubs.

Fiorillo is known in the metropolitan area of New York for his concerts over station WNYC and for his recitals at Knabe Hall and Carnegie Recital Hall.

He has played as soloist with the Lancaster Symphony Orchestra and has given recitals throughout Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Vermont and Colorado. Recently he was awarded the Miriam R. Garriques award given by the Matinee Musical Club.

Increased Class Size Expected

By NEIL MURPHY

If recommendations of the Budget Advisory Commission are followed each UNC professir and instructor can look forward to an extra student in each of his classes.

Requests needed to maintain Carolina at its present teacher-student ratio were 25.5 new positions in 1959-60 and 17.7 additional positions in 1960-61. These figures are equated to full time professrs.

Presently, each professor has 13.1 students at UNC. At Texas University each professor has 15 studegts at Florida, 10; and at Duke, 7 according to figures published in the World Book Almanac. The Carolina figure is quoted in the Budget report.

The University's total request on both the present standards or "A" budget and the improvements or "B" budget was for 58.6 new academic positions for the years 1959-61. The Budget Advisory Commission cut this figure to a recommended 19.7 additional positions.

Thirty-eight and nine-tenths requested positions were eliminated.

These positions are equated to the equivalent of a full time position. They include many part time academic positions that were counted as fractions.

The University indicated a need for 25.5 positions in their requests for an additional $174,535 in 1959-60. An assistant professorship and an instructorship and 2.5 equated summer school positions were recommended by the Budget Advisory Commission.

Also in the "A" budget requests—these for 1960-61—were requests for 17.7 additional positions. Fifteen and two-tenths of these were granted.

On the improvements or "B" budget the University requested $52,300 for 1959-60 and an equal amount for 1960-61. This would have provided 7.7 new positions each year. None of these were granted in the Commission's recommendations.

The Board of Trustees of the University will hold a public meeting at 11 a.m. Monday in the state house in Raleigh to discuss the budget. Anyone who wishes to attend may do so.

Training Starts Mon. In YWCA Leadership

By BEA NEWMAN

Dee Dee DeVere, president of the YWCA, Saturday encouraged all rising senior, junior and sophomore girls to attend the Leadership Training Sessions Monday and Thursday.

In speaking of the Y's program, she said, "The Y offers a wide variety of creative activities which provide a chance to carry on new programs and policies and a chance to develop dynamic and effective leadership."

Miss DeVere pointed out that in interviewing the new leaders "it is from the women students who show an active interest and participation that the executive officers for next year are slated."

Miss DeVere, a senior from Morganton, has displayed her own outstanding abilities as a leader by her work in the Y this year. The year has been a special success for the areas of community work, public affairs and the television series. Other high spots have been the National Student Assembly and various conferences.

Among her other interests are the Honor System Commission and the Canterbury Club, where she serves as a member of the Executive Committee. In her sorority, Chi Omega, Miss DeVere serves as activities coordinator. Recently the College Board for Mademoiselle choose her as a member of the board. Moreover, she achieved the highest honor that a Carolina coed may attain when she was tapped a Valryrie.

Miss DeVere has urged all interested coeds to come to the Y and sign up for an interview and to meet in the Library Assembly Room at 4 p.m. Monday and Thursday for the training programs.

DEE DEE DEVERE . . . in leadership role

Education

Very seldom does a person demonstrate great personal courage, but it must have taken a great deal of fortitude and courage for Dr. Floyd Hunter to write the letter which appeared in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel. It is not everyone who will throw his private life for public scrutiny in order to exert influence for something that he considers an overriding question, and the benefits that he may receive from his action would benefit the whole community.

There are many others in Dr. Hunter's position or even in a worse one who are currently laboring to produce people to take a place of leadership in society with inadequate salaries and inadequate means to support themselves, their families, and their possessions. Many of these turn to other vocations completely, and some take part time jobs which decrease their efficiency in whatever area they teach the net result is that the education of all suffers for society's unwillingness to put out what is necessary to maintain its educational institutions.

It is a characteristic imbalance in American society that the American citizen is willing to pour billions of dollars in the federal and state coffers to defend the country while they are totally unwilling to put any money into education, something that will build and sustain the country so that there is something worthwhile to defend.

This situation is evident in the first federal aid to education measure ever passed by the Congresses of the United States. First the measure had as its title the National Defense Education Act so that it might not offend the opponents of federal aid.. Secondly, it was aimed at science and languages, and the concept of a liberal arts college was completely lost. Finally, there was an included loyalty oath which is so contrary to academic freedom as to put a seal of finality on the idea that Congress was thinking in terms of education. Indeed, when the bill finally emerged, all it did was to set up a loan fund, which if cost of living remained constant, would net a profit to the government. The loan fund virtually excluded many classes of students who were not in areas directly related to national defense. Thus, it is clear that American government, of which education is so vital a part, does not see education as a vital area of governmental concern.

This is no less true in this state, for although a large percentage of state tax revenues will be turned to education, the state does not see the importance of education in terms of providing adequately for teachers and students. It would be better if the state had a smaller portion devoted to education if the overall sum was adequate to meet the needs. America and North Carolina have not learned of the necessity of education. It is an unfortunate thing that Russia has.

So, at least this hat is tipped to Dr. Hunter who had the courage to strike out for what was necessary and has had the courage these many years to stick in a profession that is important although he could have been paid better elsewhere. Men of this type are rare, and no doubt there will be some who will criticize him for his outspokenness especially on such points as town government and the University Press. Yet, if the University ever regains its position in the world of education, it will be voices such as his that will bring the University there.

Trustees Meeting

Tomorrow Consolidated University and local administrative officers will launch their campaign for restoration of the Univesrity budget.. It will be interesting to see what stand they will take, how forcefully that stand will be taken, and what distinctions will be made in the needs of the three Universities.

The key questions of what the local University wants and why they want it will have to be answered. It is the editor's hope that the answers to both these questions will be wise ones.

The World News In Review

In Washington, the Western Big Three called on Russia to join in a foreign ministers meeting Monday with East and West Germans attending, to settle the German crisis before it leads to war.

Virtually identical notes were delivered to the Kremlin by the United States, Britain and France. So was a similar note from West Germany.

They rejected Russia's Jan. 10 bid for a 28-nation German peace conference and suggested that a date and place be set by mutual Big Four agreement for a foreign ministers' meeting on the whole German question.

The United States' note restated the West's determination not to be driven out of Berlin by Soviet threats and demands. It did express willingness to negotiate all aspects of the problem.

The timing is important. The Soviets said Nov. 27, they would turn East Berlin over to East Germany in six months, which would be May 27, thereby giving the East Germans control of the West's access routes to West Berlin. The Russians also demanded withdrawal of allied forces from West Berlin and an East-West German "confederation."

Dulles' illness, however, may cause a hitch in plans for a mid-March meeting at Paris of the forcing ministers of the United States, Britain, France and West Germany.

In London, British diplomatic sources said such a meeting might be switched to Washington so Dulles could attend without having to fly the Atlantic.

Later in the week at a news conference President Eisenhower said it will be the Russians who start it, rather than the Western powers, if there is to be any shooting or use of force over Berlin.

After four years of violence and bloodshed, peace came to Cyprus this week. A five-party conference reached agreement on independence for the island after 81 years under the British flag.

Archbishop Makarias, 45 year old exiled leader of the Greek Cypriots ended up by signing the agreement after dropping earlier objections to some of its clauses.

Another football-like satellite was launched into orbit Tuesday. The American satellite carrying a minature, mechanical weather observer flashed into orbit around the earth.

It was equipped to check up and report back on the earth's cloud cover and thus help spot storm clouds or tornadoes.

The satellite, Vanguard II, itself may whirl on through space for years or even centuries, but the batteries for its weather eyes can operate for only a fortnight.

Echoes of a 1929 murder trial were heard in Washington Monday.

A congressional committee released testimony charging that Communist leaders sought to have defendants in the celebrated 1929 murder case sentenced to death for the publicity it would give the party.

The House Committee on Un-American Activities dug back into North Carolina's Gastonia murder case for evidence it said showed how Communists try to make a mockery of American courts and use them for propaganda purposes.

The committee detailed what happened behind the scenes when seven defendants were convicted of second degree murder in the slaying of a Gastonia police chief. It said the Reds tried desperately to make capital of the trial.

The murder, the Communists said, came as the result of "a violent Communist directed" textile workers strike. The trials, which received nationwide publicity, were held in Charlotte, between Aug. 26 and Oct. 21, 1929.

For those aspiring teachers this bit of news is for you. Bills were introduced in the House and Senate calling for a pay increase of about 10 per cent for all school personnel. They were sponsored by Sen. Ervin Lanier of Orange and Rep. Blake Thomas as Johnston.

Letter From Olympus

Tonight, February 22, at eight o'clock, Mr. Alexander Fiorillo, a visitor from Philadelphia, will give a piano recital in the Graham Memorial Lounge. Mr. Fiorillo is one of the most promising young concert artists and has played with the Philadelphia Orchestra, given several concerts in Philadelphia and New York and has won acclaim wherever he has played. Studying presently with Madame Robinor, of New York, he will play for the first time in Chapel Hill under the auspices of the Petite Musicale Committee of Graham Memorial. This will be one of the outstanding musical events of the semester.

We met Mr. Fiorillo a few nights ago for coffee in the Carolina Coffee Shop ,and asked him to elaborate on his musical ideas and the all important question of what he attempts to communicate through his playing. He leaned back, drew a few puffs of Middleton 5 and sipped some coffee.

"One of the most crucial elements in interpretation is loyalty to the composer's intentions. Of course, this consists of a judgment, a very subjective judgment, on the part of the artist as to what the composer's intentions are, and this element of creativity that is introduced will always keep the performance from becomming uninteresting and cold. I try to play as a musician, not as a virtuouso. Technique is only a means towards the ultimate end of musical expression, and for this reason I try to make my playing as personal as possible.

"In learning a composition, which is the first and most important step in performance, I try to correlate as many views on interpretation as I can before making the final decision as to how it should be played, but the final result must always be an integral part of the performer. It cannot be artificial, it must be sincere."

We heartily agreed with everything Mr. Fiorillo had to say. "One more thing," he suggested, "ever since I was in short pants my father would say over and again, 'Always remember, son, inspiration and talent mean nothing without discipline and hard work.' This statement has been the best advice that anyone has ever offered."

We left Mr. Fiorillo with a warm "Goodnight" and retired to our rooms, looking forward to his concert.

Editor:

Because of the recent attacks upon the Social Values Committee and misinterpretation of the objectives of the objectives of the Committee we feel jectives of the Committee we feel it is necessary to review the Committee for the campus. Following is the "Statement of Purpose" as published in The Daily Tar Heel on November 26,1958.

"The committee was formed as the result of the realization that there is a need for emphasis on the Campus Code. This emphasis can only be accomplished through thoughtful, personal interpretation of the Campus Code as it applies to each individual.

"The Social Values Committee shall be composed of one representative from each women's residence. Its aim shall be to create in each person's mind a clearer conception of her own social values. It is felt that this can best be accomplished by stimulating discussion, thought and interest which will hopefully resolve into a more tangible understanding of the code.

"This is not to be interpreted in any way as an extention of judicial authority. There will be no attempt on the committee's part to restrict an individual's conduct."

The Social Values Committee grew out of an awareness of a prevalent lack of concern with the Campus Code, a foundation of the Carolina Way of Life. Discussion among interested women students resulted in the decision to form a committee composed of individuals who saw a need for promoting revaluation of personal responsibilities in relation to the ideals set forth in the Code. At no time in its history did the Committee envision or attempt to establish arbitarary definitions for social conduct. Within dormitory and sorority house meetings the idea for the formation of such a committee was introduced and interested residents were invited to participate. Although membership in the committee was not required of any residence, all dormitories and sororities were represented.

At the first meeting of this group the members drew up and accepted a statement of purpose. Recognizing within the Carolina tradition the freedom of the individual to determine his own ideals, the "Statement of Purpose" was written both to assure students that the Committee existed explicitly to create concern, not to limit individual freedom; and to continuously remind the Committee itself that it existed to encourage the individual to think for himself, not to think for him.

As a preliminary step toward the achievement of its purpose the members of the Committee felt that they should first be acquainted with the attitudes of women students towards the Campus Code, its application, and the problem areas which result from the diverse interpretations of the Code. This was accomplished by means of discussion groups within the residences in which the students were given the opportunity to voice their opinions. Using these opinions as a basis the Committee planned to sponsor open discussions in which a free exchange of ideas would be possible. It was also felt that this study would be valuable in facilitating a more adequate presentation of the Campus Code during Orientation and in the handbooks. Future plans of the Committee included combined men and women discussion groups in order to gain an understanding of their respective situations.

As members of the Committee we still feel a need for each individual's increased awareness of the Code as it applies in her life. We feel that the plans outlined above could have contributed to this. However, it is felt that students opposed to the Committee through their antagonism make it impossible for positive discussion to be held on the campus-wide level. Therefore, it seems wisest at this time to disband .It is the sincere hope of every member of the committee that future efforts will be made in this area.

The Exciting World Of Old Books

Running an old book department is a little like running an animal act in a zoo. Plus ca change and all that, but, pal, it's never boring.

For example, during the past week we've been showing the finest collection of twentieth century first editions we've ever had - but all the while people kept coming in with other treasures for us to buy, sort out and get cleaned up for the next show.

In a day or so, what's left of our proud collection will be put back into the permanent shelves, and we'll start planning a Civil War book show.

In the meantime, assorted bits of treasure that don't quite fit the pattern are popping up on our Recent Acquisitions shelf. Perhaps one of them is just the book you need for YOUR collection.

It's fun to be a collector. It's exciting to watch the old books flow onto the shelves and out again.

Treat yourself to a treasure-hunt today!

Clinch ACC Title

UNC Swimmers Edge Maryland Terps 44-42

Carolina's talented swimmers clinched the regular season ACC title here yesterday with a hard-fought 44-42 win over Maryland.

The Tar Heels thus wound up the season with a 10-1 record, and a 6-0 record in conference. It was the last meet of the season for Pat Farey's crew until the ACC championships begin in Bowman-Gray pool this week.

Soph sensation Harry Bloom, perhaps the best swimmer in the conference, came through with his usual two victories. Bloom took first place in both the 220 and 100 freestyle events.

Randy Dodson remained undefeated, as is Bloom, with another win in the 200-butterfly. Dodson also is a sophomore.

The Tar Heels got a lot of unexpected competition out of the fighting Terps, but came through with enough points to edge out the visitors.

The Heels took 6 of the 10 first places, and piled up points with second and third finishes.

The only loss of the entire season was suffered at the hands of Florida, which shattered a 26-meet win streak for the mermen.

Joe Kalkhurst, a relative newcomer, claimed a victory in the 50-yard freestyle. Bob Hunter took the backstroke for Carolina.

Maryland swept first and second in the diving competition, and did the same in the 440 -freestyle. The Terps won the last event, the 400-freestyle relay.

Fencers Edge AMA By 14-13

Carolina's fencers used everything they had here Saturday to edge a tough Augusta Military Academy team 14-13. The Tar Heel swordsmen are coached by Pebley Barrow and Dave Evans.

Evans' foilsmen, led by Charles Tucks, defeated the AMA team 5 bouts to 4. Tucks won all three of his bouts, while his teammates, Carroll Raver and Guy Ellis, split the remaining two.

Mike Collins led the sabre squad coached by Barrow, to an impressive 6-3 win. Collins duplicated Tucks' performance by winning all three of his bouts. He was followed by Bob Alridge, who won two out of two, Steve Mirman with 1-1, and Dave Matthews who had a bad day, losing both his bouts.

As the teams entered the epee competition, the UNC fencers held a 4-point lead with the score at 11-7, needing only three wins to clinch the afternoon meet. Bob Peebles and Clarence Simpson got two of the needed points, but the strong epee team from AMA tied the score at 13-13 with six impressive victories. The score remained so until Finley of UNC entered the final bout against Bartell of AMA. Finley, refusing to be denied his share of the spoils, soundly defeated his opponent five touches to one.

Outstanding performances turned in by AMA by McGrath and Gill in epee, each scoring three victories. They were followed by foilsmen Trimble and Amendola with two wins each.

The UNC squad will make its next appearance in a three-way meet with the Citadel and VMI on March 7 in Woollen Gym.

Clemson Beats South Carolina

COLUMBIA, S. C. — (AP) — A long one-handed shot by Earle Maxwell with eight seconds remaining in overtime gave Clemson a 58-56 Atlantic Coast Conference basketball victory over South Carolina in a regionally televised game here Saturday.

The score was tied 21 times, including 54-54 at the end of regulation play, and neither team ever had more than a 4-point advantage.

Clemson scored on a long shot by Don Carver shortly after the start of the overtime period and then promptly instituted a tight zone defense.

Dickie Prater broke through once for South Carolina to even the score at 56-56. Prater bagged 18 points, high for the game.

Clemson, which boosted its ACC record to 4-9, was slightly more accurate on its field goal shooting, hitting on 37 per cent. South Carolina managed only 33 per cent.

South Carolina's ACC record is spoiled the Gamecocks to take the edge on rebounds, 41-36. Dutch Shample and Walt Gibbons led the Clemson scoring with 12 points each. Doug Hoffman tallied 10.

Mike Callahan with 16 points and Ray Cookie Pericola with 11 followed Prater in the Gamecock scoring column.

South Carolna's ACC record is now 2-9.

In asking for the endorsement of the Unversity Party for candidacy for DTH editorship, Young said, "Unlike the present editor of the Tar Heel, I happen to believe that fraternity men are just as good and decent as anybody else. Not BETTER than anybody else — but certainly as good.

Dean Tells Of Faults In Budget

By DAVE JONES

"In 1952 we had 795 women students, today we have 1,504. But we have the same staff and relatively the same budget today that we had in 1952," said Miss Katherine Karmichael, dean of women, when asked how the budget affected her office and its effectiveness.

"This means that we have had to resort to petty economies to stay in business. I have had to strenghten the organization of the work here even at the risk of making services too impersonal.

"I also feel that I have lost something by having to give up teaching as well as speechmaking and other public relations efforts like club work, thereby diminishing my participation in service within the University and leadership in women's groups throughout the state," said Miss Carmichael.

Prof. F. Burton Jones, chairman of the Department of Mathematics, declined to comment, saying that he had not had time to study the individual items and their implications.

The oldest professor in the University, John W. Lasley Jr., of the Department of Mathematics, a member of the staff snce 1906, said, "The Library is the main concern. If we keep it going the rest of the University will make it.'" He also said that he felt a good staff is the next most important consideration. "I can remember back about 1910 when we threw our hats in the air in jubilation when the state legislature gave us $75,000."

Richard Baker, a graduate student doing political scence research on a Southern Fellowship, said, "One of the big problems is the Library — they do insist we do research — it costs money to maintain a collection, and a lot more to rebuild it.

"In order to live in a degree of decency in teaching, you have to take vows of chastity and poverty

UNC Trustees Okay Consolidated Stand

President William Friday of the Consolidated University of North Carolina came out for complete restoraton of the budgetary cuts by the Advisory Budget Commission in a prepared address before the Board of Trustees yesterday.

The Board followed quickly with a resolution placing its faith in the Consolidated University Administration and assuring the administration of its help in securing the necessary restoration.

The motion was introduced by H. L. Riddle of Morganton.

John Umstead, representative from Orange County capped the drive by urging all members of the Board to contact the legislator in their area in order to mobilize support for the budget.

Friday pointed out that to lower the standards of excellence and quality now would be a costly decision for the state to make.

Chancellor William B. Aycock pointed up the need for faculty funds, showing that the Advisory Budget Commission had actullay cut funds from the "A" Budget in this crucial area. The "A" budget was for continuation of present operating level of quality with increases only for enrollment and cost of living.

Aycock pointed out that no funds were given for extra positions in the "B" budget which is for faculty improvement.

The Chancellor dispelled the notion that the advisory Budget Commission wrote into its report calling for the student-faculty ratio to increase. The Chancellor pointed out that the teacher does not live the leisurely life that many people suppose him to live.

He added that the University has an extremely high student-faculty ratio in comparison to other colleges in the United States and showed a study to prove his contention.

He concluded by saying that the University needs more faculty members if it is going to grow greater as it grows larger.

Vice-president and finance officer William Carmichael showed that the University ranked as one of the lowest institutions in faculty pay according to the standings of state supported institutions in the American Association of Colleges and Universites. The University rated anywhere from eleventh to fifteenth among fifteen state supported institutions at the various levels of faculty pay.

In other action the Board of Trustees approved the Visiting Committee report calling for larger library appropriations, higher salaries, and a new student union.

UNC Campus Budget Meet Slated At 4

The University's budget, drastically cut by the state's Advisory Budget Commission, will be discussed at a meeting of students, administrative personnel and faculty today at 4 p.m. in Carroll Hall.

Chancellor William B. Aycock called this meeting in an effort to mobilize University forces for restoration of budgetary items cut by the commission.

All interested persons have been urged to attend.

Robert Frost To Visit Here In Mid-March

Poet Robert Frost's traditional spring visit to Chapel Hill and public reading have been announced for mid-March, marking his 13th annual appearance at UNC.

Frost will read his poetry at a public gathering at 8:30 p.m. on March 13, under sponsorship of the UNC Department of English. He usually meets informally with small class groups while in Chapel Hill.

As in past years the 84-year-old Frost will be the house guest of his long-time friends, Prof. and Mrs. Clifford P. Lyons.

Winner of all major American poetic honors, including four Pulitzer Prizes, he has a long list of honorary degrees from institutions at home and abroad. Oxford and Cambridge both conferred honoraries on him in 1957, and the University of Durham had done so many years earlier.

Interviews Continue For Orientation Com.

These interviews are being conducted by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board on a first-come, first-served basis.

UNC Renews Interest In International Studies

By NORMAN B. SMITH

The development of a post-graduate curriculum in international relations and the reorganization of membership in the Southern Council on International Relations are highlighting a regenerated interest in international studies and understanding at the University.

"We are interested especially in international trade and the exchange of persons as a medium for international peace," said Dr. Keener C. Frazier, professor of political science, who has been active in planning and developmental stages of international studies programs here.

In the near future a master of arts degree in international studies will be offered by the University. The program will probably be of an interdepartmental nature including instruction in economics, history and political science.

Other requirement for the master's degree will include (1) a larger course requirement in the minor, (2) four "supplementary" courses, one each from the departments of Economics, Sociology and Anthropology, and Geology and Geography and (3) a conversational competence in a modern foreign language.

Utilizing present facilities of the University, a certification in regional studies will be offered along with the degree. Instruction in societies, cultures, economies and institutions of Latin America and Western Europe would be available for regional studies certification.

Frazier, who is a director of the Southern Council on International Relations, is seeking new membership for that organization in Chapel Hill. One of the chief aims of the Council, Frazier said, "is to educate the people of the South in political, cultural and economic aspects of international trade."

Activities of the Council include programming institutes for the study of international relations, distribution of literature, establishment of community study centers, student and teacher exchange programs, publishing a periodical, and promotion of international trade. The membership dues are $1 per year. Subdivisions of the Council are sections for each of the Southern states.

Already in operation at the University is an undergraduate program in international relations. A bachelor of arts degree in international studies was first offered in 1957. About 30 students are now enrolled, and two gained their degrees last summer.

Requirements include a "core" of six courses in anthropology, economics, geography, history, journalism and political science, plus one language course in addition to the General College language requirement. The students then concentrate in a particular geographic area (Asia, Latin America, Europe) or concentrate in a particular field (anthtropology, economics, geography, history, political science). Seven or eight electives are allowed.

Activities of the existing and planned international studies program include the publishing of (1) books, monographs and study guides, (2) the providing of fellowships for graduate researchers, (3) community programs, extension courses, television and radio presentations, conferences and lectures.

The international studies programs have been designed for students desiring preparation in the public service in international affairs, communication activities such as international journalism, teaching and public affairs functions in connection with business organizations.

Persons interested in international studies on the undergraduate or post-graduate level or in the Southern Council on International Relations may see Dr. Frazier at his office in 214 Caldwell Building or may call 9-3901.

Di Debates NSA Tonight As Subversive

"Is the National Student Association Subversive?" will be the topic of discussion at the weekly Dialectice Senate meeting tonight at 6 o'clock on the third floor of New West.

The program will include a presentation of a short history of the organization, some of the presently relevant issues and an organization description. Ed Levy, NSA coordinator, will be present.

The question of subversion, raised by J. B. Matthews, research director for the House UnAmerican Activities Committee, will be discussed in order to "freely air the various opinions regarding this controversial student organization," said Grey Greer, president of Di.

"It is hoped that all persons who are interested," continued Greer, will attend and participate in the discussion, which is hoped will spur the various viewpoints so that the pros and cons of the issue will be discussed."

Position Still Open For Coed Coordinator

Juniors coeds who want to coordinate women's orientation in the fall still have a chance to apply for that position.

Applicants may apply for women's orientation coordinator in the dean of Women's office.

Interviews with candidates for coordinator will be held Wednesday by the Women's Resident Council and Orientation Chairman David Parker. Three girls will be chosen from these interviews to go before the Bi-Partisan Selections Board for the final selection.

Grayson Picked For SP Class Nomination

By STAN BLACK

George Grayson was nominated for the senior class presidency by the Student Party in its meeting last night. Picked to run with him as vice presidential nominee was David Evans.

Nominees for the offices of treasurer and social chairman of the class will be filled by the SP Advisory Board, as there were no candidates nominated last night.

In commenting on the office prior to his nomination, Grayson outlined the duties of the office and his intentions for making something of the office elected.

Dewey Sheffield, chairman of the Advisory Board, announced the formation of a new committee to organize the student body on a residental area basis. There will be four vice chairmen, one each for men's dorms, women's dorms, fraternities, and sororities. Sheffield said, "The UP is organizing, and we too must reorganize."

Endorsed as the party's choice for head cheerleader was Dick Rhyne, a junior and presently a member of the cheerleading squad.

Catharine Bolton was selected to run for the party for the presidency of the Women's Athletic Association. As no one was nominated for Legislature in Town Women's, candidates for that district's two year seats will be chosen by the Advisory Board.

In Dorm Women's I Linda Biser defeated Mary Ann Weaver for the nomination to the one-year seat open.

After a lengthy discussion of a field of four candidates in Dorm Men's II Bill Norton was nominated to run for the single year seat open in that district.

Dan Brown and Roy Goodman, both incumbents, were nominated to run for year seats in Dorm Men's III. Also nominated was Gary Arzt, who will run for a six-months seat.

A vacancy in the district caused by the resignation of Ray Bagwell from the Legislature was filled by the appointment of Arzt. The nomination for a second six-months seat will be made by the Advisory Board.

Hobart Steele announced his withdrawal from the legislative race in Town Men's III in favor of Bob Ney. His withdrawal and the nomination of Ney for the six-months seat open were accepted by the party.

Chairman John Brooks announced that next week's meeting will also be devoted to nominations for various offices open in the spring elections.

With Vigor

Despite the fact that all the speakers in the Consolidated University presentation had texts, the total impression made yesterday at the meeting of the entire Board of Trustees was one of force and vigor in the University's kick-off for total restoration of budgetary cuts made by the Advisory Budget Commission.

Quite rightly the emphasis was made on the faculty, and quite true to form each successive speaker brought out the salient points necessary to complete an adequate case for the vital need in faculty salaries.

In a nice way, the administration gave the Advisory Budget Commission hell. It told them in simple terms that they did not know what they were talking about, if they wanted to increase the student-teacher ratio. It pointed out with striking clarity that professors have quite a work load and do not live the leisurely existence that some people think.

There were some areas where administrative officials and the editor did not see eye-to-eye, but these were few and can be discussed at a later time. Indeed, it was a forceful display, and not the least forceful was the Chancellor of UNC who had the complete presentation on the faculty salary picture.

The administration toed the line for the entire budget. It can be hoped that the Board of Trustees will follow the lead of Rep. John Umstead who asked them to go to their individual legislators and support the original University request. The presentation was worthy of the support.

A Voice

Out of the blue in the trustee's meeting came a voice upholding the righteousness of State College's claims to its share of the budget. It was the only real life in a fairly pedestrian meeting, which was dramatic in content but not in oratory.

It was good to hear a partisan voice in a crowd of ecumenicists, for it will take a good deal of partisan screaming for the University at Chapel Hill to get its voice heard in the mob calling for higher appropriations because of increased enrollment.

This voice must be heard.

The Meeting

The editor hopes that 100% of the student body will come to a meeting tomorrow afternoon at 4 p.m. to hear Chancellor Aycock and other University officials tell students, faculty, and staff members how they can assist with the budget restoration.

The meeting will be held in Carroll Hall Auditorium, not far from classrooms and campus dwellings. The student body can show its concern and support of education in general and the University in particular by appearing at the meeting. It would be nice to see a better turnout than at a basketball game. The cause is surely equally worthwhile.

On A Candidate

Sidney Dakar

A lesson in American politics can be had by a two minute reading of the campaign statement by Mr. Davis Young, candidate for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel. If his writing ability is as good as his political sagacity, we need have no qualms about electing him.

With one bold coup de main he has probably assured himself of at least half of the total votes that will be cast. Mr. Young says, "as editor, my first act will be to restore Peanuts, Pogo and Li'l Abner to the editorial page, from which space nothing short of World War III will remove them (!!!)" If the comics are to be made an issue, the issue should be whether to put the comics on any page.

Rarely do we see such political genius except when a Senator from Georgia or S. C. makes a speech to his constituents on his views on segregation or cotton price controls. Mr. Young probably realizes that an embarrassingly large number of students would rather have nothing but comics on the "editorial" page. But, like all wise politicians, he tries to offend the least number of people by compromising on the issue.

Mr. Young points out the "editorial irresponsibility" which allowed the recent Cort Edwards series on "sex" to find its way into the paper. With one sentence, Mr. Young has appealed to all those who think sex is dirty, the DAR, the women's temperance unions and the like. Sex and morals are two of our most pressing problems in America, but Mr. Young would solve these problems by ignoring them. He is assured of a large following.

Mr. Young missed the chance to get at least one-fourth more of the total number of votes. He should have added after the statement on "editorial irresponsibility" that, if elected, he would be sure to always tell us exactly what we wanted to hear, that he would never even dare to suggest that our opinions on any and all subjects are not the best possible opinions.

The next part of his statement is a long paragraph of platitudes about the problem of more money for the school. Really? Almost every newspaper in the state, including The Daily Tar Heel, has been full of just that ever since the budget was announced.

At this point Mr. Young's reasoning is a little hard for me to follow. Does he seriously think that the people who voted him into the editorship on the strength of his Pogo statement would be at all interested in reading anything even remotely concerned with budgets and fiscal policies? It would be a waste of his time, ink and paper to direct such editorials to these people.

The thoughtful American voter is always faced with a dilemma in every political campaign. He realizes that such placating statements are absolutely necessary if the politician is to get the support of the masses. No matter how sincere and intelligent the politician might be, he cannot accomplish much if he is not elected. So he must resort to these tactics. The thoughtful voter is never quite sure whether the politician speaking for the benefit of those who prefer Peanuts to Walter Lippmann merely to get their votes, or, whether he really intends to put his promises into effect. Thank God, most politicians, once elected, forget the stupid promises that they have made for the support of the naine and the simple.

"You Didn't Bring An Umbrella?"

Norman Cousins

Frank Crowther

Two students discussing the attributes of the Saturday Review and its editor, Norman Cousins, rather amused me with their deductions. It went something like this:

"Man, I don't read that rag anymore," said one "It's almost as bad as being seen with a copy of Life Magazine or The Reader's Digest."

"Yeah," said the other, "it is getting pretty bad, but it's about the only way of keeping up with the new books. I mean what else is there besides the Sunday sections of The Times and The Tribune?"

"Cousins didn't pan out after all," continued the first. "About every other editorial is about the big bomb and 'meaningful survival' or some hogwash about space taking its toll. He just lost what bite he ever had — all watered-down moaning from the back room."

The second student appeared puzzled for a moment then, wanting to agree with his erudite companion, said, "I guess you'd have to call him a neo-conservative liberal or something. You know, like a pitcher who lost his fast ball."

Removing the coffee I spilled on my sweater after that last remark, I gathered together my copies of The New Republic, The Nation and Saturday Review (placing the latter on top so that my protagonists might see it as I passed), ambled by their table (on all fours) and disappeared into the afternoon, trying to appear as lugubrious as possible.

My goodness, I wondered what Mr. Cousins would have answered to these sagacious quidnuncs had he been there to defend himself. The rest of my afternoon was a total loss for having been in the presence of such omniscient brilliance.

Well, I suppose I've made my point. Even if one doesn't always agree with Mr. Cousins' editorial interpretations, I believe that the general content of the publication has often been on the level of highest quality.

One example of this quality is the calibre of the magazine's feature articles. To list only four: (1) "The Big Search for America" by Marshall Fishwich (Aug., 1958); (2) "New York: The Town, The Toilers, The Tinsel" compiled by Horace Sutton (Oct., 1958); (3) "The Unadjusted Man" by Peter Viereck (Nov., 1958); and (4) "What is a True University?" by Archibald MacLeish (Jan., 1959) — all exceptional pieces, in themselves worth the price of the magazine.

Mr. MacLeish's discourse is one of a number of articles, editorials and books to appear recently showing a great concern for the status of "the American University." Drawing heavily from the educational objectives of Woodrow Wilson, MacLeish injected a modern interpretation:

Wilson:". . . the alleged duty of the colleges and universities (is) to turn out people with certain specialized skills . . . which the nation as Nation finds it needs: not to lead it, but to work for it."

MacLeish: "Today some of us, at least, find this definition of educational purpose inadequate, and even mischievous. No one doubts, I suppose, that the Nation's need of specialists is real and may be critical, but there are those who think that an educational policy founded on the satisfaction of needs of this kind is hardly worthy of an American university or of the free society it serves.

"The service of the nation may have been an adquate educational goal fifty years ago when nation and community were more or less the same thing, but human community is one thing and the new American Nation is very rapidly becoming another, 'the American University' must define its purpose for itself."

Wilson: "The final synthesis of learning is in philosophy. You shall most clearly judge the spirit of a university if you judge it by the philosophy it teaches; and the philosophy of conduct is what every wise man should wish to derive . . ."

MacLeish: "The philosophy that informs American university education and which can influence so powerfully the conduct, the action of the American people must be a philosophy that the universities choose for themselves because they are universities and because they are American."

The best of the other three articles was Peter Viereck's "The Unadjusted Man." The author asks that we stop being defensive and apologetic about affirming the dignity and importance of the so-called impractical, unrealistic people. Hoping to curtail the trend toward overadjustment, Mr. Viereck advises: "Why not for once have the moral courage to be unadjusted, a bad mixer, and shockingly devoid of leadership qualities?"

This man is not to be confused "with the maladjusted, the psychiatric; nor with the never adjusted, the merely crotchety; nor with the flaunted grandstand-nonconformity of bohemia's 'misunderstood genius' act." No longer the prophet or seer, the unadjusted man tries to "unriddle the inner universe . . . (being) stubbornly unadjusted toward the mechanized, depersonalized bustle outside."

Space won't permit more concerning these articles, but I'm sure, by now, you understand my interest. If you don't, you'll have to excuse me. I still read the Saturday Review.

Letters On A Variety Of Topics

Editor:

It certainly was gratifying to see Peter B. Young writing under his own by-line for a change instead of his pen-name of "March Wind." Let's hope such trends continue so that students will know who is writing the articles in the DTH. That's one of the students' rights, you know.

And so, not only will "the nature of Gillespie's dilemna" be painfully clear," but the nature of Peter B. Young's dilemna be painfully clear as well.

Jim Howell

Editor:

The car spun across a bank and lay on it's side with a university student lying unconscious across the seats. Willing hands extracted him from the wreckage in case the car should catch on fire. Gently he was lowered onto the ground nearby to wait for the ambulance —to wait, and wait, and wait. Twenty minutes he waited. Not long if you are drink a coke or taking a smoking break, but damn long if your pulse is weakening and your blood is flowing away from injuries sustained in an automobile accident. Where was the ambulance? Where do you look to find the number of the nearest emergency ambulance? Perhaps that though entered into the minds of the few who went to call one. You won't find it in the front of the phone book along with the other emergency numbers where it should be. You might find it in classified section if you have time to be scholarly and go through the book, or you may just call the operator. That's the Durham operator you will call of course, who will call the Chapel Hill police, who will call the ambulance. Now that doesn't take long does it? It takes a damn long time if you are getting closer to death every minute these social operations are going on. However never fear, the police arrived in about twelve minutes.

We have ambulances and we have hospitals so why not use them to the best advantage. Emergency numbers should be placed where they are easy to obtain, and should be kept clear at all times. The ambulance service has two phones set up for calls, that is if you happen to know where to find the numbers. The operators have phones and so do the police, but one well-placed call might prevent the loss of life or extenuation of pain for some seriously injured victim. Twenty minutes is a short time in which to die.

Sam D. Mummel

Editor:

I boil when I read the "Notes in Review" in your paper. Why don't you get a critic who knows something about music, or at least likes it? It seems to me Mr. Lessing has a strange preconceived idea of what he likes and thereby considers everything else not worth listening to. The programs are printed in advance so why doesn't he save himself a lot of boring evenings and stay home? The Petites Musical program last Sunday evening was well performed and very enjoyable to many who attended.

Editor:

Mr. Alexander Fiorillo, pianist was presented last night in a concert by Les Petites Musicales. He, in turn, presented himself as a serious young man, obviously devoted to the music which he played. Earlier this week, Mr. Fiorillo had given his views on his approach to music, and taking him at his own words, his thorough study of the material was evident. If overly careful, particularly in the first two numbers of his concert, Mr. Fiorillo was clear in what he meant to have heard, and honest in expressing it.

The program was an extensive one, almost an "embarassment of riches." The pianist opened with Bach-Busoni "Chaconne in D Minor," confident in what he felt was intended by the music. If heavy in getting started, a grace unfolded itself as a result of an analysis on the part of the performer of the style and content of the work. The well-known Beethoven "Waldstein Sonata" gave evidence of Mr. Fiorillo's conception of gentleness. At times his well-schooled fingers, facile and accurate as they were, were able to express more than quickness. Herein lies the opening for Mr. Fiorillo's development. He should not be ashamed of his love for music, or let his sense of duty towards it entirely color his performance. With a loosening of attitude and an ease of delight he could let the pieces speak better for themselves.

Three Intermezzi of Brahms were next on the program. Here, and for the remainder of the program, one could have wished for a change in style of performance. At times Mr. Fiorillo was almost carried away by the music, and yet he held himself—still the well-schooled student, not yet on solid "terra firma." The Menotti "Ricercare and Toccata" was hardly difficult to listen to, nor was it a particularly brilliant work. Mr. Fiorillo gave the work the care and thought he brings to each study, but even that did not make it a memorable experience. The pianist was still too careful in his Chopin "Nocturne, Opus 48" and "Ballade, Opus 47." Moments of delight were certainly there, as well as lightness and grace which the pianist's fingers could easily handle, yet the "Chopin-ness" of the works was not evident. Mr. Fiorillo's honesty in studying the works, and presenting them, is a credit to his musicianship, yet he should let each speak in its own style and not only with the imprint of his personality. The Liszt "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 6" showed to good advantage the pianist's ability to render a sectional piece, closing the parts with a particularly accomplished "pat." Mr. Fiorillo can put-over sections; it is the larger, more extended movements which he has yet to perform as well as he understands them.

Despite the rigors of an extensive program, Mr. Fiorillo did perform an encore. With particular abandon and ease, perhaps with more ease than he had exhibited all evening, the pianist performed the delightful Schubert "E-flat Major Impromptu." Mr. Fiorillo has given a good account of himself. He is to be commended on his effort, and Les Petites Musicale in theirs, for their acceptance of him as the pianist on their concert series this year.

Spring thawing of sagacious seniors is this year producing an unprecedented flood of trained but untried talent, splashing helter-skelter toward the open doors of industry and business. Competition for top graduates is vigorous among enlightened firms that favor early on-job training for their future executives.

Personnel officers, touring the college circuit in search of educated talent, entice the Class of '59 with such immediate inducements as: money, training programs, money, varied experience in many phases of their company's operations, money, a measure of adventure in many jobs, and more money.

But the intelligent and ambitious young person with genuine desire to achieve his own objectives in a business career will not bite this short-term bait. He will look beyond these glittering lures. He'll calculate and set his course toward a high goal of his own choosing . . . using today's job possibilities and opportunities as fixed points on the chart by which he'll set his compass.

The well-advised, foresighted '59er who aims to make his mark in business before the century is over will do as much selecting as submitting to selectioon. He will select his employer just as carefully as his employer selects him.

How do you select a firm in which to build a satisfying career?

The problem isn't simple . . . the solution, not too easy. It requires much self-disciplined analysis, as well as courage. You must take a course that's different from that of most other young graduates. Between individuals, details will differ, but first — decide your career objectve.

Notes In Review

Arthur Lessing

In his concert sponsored by Less Petites Musicales last Sunday evening, Mr. Alexander Fiorillo, twenty-year-old American pianist, showed a technique that was thorough, brilliantly articulated, and frankly virtuostic in performance. If he can use this accomplished technique as a base for his development as an artist, this pianist has a bright future. In his program, Mr. Fiorillo played works of Bach-Busoni, Beethoven, Brahms, Menotti, Chopin, and List.

The young pianist opened the program with an error in taste, the Busoni arrangement of the Chaconne in D Minor of Bach. This work, originally written for the solo violin, has been translated into pianistic terms with such hideous results that it becomes frankly difficult to tell if any of Bach's terms survive. True, all the notes of Bach are there, but their musical meaning has been mutilated and destroyed to fit them into a semi-romantic piece of virtuoso display 'a la List.

The pianist's performance of the Beethoven Sonata Opus 53 ("Waldstein") was articulate, precise, and forceful. It was a joy to hear Beethoven's power brought out with unabashed pianistic force. However, there is more than force in this sonata. The second theme of the first movement, in direct contrast with the opening theme, is full of touching sentiment and tenderness to balance the musical picture. In Mr. Fiorillo's playing of this theme there was a lack of that peculiar kind of dolce feeling that Beethoven asks for here. The second movement, too, was clearly beyond the interpretative penetration of the pianist at this stage of his career, for here is dark and searching music that demands a depth of emotion that can only be attained by the artist in time and study. Nevertheless, the total performance was arresting intensity and articulation.

After intermission, Mr. Fiorillo tackled the very difficult piano Intermezzi Opus 119 of Brahms. As he performed them, they sounded curiously empty and naked, and, knowing Brahms at this late stage of his composing, I am afraid, it was the performance rather than the music that was responsible for this emptiness.

After a piece of Menotti, Mr. Fiorillo ended his program with some compositions of Chopin and List's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 6. Here the pianist seemed most at home. The music ran like water from his fingers, and beside the unusual technical control, there was evidence of artistic control as well.

If the pianist will gives as a great care as he gives to his brilliant technique to the artistic dimension of music, the young man should go far in his way up in the musical world: the concert he gave us Sunday night certainly demonstrated at least that.

Interviews To Begin Wed. For Morehead Scholarships

Sixty-four young men—42 of them seniors in North Carolina high schools and 22 in top preparatory schools—are here this week to be interviewed for Morehead Scholarships.

Interviewing by the Central Scholarship Committee, composed mainly of UNC faculty and officials, will begin Wednesday morning and continue through Friday, according to Foundation Executive Secretary Roy Armstrong.

Final selections will be made by the five-man board of trustees of the Morehead Foundation and will be announced Saturday.

John Motley Morehead, chairman of the trustees and donor of the scholarships, will present the winners at 7:30 p.m. over WUNC-TV, Channel 4, the University's education station. The program will be shown again Sunday at 12:30 p.m. when it will be carried by a number of commercial TV stations in the state.

Each student who qualifies for a scholarship will receive $1,250 yearly, or a total of $5,000 during his academic career at UNC.

Screening of applicants was held throughout the state during late January with seven district committees selecting six nominees each to come to Chapel Hill. The prep school students were nominated by their headmasters.

The Central Committee interviewed 12 junior college nominees Saturday, Feb. 21, and any students approved by this group will go before the Morehead Foundation trustees on Saturday, Feb. 28. Colleges represented were Mars Hill, Lees-McRae, Campbell, Charlotte, Wingate, Presbyterian Junior and Chowan.

Thirty scholarships were awarded last spring to high school seniors, making a total of 179 recipients since the program was begun in 1951. The Foundation's scholarship fund is valued at approximately $3,000,000.

Six more private preparatory schools in Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Georgia and Washington, D. C. were added to the "eligibility list" this year. The 27-foot exhibit, which has a 12-foot, three-dimensional model of the Vanguard I, shows the manner in which the satellite is launched in orbit and how it circles the earth. The project is illustrated further by a number of color transparencies.

Exhibit hours are weekends from 2 to 5 p.m. and 7:30 to 10 p.m.; Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.; and Sundays, 1 p.m. to 10 p.m.

A Campus-to-Career Case History

Bill Gibbs discusses procedure for a cutover to direct distance dialing with one of his men.

He's getting the advancement he looked for ...and right in his own home state

William C. Gibbs graduated from Virginia Polytechnic Institute in 1956 with a B.S. degree in business administration. He joined The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company of Virginia because, "I was familiar with the company and confident that it offered the best possibilities for advancement. And I wanted to stay in my home state."

Today, after two and one-half years with the telephone company, Bill supervises eight men. His group is responsible for maintaining outside telephone facilities ranging from telephone poles and wires to mountaintop microwave relay towers. These facilities are spread over some 2500 square miles.

"I'm really getting basic supervisory experience on this job," Bill says. "My assignments during training and my earlier jobs gave me a solid feel of telephone company operations. But I find the greatest challenge and satisfaction come from working through others."

Some of the interesting training assignments Bill refers to involved arranging for TV and mobile radio pick-up for the presidential inauguration, the Armed Forces day show at Quantico and other events of national interest.

"So far I've gotten just what I was looking for in a telephone career," Bill says. "The training and experience I've received have been tops. And with the company constantly growing to meet service demands, it looks to me like there will be plenty of opportunity to keep moving ahead in the business."

Bill Gibbs found the opportunity he was looking for with a Bell Telephone Company . . . in the state of his choice. You may, too. Talk with the Bell interviewer when he visits your campus and read the Bell Telephone booklet on file in your Placement Office.

Big 4 Meet Has Many Stars

By BING SOMERS

The initial Big Four Invitational Indoor Track Meet held here Saturday and won by Duke (62½ to 60 over Carolina) produced some of the finest times seen anywhere on the boards this year.

Highlighting the day-night attraction at the Tin Can was the splendid 1:51 half mile turned in by the Tar Heels' Dave Scurlock which missed the indoor world's record by a scant .7 of a second and is this year's swiftest half in the country. It was the finest indoor 880 ever run by the lean All-American from Greensboro and following right behind him throughout the entire race was Duke's Tom Bazemore who came in in 1:51.7.

Another "top personal performance" was recorded by Carolina's ace distance runner, Wayne Bishop, who tiptoed the 21-lap two-mile in 9:11.9.

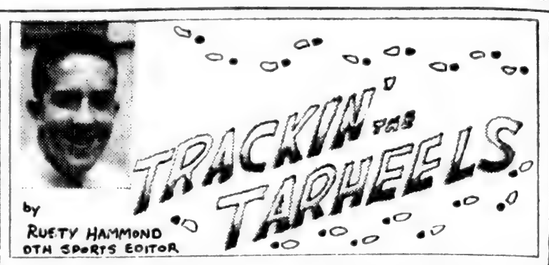
"Downtown Chapel Hill"



So you think Carolina's loss to Maryland was terrible, a poor exhibition of basketball? You're right. But its not the end of the world by a long shot. The Tar Heels are still in the driver's seat despite the Terrapin upset.

At present Carolina sits at the top of the heap with an 11-1 conference record. In second place is State, who has already completed its ACC season, with a 12-2 mark. Far behind is Duke with a 7-6 slate.

A win over Virginia Wednesday night would clinch at least a tie for the regular season championship for the Heels. But in order to win the crown undisputedly, the Tar Heels must beat both Virginia and Duke (next Saturday).

Should Carolna split its remaining two games, a tie would be reached and a drawing for top seeding in the tournament would be in order. The prospects of this, however, are unlikely.

Has the bubble burst? Were the Tar Heels really not as good as everyone thought? Have McGuire's boys finally cracked? In answer to all these, we think not. We feel that the young Carolinians have gotten the bad game "out of their system."

★ ★ ★

The Maryland game resembled the Michigan State game, Carolina's only other loss, in many ways. In both games the Tar Heels fell behind and never quite caught up. In both games the Heels started a rally which was squelched at a turning point.

In the Michigan State game it was a call that gave the Spartans the ball on the out-of-bounds, a highly contested call. In the Maryland game it was another contested call, when Harvey Salz was ejected from the game.

Salz had gone up for a shot, which was blocked. The ball went out of bounds and it would have been Carolina on the out-of-bounds. But Salz felt that he had been fouled and conveyed these feelings to Referee Joe Mills. Mills felt the protestation was too violent and sent Salz to the ebnch.

Maryland made the technical foul shot, got the ball on the out-of-bounds, and made another basket. From there they spurted to a giant lead which the Tar Heels couldn't overtake. When Salz was thrown out the Tar Heels were within seven points.

Carolina is no longer number one team in the nation. Kentucky is, after its win over previously unbeaten Auburn. But the conference is the important thing now, not the national ranking.

★ ★ ★

Some feel their are rumblings of discontent from the league's lower echelon, that the doormats are turning into world-beaters. Well, it would be nice for news, but we're maintaining it just isn't so. Everyone is screaming about Duke. True, the Devils have put on a fine showing lately, but they still are not of the championship caliber it will take to win the ACC tourney.

Virginia, picked as a conference darkhorse before the season began, has finally gotten up off the floor and started to move. The Cavaliers whipped Maryland last week then bested Wake in two overtimes Saturday night.

Has Maryland come around? Maybe. On paper, Maryland is one of the league's better teams. Saturday night they showed it. But unless they can keep up such performances game after game, as they have not been doing, the Terps still rate as a so-so squad.

Let's face it, you just don't shoot 53% from the floor in every game, and that's what the Terps did Saturday night. Nor do you bring a team with a 7-12 record up and whip the number one team in the nation very often.

In conclusion, we look to Carolina to bounce back strong and take both the regular season and tournament in the ACC.

CLEMSON, S. C. — (AP) — Clemson vaulted into fifth place in the Atlantic Coast Conference last night with a 58-51 basketball victory over Wake Forest.

Only seven fouls were called on Clemson and six on Wake Forest.

Clemson went into a semi-freeze with about four minutes left in the game and a 2-point lead. Earle Maxwell scored 2 more for the Tigers 4-up, but Wake Forest's George Ritchie matched it.

Dutch Shample of Clemson cashed in once at the free throw line and then dunked a 2-pointer. Teammate George Krajack, who enjoyed his best night of the year with 25 points, sank a 35-footer as the buzzer sounded to give Clemson its final margin.

It was ACC victory No. 5 for Clemson in its last season game prior to the loop tournament next month. Clemson never had more than four ACC wins in any previous season.

IFC Elects Officers; Debates Deferred Rush

By A. P. PIPKIN

Newly Elected IFC President Ashe Exum pledged himself to a program of "positive action" concerning the discipline of the IFC and declared that the scholarship of the fraternities should be improved.

Other officers elected included Ben Geer Keyes, vice president; Walker Blanton, treasurer, and Pete Austin, secretary.

A long discussion of deferred rush was the primary business of the evening.

The question was not resolved at this meeting because the majority of the council members did not feel that they were sufficiently informed of the opinions of their respective houses at that time.

A special meeting will be held Monday night to discuss this problem.

Outgoing IFC President Tucker Yates said that he and two other members of the IFC went before the deferred rush sub-committee of the Faculty Committee on fraternities to discuss the matter.

Yates said that another group of men had also appeared before the committee and had argued for deferred rush. Yates said that he was sorry there had not been an IFC meeting to discuss the matter before the IFC members appeared before the committee.

The other group included Charlie Huntington, Ed Levy, Tate Robinson, Curtis Gans and Don Furtado. They were named by Don Furtado at the request of Sam Magill, asst. dean of student affairs.

(Furtado said Magill had asked him to name some people who were interested in deferred rush. Tucker Yates was asked to get a group to present a case for the present system.)

Charlie Huntington said Monday night that it would mean that the fraternities would get only the boys they were sure they wanted.

He felt that the with a transition period of one or two years the fraternities could bolster the upper classes so that finances would not be drastically hurt.

He explained that deferred rush would give the freshmen a chance to prove their "academic mettle."

Tate Robinson said he is "almost convinced" that deferred rush is

Cuts May Kill Work Of Years

By DAVE JONES

"Unless some very drastic upward revision is made, the work of building our department over the last ten years is lost," said Dr. Dorothy C. Adkins, chairman of the Department of Psychology, in discussing the 1959-61 budget as it now stands.

"We now have top notch people, I can't keep them, I don't want to keep them at salaries that are unfair. If we are going to keep salaries low, we are going to have to aim at mediocre people that we can keep, rather than top flight ones."

Dr. Adkins also discussed the problems of space for the Department of Psychology. She said that presently it is impossible to undertake new research projects and that she has had to turn down some attractive federal contracts as a result. In addition the department has to teach in other buildings, she added.

TEACHING LOW SALARIED

Prof. John D. Eyre, of the Department of Geography said "Teaching is a low salaried profession and salary increases are essential in order to attract and to hold talented teachers who will, in turn, attract talented students.

"The University of North Carolina has entered a period of bitter competition with prominent state and private universities, government and business, all of which have higher, constantly rising salary levels.

"The budget as now proposed calls for faculty to meekly accept increased teaching loads without just compensation in salary and a reduction of time for research and other University activities."

TEACHING IS HARD

Professor Eyre also said, "The number of classroom hours taught in a poor guide to faculty output." He pointed to lecture preparation, reading of recent professional journals and books, the correction of examinations, as well as campus and extra-campus activities which crowd the faculty members' working day and intrude on his evening hours.

Prof. John W. Thibaut of the Psychology Department said the budget was an indication of a "lack of confidence, a basic scepticism in the utility of the University to the state."

"I feel that the national reputation of the University will suffer unless the money is restored. But, I think it is not the money, it is what it symbolizes—trust by the Legislature and the people in the University. Financial payments are concrete symbols of that trust and

Aycock Drafts Program To Inform Solons, People

University's Need Would Be Publicized

Chancellor William B. Aycock Tuesday outlined a program to better inform the people and legislators of the state of the needs of the University and why the funds cut by the state's Advisory Budget Commission should be restored.

William C. Friday, president of the Consolidated University, made a plea Monday before the Board of Trustees for the complete restoration of the appropriations requested in the maintanance and operations budget. The Board unanimously approved Friday's plea.

Chancellor Aycock repeated the needs to approximately 250 faculty members, administration personnel and students in Carroll Hall. He named four main items in the maintanance and operations budget which required the complete restoration of funds: 1. faculty salary increases, 2. new personnel, 3. library books and journals and 4. new equipment and supplies.

"I could not choose one of these at the exclusion of any of the others," Aycock stated. "A well paid faculty is almost useless without necessary equipment, supplies and books."

University officials will appear before the General Assembly March 18 to present their case for restoration of the budget. "We will probably have no opportunity to talk, but we will no doubt be cross examined and required to defend our case," Aycock said.

He stated that it would be necessary to get favorable assistance to the cause of the University. "This may be difficult," he said, "because I do not see how we can get our restoration without new sources of revenue. While pelading our cause we cannot divorce ourselves from the cause of public schools. They can help us and we can help them."

He warned the members of the audience against the use of statistics, mistaken facts and negative statements. He explained that it would be incorrect to say that the Duke University gets better support for their library than the University. The University has a larger professional staff than Duke but has a smaller number of books and periodicals.

"Statistics are misleading and everyone will have a separate set. They could be used against us," he warned. "We are setting no particular pattern, nor are we requesting that every item in the budget be supported. However, I am hopeful we will not be negative in discussing our needs. We should not

ORIENTATION

Interviews for the Orientation Committee are being held through Friday in the Woodhouse Conference Room in Graham Memorial. The interviews are from 2 to 4 p.m. every day through Thursday and 2 to 5 p.m. Friday.

Both coeds and men are being interviewed as soon as possible after they come to Graham Memorial.

SP Forms Committee

A new Organization Committee was crystalized Tuesday by the Advisory Board of the Student Party, the prime objective of which will be to increase support for the SP in the spring elections. Dewey Sheffield was named to head the new group.

The committee, when all positions are filled, will consist of a person in charge of each legislative district, every dorm, sorority, and fraternity, and a representative of each hall of all the dorms.

Positions filled at a meeting of the advisory board of the SP, in addition to Sheffield, are as follows: Gary Artz, vice chairman in charge of fraternities; Janie Walters, vice chairman in charge of womens dorms, and Betty Kaye Johnson, vice chairman in charge of sororities. Students interested in aiding the committee are asked to attend a meeting of the committee Thursday at 2:30 p.m. in the Grail Room.

The Advisory Board also nominated Barbara and Margaret Hawley to run for social co-chairmen of the senior class in another action at the meeting Tuesday.

Young Attacks Editor's Policy

Davis Young, the sole candidate for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel as yet, attacked the present newspaper editorial policy in regard to the coming spring election in a statement released Tuesday.

Referring to an article attack him in Tuesday's paper, Young said, "The editor laid down a set of commendable ground rules for The Daily Tar Heel coverage of this election, but nowhere in these ground rules did he state that his columnists would be given free rein to tee off on the candidates."

He said that he was "very grateful to Sidney Dakar for his editorial page attack on me." He recalled an earlier article by Dakar "a charming little story about a fellow in a public lavatory who saw a bottle of corncobs above the toilet tissue dispenser. I say again that as editor I will not permitt his kind of tasteless vulgarity in print."

Answering Dakar's accusation that Young wishes to ignore sexual and moral problems, he said, "Nothing could be further from the truth. I simply insist, and will continue to insist that any discussion along these lines be conducted within the limits of good taste."

"It begins to look," continued Young, "as though the present editor is going to complete the process of totally immersing The Daily Tar Heel in campus politics by giving an editorial page endorsement to those candidates who happen to meet with his favor. This increasing politicization of a newspaper which should be the voice of all is a most ominous trend."

NSA Regional Conference Set Friday

The National Student Association Regional affairs educational conference will get underway Friday afternoon.

Curtis Gans will be chairman of this group, and Assoc. Prof. George M. Harper, in the capacity of research personnel, will provide any necessary information.

This group will meet in 105 Gardner Friday night and in 105 Hanes on Saturday.

Gary Greer is the chairman of the discussion group of student participation in guidance and counseling. The group will hold its meetings in 107 Gardner on Friday night and 209 Hanes on Saturday.

Shooting Victim Is 'Critical'

William Farrar, Negro, of Durham, was in critical condition Tuesday in N. C. Memorial Hospital after being shot through the neck Monday afternoon.

No arrests have yet been made as a result of the shooting which occurred near Chapel Hill. The Orange County Sheriff's Department said Tuesday an 18-year-old Chapel Hill girl will be charged with the shooting, pending the outcome of Farrar's condition.

The shooting took place at the home of Mrs. Margy McKensie on the Merrick-Mill Road outside Chapel Hill around 1 p.m. Monday, a deputy sheriff said.

British Arrive In Riot Torn Nyasaland

This town was quiet but tense. An African employe at a power station was arrested after he said he could deprive Blantyre of power at a minute's notice. Three African youths were arrested after an attack last night on three police re-

WHAT? ME WORRY?

Stan Fisher, co-managing editor of The Daily Tar Heel, recently had Staff Cartoonist Bart Forbes draw a one-column, two-inch picture of MAD Magazine's Alfred E. Neuman.

Then he sent a letter to 'Mad' requesting permission to use their child prodigy, Alfred, occasionally in The Daily Tar Heel.

Fisher's idea was to use Alfred in exam schedules and other items in the Tar Heel designed to "rot your mind" (as MAD phrases it).

Yesterday Jerry DeFuccio, of MAD Magazine, replied, granting permission to use Alfred anytime with a notation "That boy could stand a bit of schooling."

Aycock Speech

There was no question that of all the speeches at the Board of Trustees meeting Monday, the most forceful and competent presentation was made by Chancellor William B. Aycock when he spoke on the budget for faculty salaries.

He presented a clear case for the necessities that were incorporated in the original University request in the area of faculty salaries. His speech repudiated the assumption made by the Advisory Budget Commission when they said that the student-faculty ratio could go higher. At first it was pointed out that this ratio was high for institutions of similar standing and secondly, he pointed out that this ratio was not representative of the student-teacher ratio which he pointed out was much higher, and totally beyond that which was recommended by a recent Texas study.

He pointed out that if the present budget was not changed upwards, there might be a need to cut off enrollment at a certain level, something that would perhaps not be a bad idea, but something that surely should not stem from a lack of appropriated funds.

He was able to land telling blows about the quality of faculty who are not offered enough and of the need to keep the competent men the University does possess. Indeed, sticking to the basic operating needs of the University, he was able to land telling blows at the lack of wisdom displayed by the Advisory Budget Commission.

He could have gone further. He could have said that the situation is such at the present time that freshmen who need experienced and qualified instruction most are currently being largely taught by graduate instructors. He could have pointed out that the seminar method of education often used with highly favorable results on the undergraduate level in connection with lecture courses is used sparingly if at all on the undergraduate level at UNC. He could have added that while other institutions of higher learning are building specialized concerns such as the Columbia Institute of Russian Studies, the University is forced to stretch its faculty thinner and thinner. He could have shown as Dr. Floyd Hunter did earlier last week that life on a University salary even at the professorial level is very trying to say the least.

But the Chancellor did not mention these, and indeed there was no need to since the picture was bleak indeed. Coupled with Vice-President and finance officer William Carmichael's statements about the University's rating with respect to faculty pay, the picture became abudantly clear and forceful. It is up to the administration, students, and faculty to aid the efforts for restoration of these key items into the budget. Otherwise the University will surely slide downhill.

At The Meeting

There were no more than twenty students at the Carroll Hall meeting yesterday which is a sad tribute to the interest displayed by the student body toward the future of this University.

The student body will have another chance on Friday to hear more about the budget proposals, but in general, it is probable that not enough students will care.

One wonders whether they will take time to listen to the ball game this week which lasts two hours. They probably will, but they won't take one or two hours off to see whether they can help salvage something from the wreckage of the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations. It is a pity that the students would rather see an athletic team win than they would be willing to see the University as an academic entity survive. One need not exclude the other, but if the students are only willing to do the former, the latter may become impossible.

It is high time that the students got off their rear ends and did something constructive. They and they alone will be responsible for what happens if they don't.

PART II

This first step is always the hardest. Job counsellors and placement people in many large Amemrican universities tell me that more than half of today's graduates have only a vague idea of what they want to do, long range. (Of course, we're not concerned here with the college playboy who wants to start out as a retired business man.)

Even after four years of exploring their interests, in a variety of courses, many college men and women do not make definite career decisions until ready to take a job. Some do not make a final desision until they have held two or three jobs. This is not necessarily harmful, but you'll save time if you make a sound decision before taking your first job.

But, how do you decide?

There's much more to selecting a career objective than simply deciding what general type of work you want to do. Maybe you want to be in marketing. But have you narrowed down your ultimate goal to a particular phase of marketing: advertising, merchandising, purchasing, sales supervision?

Furthermore, if you're now at the point of picking your career company (and/or vice versa), you should know whether your interests lean more toward retailing than toward distribution on a regional or national scale. You should know by now whether you'd prefer to be a storekeeper or a travelling salesman. Determine your goal . . . define your objective.

Don't set your sights too lew. That's another common error in deciding on a career objective.

What are your aptitudes . . . your current assets? Many college students don't have any idea of even the field in which they'd prefer to work. If you're one of these, you may have to go one step farther in setting your objective.

Modesty is a commendable virtue, sometimes; but if you want to get to the top in any field, you must look and think and work toward the very top, toward absolute leadership. If you are now a college graduate, or soon will be) and are demonstrating enough intelligence to take this problem seriously, there's an excellent chance that you will go much farther in your business career than you now dream possible.

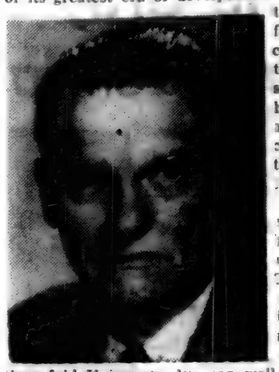
"We Control Everything That Rolls—Almost"

Facing Facts

William Carmichael

This year marks the tenth time in the nineteen years that I have worked for the Woman's College, State College and the University that we have come to the Legislature for our life-blood. And the job facing this Legislature is the most challenging in the past two decades.

North Carolina stands today on the threshold of its greatest era of development. This is no time to counsel our fears and our cautions. It is a time that calls for solid faith and high hopes. It is a time for bold courage — clear thinking and positive action.



We have pulled ourselves up by our educational shoe-strings. Our people have sacrificed to the limits of their financial resources to build a great three-fold University. We can well be proud of its distinction and its achievements.

Grants from the Federal Government, grants from the great National Foundations, gifts from beneficient alumni and friends who have shared their God-given good fortune with us, gifts to our own institutional foundations have enabled us to keep our heads above mediocrity.

Here in North Carolina, with our neighboring University and our excellent colleges, we have assembled one of the greatest concentrations of faculty-power to be found anywhere in the world. This wealth of intelligence, experience and competence gives substance to the potential and promise of the Research Triangle.

But we must not lose too many of our distinguished faculty-folk lest we lose our glorious opportunity.

We don't like to talk "poor mouthed"; but our State's wisdom-packed motto: "Esse quam videre" means "Let's NOT kid ourselves" Let's face the facts — head on!

Despite our multi-faceted efforts to improve our faculty salary levels, we find ourselves in a most vulnerable competitive position.

It is impossible for us to match the salaries of Harvard, Yale, Princeton and the other "Ivy League" universities; but we are not even keeping abreast of the good state universities — all of which got into business many years after North Carolina started all-important work of educating our citizenry.

A comparison of the average salaries paid in the four faculty ranks in our institutions with average salaries paid by the fifteen state universities which are members of the American Association shows North Carolina near the bottom.

Almost daily we see the effects of this unfavorable competitive position. Every week one or more of our faculty members receives a more attractive offer from some other university or college.

To cite a few examples:

1. Professor A. in Dramatic Arts at Chapel Hill was offered $4.000 more than our salary by a Pacific Coast University. (He accepted the offer).
2. Professor B. in Business Administration, at Chapel Hill, was offered $3.000 more by a mid-western university. (From funds contributed by the Business Foundation, his salary was increased $2,000 and he remained in Chapel Hill).
3. Professor C. an Historian at the Woman's College, was offered $2,500 above his salary, plus a house to live in. (We were able to partially meet this offer and so he is still with us).
4. Professor D. a Child Psychologist at the Woman's College, was offered $2,700 above our salary. (Again, we were able to partially meet this offer and keep him).
5. Professor E. a Nuclear Physicist at State College, was offered $4.000 more than our salary by a Southern University. (The Engineering Foundation enabled us to offer this man a $2,000 salary increase and a Distinguished Professorship and he is still at the College).

This list could be multiplied several times. And in addition to the faculty members whom we have lost to more attractive offers elsewhere, there is another list of faculty positions of our own that we have not been able to fill because the salaries are too low to get people who come up to our standards.

Our Endowment and Foundation funds have enabled us to keep many of our distinguished scholars who have received offers of more money elsewhere — but we are stretching these funds mighty close to their present limits.

It is well to remember that the idea of these funds is to supplement rather than to supplant state appropriations. We must pay higher state salaries if we are to maintain our prestige and our distinction.

As Governor Hodges said in Athens, Georgia, last year in his address to the Regional Conference of Governing Boards of Higher Institutions:

"In the race for accomplishment, our region is starting from farther back than most of the other regions of the nation. And I may say to all of you in the South, as I say to my fellow citizens regularly in North Carolina, we must spend in this region more money for education than we can afford."

The increased appropriation money which we are asking the General Assembly will permit us — belatedly — to tangibly recognize our most distinguished teachers and researchers.

Also, it will put us in a favorable competitive position and should enable us to keep most of our distinguished faculty.

We close with a song of prayer in our hearts — a song we all love very much: "Carolina, Carolina, Heaven's blessings attend her." And we are ever mindful that Heaven helps those who help themselves.

We will continue our efforts to build Foundation support. We will continue to seek private benefactions. We will continue to develop every possible resource. But, we must continue to look to the General Assembly as the chief source of the life-blood — the basic support — for the Woman's College, for State and for the University in Chapel Hill.

The University's Position On The Faculty

William B. Aycock

The manner in which the Advisory Budget Commission treated the University's requests for additional faculty personnel for the forthcoming biennium is cause for deep concern. It is the duty of those of us who believe we can foresee the serious consequences of these recommendations, should they prevail, to state them and to give reasons for the fears we hold.

The following extract from p. xii, Volume I of the Advisory Budget Commission's recommendations will help to focus on the issue.

"Increases in academic personnel requested in the "A" Budgets to take care of this enrollment increase at present work load levels have not, however, in most instances, been recommended to the extent requested. The recommendations are predicated upon the view that in many instances the prevailing over-all student-teacher ratios and teacher work loads can be increased without imparing the quality of the educational offerings of the institutions. The State cannot afford the luxury of low work loads in the light of increasingly higher costs of college education. Colge trustees and college staffs are urged to give study to this problem and to plan more carefully for the economical use of personnel, keeping constantly in mind that the State has a right to expect that the first duty of the teacher is to teach."

The number of additional faculty personnel which may be requested in the "A" (continuation) budget is controlled by anticipated enrollment. Requests for additional faculty personnel unrelated to enrollment but to enrich the teaching and research programs must appear in the "B" (enrichment) budget. All requests made by the Consolidated University for faculty personnel in the "B" budget were disallowed by the Advisory Budget Commission. Although this is serious there is reason for greater concern in the treatment of requests for faculty personnel in the "A" budget. For purposes of illustration I refer specifically to the "A" budget for the Division of Academic Affairs at Chapel Hill. In this budget forty-three new teaching positions were requested for the biennium. Although justified by our anticipated increase in enrollment, which the Advisory Budget Commission accepted, the Commission recommended only thirteen of the forty-three positions. Thus the reduction was not based on a reappraisal of the projected increase in student enrollment but on another ground, namely an increase in the student-teacher ratio. The consequences of such a reduction will be either to increase further an already high teaching load of the classroom teachers or to deemphasize the research functions in the University.

Although it is hazardous to try to explain a complex situation in a few words, it is essential that I undertake to do so. The concept of the "A" budget as understood by us, is to continue all programs at the same level of quality. Two major programs of a university are teaching and research. On the average about three-fourths of the time of faculty members is spent in classroom teaching and one-fourth in research.

Putting this another way, of the 464 faculty members in the Division of Academic Affairs at Chapel Hill, the equivalent of 353 are teaching full time in the classroom and the equivalent of 111 are engaged in research. Remember, these are statistical averages, and what actually happens, of course, is that almost every member of the faculty does some teaching and some research.

Fight For The Complete Budget

William Friday

Ladies and gentlemen, so many of you have raised questions with me about the recommendations of the Advisory Budget Commission that I now invite your attention to statements that will be made by officers of the administration concerning these recommendations. These statements will take some time, but there is nothing of greater importance for us to discuss this morning.

I should like for you to know that in a conference with the Chairman of this Board last Thursday, I received his personal encouragement to state our case on these recommendations at this meeting this morning.

Should you agree with the administration in this presentation, we respectfully request that this Board of Trustees affirm its intention to support the Consolidated University as it seeks restoration of the increased appropriations originally requested.

In making this presentation, I have asked the assistance of Chancellor Blackwell, Chancellor Bostian, and Chancellor Aycock in order that you may hear firsthand of the impact of these recommendations on the operation of our institutions. Vice President Carmichael will comment on the faculty salary situation.

During the past several days I have had informal conferences with the officers of the Board of Higher Education. Since meetings with these officers are now scheduled for early March, at which time particular attention will be given to the long-range capital improvement or building program recommended by that Board, we shall not comment on these items now other than to say that we shall stand on the urgent, long-range building needs of the University. However, we do wish to express our gratitude to the Budget Commission for the recommendations it has made for new buildings and facilities to be constructed during the next biennium.

This morning we shall address ourselves to the requests we have submitted for the maintenance and operation of the Consolidated University. As you know, these requests were submitted in a different manner this year. As Governor Hodges explained in his Budget Message, requests for funds necessary to continue existing services and programs at present levels were set forth in what is called the "A" budget. Requests for funds necessary to increase faculty salaries and to support expansion, improvement, and new programs were set forth in the "B" budget.

We began preparation of our requests well over a year ago. At the outset, we agreed that we should determine those areas where increased support would be necessary to maintain and strengthen the quality and excellence of our institutions. We found that such a decision demands emphasis of the importance of increases in faculty salaries, increases in appropriations for the libraries, and additional support for our research and service programs.

During this period of preparation, many conferences were held with faculty committees and academic deans. Following these discussions, the Chancellors and the Chancellors and the Consolidated Office considered their requests individually and in total. Reluctantly, we were obliged to reduce or omit some requests that were submitted to us, even though they were valid and meritorious. Our request, in its final form, contained only those items and amounts considered vitally essential in the approaching biennium.

At the conclusion of these administrative deliberations, we presented our proposed budget to the Executive Committee of this Board of Trustees. After receiving its approval, we made our presentation to the Board of Higher Education where we were given full opportunity to be heard. After hearing all state-supported institutions of higher learning, the Board of Higher Education submitted its own recommendations to the Advisory Budget Commission. Later, the University administration exercised its right to appear before the Advisory Budget Commission and, again, we stated the urgent need for increased state support.

The "A" and "B" budget requests presented at each of these hearings reflected our best judgment as to the appropriation increases required to maintain the excellence and quality of our institutions. At each of these hearings we stressed the importance of maintaining superior faculties to insure the quality of the teaching, research, and service functions they perform for the University.

The recommendations made by the Advisory Budget Commission reduce substantially the "A" and "B" budget requests we have submitted. If these Commission recommendations stand, we respectfully submit that we shall not be able to maintain the level of excellence and quality the University is known, throughout the world, to possess.

To be a member of the Association of American Universities, one of the top 41 institutions of 1800 colleges and universities on this continent; to be known as one of the nation's outstanding colleges for women; to be known as one of the strong and rapidly developing land-grant colleges in our nation are distinctions not easily achieved. To lower our standards of excellence and quality now, particularly when so much depends upon what is done to strengthen education at all levels in our state, would, in our judgment, be a costly decision for North Carolina to make.

The University administration has taken the position that increased appropriations for the improvement of faculty salaries is the most urgent item in our "B" budget. The 1957 session of the General Assembly saved the University from what could have been a severe depletion of its faculty. Additional funds to be administered in the discretion of the administration were provided enabling the University to keep many of our good people.

Through these presentations we have stated our case as we see it after careful study of the recommendations made by the Advisory Budget Commission. We have endeavored to show you that greatness in a University depends upon the quality of the faculty and staff; the excellence of their teaching, research, and service; and an environment conducive to creative work. The criteria by which the distinction of the University is measured are not changed by budgetary conditions, but insufficient resources can quickly lessen a University's ability to meet these criteria.

We believe the people of North Carolina are vitally concerned about education at all levels. We feel it our duty to inform the General Assembly and the people of the facts for the final decision on what shall be done rests in their hands.

In performing this duty, we shall also speak in the interest of the public schools, the community colleges, and the state-supported, four-year colleges for we are partners in the total effort of our state in public education. (I would add that those of us who have attended private institutions must do more to encourage their growth and development for their progress also is essential to the development of North Carolina.)

We now ask you, as Trustees of the University, to affirm your intention of courageous leadership in meeting the challenge before us. A summary indicating the appropriation increases requested, the recommendations made by the Budget Commission; and the differences between the requests and recommendations has been prepared for your information; and a copy will be handed each of you this morning.

We believe our original requests as identified on these sheets represent the appropriation increases necessary to maintain the excellence and quality of our institutions. We submit that it is your responsibility as Trustees of these institutions to exert every effort to maintain these standards to insure progress in education in our state.

Aycock Outlines Program

cellor told the attentive audience that it would not be wise to sell the University short, but that the cause of expansion and development should be argued positively.

Two years ago the University lost many faculty members, some who were difficult to replace. "This is the hiring season in the academic world. We will probably lose more unless the General Assembly offers some recognition," Aycock reported.

The Univerity is expanding and expects a further increase in the student body next year. The fall semester showed an increase of 475 students more than the previous year. The budget figures are based on an average of the students in both semesters.

Charles Shaffer, director of development, outlined the means available to achieve the restoration of funds. He listed the Alumni Review school journals, news letters and other outlets in the publications field in which statements would be welcome.

Alumni meetings, both in large groups and small gatherings, would be a useful means of presenting views, he said. Civic clubs which request speakers from the University are another outlet.

He praised both the students and the UNC News Bureau as a means of helping the University cause. Many students recently visited legislators to answer and ask questions about the University.

He suggested to the members present to write letters to friends in the Legislature or influential alumni to present the needs of the University. He also added that fraternities could assist by inviting alumni members and discussing the problems of the budget and clearing up some of the arguments.

Cards were issued for faculty members to use in volunteering to aid in the mobilization. The cards will be used as a guide for drawing on those who are willing to speak at civic club meetings, write letters, make personal contacts or speak to alumni.

A meeting is scheduled for Friday in the Library Assembly Room to explain various parts of the budget needs.

Some 6,000 to 7,000 white men, between the ages of 18 and 26, reported for military duty throughout Southern Rhodesia.

Sir Roy Welensky, Prime Minister of the Rhodesia-Nyasaland federation, called up the territorial reservists after the racial riots in predominately black Nyasaland injured 50 Africans.

The President of the Nyasaland African National Congress, Dr. Hastings Banda, is campaigning to remove the Nyasaland protectorate from the federation with Southern and Northern Rhodesia, a British commonwealth member.

The London-trained physician wants Nyasaland to join Kenya and Tanganyika, neighboring territories under British control.

About 6,000 whites inhabit Nyasaland, a tea and tobacco growing region populated by 3 million Africans. The two Rhodesias count 250,000 whites and 4½ million blacks.

Kenya is a British colony, Tanganyika a U. N. trust territory administered by Britain.

About 140 troops were flown here today from Southern Rhodesia.

In Southern Rhodesia, about 2,000 African ground-hog workers on the Kariba Dam project struck for higher wages behind the battle cry: "We won't die for fourpence (4½ cents)."

A strike leader said the walkout resulted from last Friday's disaster when a shaft collapsed killing 17 Africans.

African workers are paid fourpence an hour and are demanding a shilling an hour (14 cents), he said.

Dean Godfrey Presented Air Force Award

The Tar Heel Air Force Award has been presented to Dr. James Logan Godfrey, dean of the UNC faculty, at a special ceremony here last week.

The Tar Heel Air Force is the honorary organization of the Air Force ROTC unit at UNC for those persons who have shown exceptional interest in the Cadet Corps.

The certificate awarded Dean Godfrey was presented in recognition of his pronounced interest in the United States Air Force and support of the Air Force Reserve Officers Training Corps activities.

The award was made at a combination parade and review conducted by the AFROTC Cadet Corps. Other members of the Tar Heel Air Force are General F. C. Shepard, Coach Jim Tatum, Dean Cecil Johnson, Consolidated University President William C. Friday, University Chancellor William B. Aycock and Capt. Michael Pennella, USAF (Ret.).

ACTION DEMANDED

Thibaut added, "Unless something is done, lots of people will leave. Right now only the magnificent attractions of Chapel Hill are holding many here. The University cannot continue long trading in this kind of currency."

Geography Prof. D. G. Basile said, "Teaching is not a one way street," with reference to his feelings on classroom size. "The professor," he continued, "can be stimulated, and his teaching approach guided by the responses of his students. This is much more effective in a small class than in a large one.

"The approach of the Legislature that we can't afford the luxury of 13.1 students each is unrealistic in that it increases the gap between the professor and his students and makes give and take more difficult, and the bringing out of the best less likely."

IFC Argues Deferred Rush

coming.

He argued that action now would give the fraternities enough time to get acclimated.

Ed Levy said students became oriented toward fraternities instead of the campus. He, as did Robinson and Huntington, explained that he did not go before the committee on assumption that he was representing the IFC.

Yates argued that deferred rushing would create a financial void. If rush was deferred until March (this was the earliest date he thought second semester rush could be held), the houses would lose around $108,000 a year. He termed this figure a "conservative estimate."

Yates emphasized that the present system of rush was cheap and that a period of silence could be maintained. He said study halls, tutoring by big brothers and the need to get a C average for initiation helped scholarship.

According to Yates, the fraternity houses are able to take some of the load off the University housing system.

Tom Rand said the crux of the problem was whether "fraternities are a good or bad influence on freshmen." He called upon the fraternities to take constructive steps towards improving scholarship.

Other members of the IFC also spoke in favor of the present rush system.

Speaking again, Huntington said he thought the IFC should be strengthened so "the administration could look to us to discipline ourselves."

Yates called on the incoming IFC administration to make the good things it does better known. He said that there were groups and movements on this campus working to hurt and cripple fraternities.

Rand, a member of the IFC court, announced that investigation of incidences during Germans Weekend were progressing, but that work was taking time because of the great number of people that had to be contacted.

Carolina Seeks To Hit Comeback Trail At Virginia Tonight

Can Clinch ACC Tie For First With Win

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Tar Heels can clinch at least a tie for the ACC regular season championship tonight when they travel to Virginia to do battle with the Cavaliers at 8 o'clock.

As N. C. State, the Heels' closet competitor, has already finished its ACC play with a 12-2 record, Carolina's ACC record is 11-1, so a win tonight would make it 12-1.

Should the Tar Heels win tonight and beat Duke here Saturday afternoon, they would end up in first place with a 13-1 league record.

Were Number 1

The high-flying Tar Heels were number one in the nation until hot and cold Maryland turned feverish and derailed the Tar Heel victory express last Saturday night. The Terps, in gaining a surprisingly easy 69-51 win, dropped Carolina's season record to 17-2 and their conference mark to 11-1.

Virginia, a team that was picked as the darkhorse title contender before the season began, has come on strongly after a poor start. Two weeks ago the Cavaliers stopped Maryland 62-50 and in their last outing survived the pressure to nudge Wake Forest 81-78 in two overtimes.

Cavaliers 8-13

The Cavaliers are in sixth place in the conference with a 4-8 mark, but 3 of those wins have been accomplished in the last two weeks. The Virginians are 8-13 overall. Early in the season the Cavaliers pulled a prime upset by knocking the pins from under strong West Virginia 75-72.

The Tar Heels will be hoping to bounce back from the Maryland game, which they would rather forget. They were out-offensed and outdefensed as the Terps hit a scorching 53 per cent of their shots from the floor while Carolina was muddling along with 37 percent.

While junior Jerry Bechtle was ripping the cords for 28 points, Carolina's sophomore duo of Doug Moe and York Larese could come up with only 11 points between them.

The Tar Heels have suffered only one other defeat, that to Michigan State in the semi-finals of the Dixie Classic. The Maryland loss broke a 11-game win streak for Carolina.

The Tar Heels are expected to start off with Doug Moe and Lee Shaffer at forwards, Dick Kepley at center, and Harvey Salz and York Larese at guards.

The Cavaliers will probably go with Paul Adkins and John Haner at guards, big Herb Busch at center, and John Siewers and Bill Metzger at the forwards.

Heels Drop To Third In AP Poll

ACC Swimming Championships Set To Open Here Thursday

By JOHN JUSTICE

The 1959 Atlantic Coast Conference Swimming and Diving Championships will get under way Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in Bowman-Gray Pool, when the starter's gun sounds the beginning of the 1500 meters race. The meet will last three days. All eight ACC schools will have squads entered, with the host Tar Heels favored to take top honors.

If the Carolina mermen, coached by Pat Earey, do win the championship, it will be the third consecutive year that the Heels have carried away the big silver cup. The next strongest teams are expected to be Duke and Maryland, respectively. The UNC splashers have defeated both of these teams previously this season.

Lineups for the various events will be released Thursday by the coaches. Much speculating is being done as to what events Harry Bloom, Carolina's ace swimmer, will enter. Bloom is capable of swimming several distances, and as of now Coach Earey declines to commit himself.

Going into the meet, Carolina has a 10-1 record, the only loss being to Florida University. The closest call in the ACC was a 44-42 victory over Maryland last Saturday, when the Terrapins gained many points in the diving competition, which is not Carolina's strongest point.

Coach Earey expects a very interesting meet, and he extends an invitation for all sports fans to come down to Bowman-Gray Pool any or all of the three days of the competition. Friday, the first event, low board diving, begins at 1 p.m. On Saturday, the last day, the preliminaries and semifinals in high diving lead off at 9 a.m.

DUKE TICKETS GONE

The UNC ticket office has announced that there are no more tickets available for the Carolina-Duke game this Saturday afternoon in Woollen Gym. The few remaining tickets were distributed early yesterday.

GYMNASTIC CLUB FORMED ON CAMPUS

By HARVEY A. WILKINSON

Up and round and down and over and WOW! That's gymnastics in a nut's shell; although the shell rarely becomes damaged, a great many people seem to think that only the divinely endowed are able to keep their back entact or to keep from getting their cranium crushed. The dispeller of these folkstales is one Walter Weiland who is now holding daily seminars on the parallel bars, rings, high bar, and in the near future — trampoline.

Officially the gymnastics club is non-competitive, nevertheless, a great deal of enthusiasm is evident among the members. Strictly voluntary, participation has been exceptionally good — even better than some sports whose attendence is supposedly required.

As to date there have not been many who have had previous experience on the apparatus: however, Mr. Weiland has skillfully and patiently imparted his know-how so that even the formerly less adept are now making the scene with handstands on the P- bars, and assorted goodies on rings, and high bar.

Fired-Up Virginia Upsets Carolina 69-68; Heels Blow Three Chances To Win

Charlottesville, Va. — Carolina's Tar Heels were knocked off for the second time in as many games here last night as Virginia's fired-up Cavaliers came from as much as 12 points behind to upset the Heels 69-68.

The Tar Heels blew three scoring chances in the final minute of play when they trailed by only one point. The loss dumped Carolina to an 11-2 ACC record and made it a necessity to beat Duke Saturday to gain a tie for the ACC championship.

Carolina had forged from behind on two pairs of free throws by Ray Stanley and Harvey Salz to lead 68-67 with 1:10 left. Then Paul Adkins hit a drive shot to put the Cavaliers ahead to stay at 69-68 with 1:04 left.

Adkins then went to the line and missed on a free throw attempt, but York Larese missed the shot with 37 seconds left. The Cavaliers came back up court and Larese stole the ball, but then Doug Moe missed a shot with 15 seconds left. Then Moe fouled Virginia's Herb Busch.

Busch also missed on the free toss opportunity with six seconds left, but then Lou Brown missed the final desperation shot with one second left in the game.

Virginia fought from behind to lead 36-34 at the half after trailing by as much as 12 points in the opening half. The Tar Heels' biggest lead was at 26-14, but after that the Cavaliers chopped away at it and went ahead at intermission.

Two free throws by Harvey Salz tied the score at 36-all in the opening seconds of the second stanza, but Virginia quickly regained the lead and held it until Salz hit again to make it 44-43 Carolina .

Carolina got their biggest lead of the half, four points, when two jumps by Larese and two free throws by Moe made it 56-52. But Virginia quickly whittled it back down and from there on in it was a dogfight.

The win ran Virginia's string to three and unned their conference record to 5-8. The Cavaliers are 9-13 overall.

Humanities Lecturer Defines Fiction World

The fictional world was explored in the spring semester Humanities Lecture delivered here Tuesday by Dr. Harry K. Russell, professor in the English Department.

Dr. Russell pointed out some of the ways of thinking about a novel which consider the novelist's relationship to his story, the organization of the story, the novelist's ideas of people and their behavior and the kind of fiction the author has written.

"These approaches," he said, "are all involved in a consideration of the fictional world as differentiated from the real world."

The novelist, Dr. Russell commented, makes and controls fiction, presenting not a world remembered and documented as in history and biography, but a world imagined .

"For the biographer or the historian, events within his book are controlled by their allegiance to the real world. For the novelist, events within his book are controlled only by their appropriateness to the internal logic of the narrative.

"As we read a novel we find ourselves in a world that is autonomous. The objects, events and persons in it exist by virtue of and are controlled by their function in the fictional world," stated Dr. Russell.

He noted that there are some novels in which the real world enters the fictional. "The historical novelist and the allegorist incorporate sets of events which must duplicate events in the real, the historical world and which are therefore controlled by that world," he said.

Dr. Russell examined Scott's "Quentin Durward," Swift's "Gulliver's Travels" and Bunyan's "The Pilgrim's Progress" as novels illustrating the boundary between the worlds of fact and fiction.

These works, according to the speaker, have the order of events and characters affected by an external scheme — either historical or religious — yet still remain in the realm of the fictional.

In examining the attributes of a novel which would be the norm in this literary type, Dr. Russell said the point of view is inclusive or omniscient. "The novelist keeps his place in the real world and records as fully as he wishes the happenings in the fictional world," he said. "The persons possess the moral interest of people in the real world whose development is not controlled by any historical figures or events. The action is organized around emphasized events which make a pattern of cause and effect by moving from a defining event, through a crisis or confirmation, to a culmination and denouement," he stressed.

"The characteristic point of view in novels that brings the real and the fictional worlds close together is that of a narrator, a person who is in the reader's world and is a participant in the action of the novel," Dr. Russell observed.

UP Execs To Select Candidates

The University Party Executive Committee will select candidates to the run in the spring for five Legislature seats at a meeting today at 1:30 p.m. in the Grail Room.

UP Chairman John Minter said yesterday any person interested in being a candidate for seats in Town Men's IV and Dorm Men's IV appear before the Executive Committee at 1:30 p.m. today.

Candidates for three one-year seats will be named in Town Men's IV, which includes students living in the area bounded by Columbia Street on the west, Franklin Street on the north and the corporate limits of Chapel Hill on the east and south, in addition to students living outside the city limits.

Also, candidates for two one-year seats will be named to run in Dorm Men's IV, which includes residents of Mangum, Manly, Grimes and Ruffin dormitories and students living in Emerson Stadium.

Students May Hold Rooms

Students presently living in dormitories now have the option of reserving their rooms for the summer and fall sessions. They may do so by making a deposit with the University Cashier in the basement of South Building not later than April 22.

Fall housing reservation fee is $10 and the entire rent must be paid by Sept. 1 of this year.

Summer school housing offers three different plans to students. Double rooms will be available in Joyner, Mangum, Grimes, Ruffin and Winston (for graduate men). The rent in the dorms, to be paid when the reservations are made, is $20.

Single rooms will be available in Manly, Stacy and Lewis dorms. The rent here, also to be paid upon making reservations, is $30.

Married students will be housed in Graham Dorm during the summer. The rent is $40 and will be paid when reservations are made.

Cancer Control Show Begins On Channel 4

A new series of half-hour television programs on cancer control will begin Friday night at 9:30 on WUNC-TV, Channel 4.

The program is being presented in cooperation with the American Cancer Society, NBC and the National Education Television and Radio Center.

Titled "Tactic," the series will feature Dr. Charles Cameron, dean of the Hahnemann Medical College of Philadelphia, as medical authority. Prominent entertainers will join him each week in an effort to tell the complete cancer story.

In the first program, movie and television director Alfred Hitchcock and choreographer Hanya Holm will be special guests. Some of the other show business personalities scheduled to appear in the series are Celeste Holm, Ilka Chase Jim Backus, Steve Allen, Mata and Hari, and cartoonist Walt Kelly.

Some of the topics to be discussed on "Tactic" include the nature and behavior of cancer, the seven warning symptoms, the chances for a cure and what sound medical treatment involves. Cancer of various kinds and the methods for detection of each type will be described.

As a final goal, the series will attempt to develop a realistic evaluation of the progress in cancer research and will discuss what constitutes the desirable environment for research.

"Tactic" will be telecast on Channel 4 every Friday night at 9:30.

Miss Bardwell was named to the position this week by Symposium Chairman Dick Robinson.

Robinson said, "Few positions are more demanding than that of secretary of the Carolina Symposium, and the present officers are very pleased that Mardi Bardwell has accepted the job. Her outstanding abilities will be a definite contribution to their 1960 program."

Campus Chest Board Lists Agencies To Receive Aid; Considered 14, To Aid 3

"Students helping students" is the feature of this year's Campus Chest drive which will begin March 1 for a week.

The agencies which will receive aid from the drive are the World University Service, Goettingen Exchange Scholarship Program and the School for Mentally Retarded Children of Orange County. If the Campus Chest goal is reached, these three will get portions of $3,000.

The selection of the three agencies was made by the Campus Chest Board earlier this year. John Whitaker, a member of the Board, said Wednesday that 14 organizations were considered before the number was finally cut to three.

"The Board decided first of all that it would be better to give much to a few rather than to give a little to many," Whitaker said in commenting on the Board's action in the selection of the three agencies.

"Secondly, the members of the Board tried to evaluate the needs of each organization individually and then in relative importance to the others under consideration. Only after much thought and deliberation was the final decision made," he said.

Among other organizations considered for support by the Campus Chest Board were: the Japanese International Christian University Foundation, Inc.; Scholarships for Athens College, Greece; Save the Children Federation, the National Scholarship Service Fund for Negro Students;

The Emergency Fund for Needy Students, the Chapel Hill Community Chest, the Negro Orphans Fund, Victory Village Child Service, Children's Foundation of Richmond, Va., for adopting children abroad, and the Orange County Home for the Aged.

To support students over the world, the Campus Chest Board selected the World University Service (WUS) to include in this year's budget. Funds to the WUS support a program of material assistance and promote education for international understanding.

Examples of services performed by the WUS include aid offered refugees after World War II. This aid consisted of scholarships, medicine and food and contributions to the operation of an international center offering rest cures. The WUS also gave support to the Hungarian refugees after the revolt of October 1956.

Another agency being sponsored by the Campus Chest drive is the Goettingen Exchange Scholarship Program, which sends students from Carolina to the University at Goettingen for a year of study. Students from the German university also come here for a year.

The third agency to receive aid from the Campus Chest is the Mentally Retarded Children's Class of Orange County. Students in this class range from 9 to 16 years of age (16 is the age limit for children accepted) and their intelligence quotients range from 50 to 70.

Funds for the teacher's (Mrs. Thelma Brummett) salary come from the federal and state governments, but special attention, equipment and supplies get no special subsidy.

Appropriations For 2 TV Sets Voted By IDC

The Interdormitory Council voted last night to approve money for the purchase of two new television sets for Cobb and Winston dormitories. The money is to be used to replace sets that were stolen recently.

A bill to establish a committee to administer the T-V Repair Fund was passed by the council. The committee will consist of 3 members from the IDC and 2 members from the Women's Residence Council.

The IDC also voted to approve a resolution for the formation of a roommate preference questionaire. The form is to be optional and would be sent to all new dorm men.

Study rooms will be set up on a trial basis in Manley, Lewis and Graham dormitories in the near future. These rooms will be furnished for studying and are to be available for student use at all hours.

Plans for dorm discussion groups to be held to discuss pertinent campus and world affairs were also

Student Legislature To Discuss Four Bills

By DEE DANIELS

As the Student Legislature convenes tonight, the solons will discuss four bills, two involving changes in the general election laws.

In a bill introduced last week, Charlie Gray (UP) proposed that the residents of Town Men's I be allowed to vote at the Carolina Inn and the Naval Armory and those in Town Men's III to vote at Graham Memorial and in front of the Western Union. Previously, there was only one ballot box in each district.

In Article II of the bill, the voting specifications would be outlined by the chairman of the Elections Board.

This article was amended yesterday by the Ways and Means Committee to require that the elections chairman submit such specifications to the Legislature for approval before March 20.

Norman B. Smith, Ways and Means chairman, said, "The committee was convinced that this was a desirable piece of legislation in that it would provide for more convenient voting procedures and tend to equalize the opportunity to vote for all students and that election law violations could continue to be kept at a minimum."

Concerning the bill, Ralph Cummings, speaker of Legislature, said it would involve "the inconsistency of allowing persons to vote at two places in the same district."

In a bill presented by Dave Jones (SP), on behalf of the Elections Board, at the last session, it was proposed that polling places be located in each dormitory, except Kenan, Connor and Teague, since a small percentage of the Teague constituents voted in the fall 1958 elections.

The Ways and Means Committee amended the bill, leaving polling places in the above mentioned dorms, except in such the poll hours shall be from 3 p.m. to 7 p.m., instead of the usual 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

It was felt that, since most of the students living in these dorms are either graduate, medical or pharmaceutical students, it would be more advantageous to have polls open a shorter time, but later in the day.

Smith remarked, "We felt that extension of poll closing time limits plus the reduction of total number of open hours would make voting in dormitories, occupied principally by graduate students, more convenient."

Also on the agenda will be a bill, co-authored by Bill Miller (SP) and Troy Blanton (SP), to create a committee of three to study the feasibility of a picnic and recreational area in Victory Village.

Invitation Orders Continue Today, Friday

Commencement invitations may be ordered by seniors today and Friday. These are the final days seniors may place orders for the only invitations available for commencement.

IT'S A MAN'S WORLD

Lil Abner Designs Lose Out

By NADEANE WALKER

PARIS, — (AP) — Paris dressmakers finally presented pictures of their new styles to the public today with a hopeful, "Here it is, and how do you like it?"

By it they mean the natural line that you read about nearly a month ago. Photographs were not permitted until now.

Seldom has Paris made such a concerted attempt to please the public with a flattering, wearable silhouette. The designers must have said to themselves, "Let's give them what they want." Everybody, from Dior to Cardin, Balmain and Heim, fell in line.

For their pains, they may be criticized for lack of orginality. But they are reported to have had a succesful season with the buyers.

Hemlines, you will see, are just comfortably below the knee — the couple of inches that insure knee-cap coverage even when you sit down. Since not many people went in for last season's knee-high hems, this probably means that your skirts are just right as they are, without letting down or taking up.

Neckline decolletage is generous enough, but it's wide-open rather than low-down. This is what fashion calls the boat neckline, and to keep the nautical note there are sailor-type hats.

A trademark of the 1959 spring styles is the wide Bertha collar, in variations from a flat encircling band all the way to a deep flounce.

The waist-in-its-place is the biggest news of the season, with a few designers keeping just a hint of the lifted empire waistline of last year.

There are so many colors in the Paris collections that it's hard to pick the favorites. But greens surprised everybody by their unusual popularity and beige is probably the basic winner.

Prints are not prevailing, as they sometimes are for spring and summer wear. They run to scribbly abstracts, small checks, blurry flowers and polka dots.

Since the new line is supple, materials are, too. The favorites are tie silk, shantung, chiffon, tulle or net, organdy, lace and woolens.

There were no new fashion houses this season, but a new designer in an old house made his mark with an unexpected success. He is Jules Francois Crahay, who designed the whole Nina Ricci collection for the first time. Crahay, a 42-year-old Belgian, has been one of several Ricci designers for five years, but he really put the house back in the news with his first solo show.

Organizers

It seems that some people in this state can't get used to the idea that labor has a right to organize. They seem to take out their uneasiness at seeing this new species of human being called a labor organizer by violence and beating.

Some factory owners have at times resorted to such tactics as firing any employee caught talking to a union organizer, but violence has been partly hidden from the scene until now.

The right to organize is a right of any group, and the right to freely solicit membership is not something to be tampered with by a group of people who are ruthlessly trying to keep unionism away from the state.

This state is low in per capital income, and laborers have had to live on below cost of living wages. It is about time that laborers were able to organize throughout the state. It is about time that they were able to strike for fair wages.

It is not a necessary corollary of unionism that racketeering will occur, and this can be limited by effective use of governmental processes.

Violence was at no time a remedy for anything, and it is incumbent upon the state and local authorities to prosecute those responsible for the Henderson beating. It is also incumbent on the people of North Carolina to recognize the laborer's right to organize. The state might economically profit from such a move.

The Meeting

There were several good things about Tuesday's meeting to rally forces on the UNC budget and a few things that people might quarrel with.

It was good to hear that the University was trying to ressurect the entire budget, and of the various means that were going into future planning for the budget drive this year. It was good to see so many faculty persons represented at the meeting sincerely interested in the future of the Universtiy.

It was gratifying to note the areas that the Chancellor emphasized in his budget for faculty improvement, the library, and equipment are vitally important. Indeed, the mobilization was entirely commendable along these lines.

The two disturbing factors about the meeting were the lack of students present and the somewhat strong insistence that UNC at Chapel Hill should not be considered in any different status as the other Universities in the Consolidated University — that the case of UNC be presented as no more important than that of the other Universities. This was emphasized as only being a suggestion, but this particular suggestion is at the heart of one of the basic problems this University faces — consolidation.

Although Gordon Blackwell, chancellor at Woman's College, emphasized in his presentation to the Board of Trustees Monday the interdependence of the three Universities, it is still true that the present consolidation presents a contradiction in purposes that binds each individual institution to a great extent.

Something has to be done to carve out the University's future separate and apart from the other two schools in the Consolidated University. This year it probably will not make any difference, but in the future it makes a great difference in the purposive development of the University.

Yet, the time for action is now, and every person, who can, ought to support the University's budget request with vigor, either in his special area of concern or for the whole budget on all levels.

PART III

An aptitude test can help you determine the area in which you would be happiest and do your best work. After such a test, you'll be given a list of occupations in which you would be most likely to succeed. Sometimes it's a long list. You'll have to make your own selection.

Your interests, now and up to now, will provide some evidence of the type of work that would give you greatest rewards in personal satisfaction.

Let's say you're fairly good at writing essays, and your aptitude test points toward marketing; then you would do well to consider a career in advertisting copy writing.

Note that I say consider that kind of work. Don't jump to a decision.

So, if you have the slightest question about the field where you'll be most satisfied, take that aptitude test. Some institutions charge a modest fee, but most likely you can take one at no cost . . . either thru your college's placement office or thru a firm which is interested in you as a prospective employee.

But, why should you set a definite objective? Why not take a job in some compatible activity, then see where the wind will blow you? A lot of people do, but I say to you, Don't! Why?

Because you'll go much farther, faster, by setting your sights on a definite, worthy, and high objective. This will help prevent you from accepting what appears to be an opportunity or an advancement, but which might ultimately lead you down a blind alley, a dead-end job with no room for further growth.

Pay is important. Don't overlook that in setting your career objective. Idealistic youth does overlook it, sometimes. Hold on to your idealism . . . but with your eyes and mind wide open. Remember that a primary purpose of work is to provide for yourself and your family. Salary should not be your only objective, of course; but you'd be foolish to ignore it entirely. Put pay in its proper place, in deciding your objective.

Maybe you're thinking, "I just want to earn as much money as I can."

Don't fool yourself. It's not that simple.

Visiting Report

VISITING COMMITTEE REPORT OF 1958

In our Report of last year some several specific recommendations were made for the University at Chapel Hill. The administration has endeavored to fulfill these recommendations wherever possible. Lack of necessary funds has been the sole deterrent toward their complete fruition.

In our 1958 Report, Chancellor William B. Aycock and his colleagues received special commendation for their dedicated service to the University and to the people of North Carolina. Having had the opportunity and privilege of observing these people go about their tasks for another year, the Committee should like to reiterate its appreciation of their services. The trust which this Board continues to repose in them is well founded. And the destiny of the University stands secure in their hands.

THE PHYSICAL PLANT

From a glance at the accompanying map of the University at Chapel Hill one is immediately struck with the vastness of this institution. Gone is the small school and village of yesteryear, endearingly familiar to so many student generations from Revolutionary days to the time preceding World War II.

The last decade — and now, 1959, finds us with a plant encompassing over one hundred buildings and facilities! With their acquisition and maintenance come, not only increasing costs and problems, but commensurate opportunities for greater service to the people of North Carolina.

We have visited this campus upon several occasions and have found the buildings and grounds extremely well kept. By thoughtful planning, imagination and foresight — and through plain hard work — much of the aesthetic beauty and charm of Chapel Hill have been preserved. For those people responsible we give our special commendation for a job well done.

The two most crying needs for capital improvements at Chapel Hill are a Student Union building and a building to house the School of Public Health.

The amount needed for the Student Union is $2.03.000. The urgency of this need increases with the growing enrollment. This propose building would provide facilities for campus-wide social and cultural programs, essential student welfare services, student government activities and a religion center. Its needs are discussed in detail in another section of this Report.

The amount recommended by the Board of Higher Education for a building to house the School of Public Health is $1.500.000 from the state, to which will be added some federal matching funds for the construction of research facilities. The School of Public Health is housed in eleven different places upon the campus: four temporary war buildings, two quonset huts, one made-over waterworks building, one research laboratory (permanent building), ground floor of Medical and Public Health Building, space in the new waterworks building two miles from the campus, and one wing of Miller Hall. Students and professors have a half mile to go from one classroom to another, through all kinds of weather. Efficiency of operation and administration is made more difficult. Added to this there is crowding, with lack of laboratory and teaching space, some of which in cold weather becomes dangerously unhealthy and unusable.

One cannot quarrel with the generosity of the state in providing capital improvements for the University. Demands are many upon its coffers and are necessarily limited by our economy. However, a significant fact apparent from a perusal of the accompanying map and its legend is the great debt owed by the University to sources other than the state treasury. Some 34.54 per cent of the buildings at Chapel Hill have been acquired by gifts and donations, federal funds, self-financing and medical care funds. Every playing field, dining facility and student activity center have come entirely without state appropriation. From the aid given by the Masons in the erection of Old East in 1793 to the acquisition of beautiful Morehead Planetarium through the generoity of John Motley Morehead in 1949, the University has ever been dependent upon its friends and benefactors for many of its capital improvements.

If we are to keep pace with the educational needs of an expanding population, and yet maintain our historic excellence, it is submitted that an ever greater effort must be made to find funds from sources other than the public treasury.

I. THE FACULTY

The faculty of the University at Chapel Hill is and has always been of the best. It is the primary concern of this Report that such status continue. And it is agreed by those most conversant with the University that the question of higher faculty salaries is our most critical one. We recognized this need in our last Report to you and recommended substantial increases. Today the need appears even more acute. Our economy has continued unabated in its inflationary spiral, and competition is ever keener from both industry and other institutions of higher learning. There continues an even greater disparity between professorial salaries and those of other professional people. Salary-wise, we are seriously lagging behind those institutions with whom we have always been proud to be classified. Our position as one of the country's top ranking universities is due largely to the historic excellence of our faculty. Its contributions to the cultural, scientific, economic and political life of this state and region are incalculable. It is true that many professors remain in Chapel Hill at considerable financial sacrifice — this out of sheer love for and loyalty to the University. Too many others, and understandably so, have felt compelled to go elsewhere. One cannot quarrel with those who have placed family obligations first. And it is indeed a sad commentary on our times that outstanding educators sometimes find themselves unable to afford the cost of higher education for their own children. Such an anomaly exists at Chapel Hill.

Chancellor's Report On The UNC Faculty

We were asked by the budget authorities to provide information from which the number of students per teacher at Chapel Hill could be derived. What we provided them was the number of students and faculty members, without regard to whether the faculty members were engaged in teaching, or research, or both. This was necessary to maintain the principle of continuing existing functions which was basic, you might say, to the concept of the "A" budget. The result was to make it appear that the student-teacher ratio is 13.1 students to one teacher. In reality this is the student-faculty ratio and the student-teacher ratio should have been computed 17.2 students to each teacher. In the fall of 1958 the student-teacher ratio in fact was 18.2 to one. This is explained by pointing out that the peak student load in the University occurs in the fall semester. Considering that this student-teacher ratio includes both graduate and undergraduate students it is extremely high by all existing standards. It is hoped that the foregoing explanation will be the basis for correcting a numerical picture not adquately presented.

However, in the light of the policy statement of the Advisory Budget Commission with respect to "luxury of low work loads" and "the first duty of a teacher is to teach," further observations on behalf of the Consolidated University are in order.

Apart from the question of research, the work loads of faculty members in an institution of higher learning must be considered in terms of the kinds of instruction provided. A distinction must be made between graduate and undergraduate teaching. This is particularly significant to the Consolidated University inasmuch as 82.9 percent of all graduate course instruction given by state-supported institutions of higher learning in this State is provided by the three branches of the University. In 1957-58 the Consolidated University awarded every Ph.D. and Doctor of Education degree given in a state-supported institution in North Carolina. Let me refer to the number of students per faculty member recommended by the Texas Commission on Higher Education to illustrate a well-established distinction in work loads for graduate and undergraduate instruction.

Number of Students per Faculty Member:

	Un'grad'e	Ma'ters	Doc'l
Science	19	6	4
Fine Arts	19	6	4
Teacher Edu.	19	10	5

Why the difference? In undergraduate instruction, the emphasis is on the transmission of knowledge whereas in graduate instruction the emphasis is on the discovery of truth. The former is susceptible with some exceptions, to large group instruction but the latter requires small groups and, in many instances, individualized instruction.

One of the primary functions of the University is to develop college teachers for other institutions. A glance at the 1958-1959 Catalogue of East Carolina College, for example, will reveal that forty members of the faculty of that institution had graduate or post-graduate professional study at Chapel Hill. At least 25,000 new college teachers will be needed each year during the next ten years to meet the demand of our growing college population. It is reassuring to report that the enrollment in the graduate school at Chapel Hill increased 244 this year over last year. This was an increase of 20 percent as compared with 7 percent for the University at Chapel Hill as a whole. This growth means that other institutions in the State will soon have a larger supply of teachers. If the policy of the Advisory Budget Commission should prevail, then an already high student-teacher ratio must go higher and both graduate instruction and research must suffer.

In the calendar year 1957 the faculty at Chapel Hill published fifty-four books and 236 other publications. In addition faculty members were directing hundreds of graduate students in the preparation of master's theses and doctoral dissertations. It would be tragic to deemphasize the research function just at a time when there is a growing appreciation for the importance of the discovery of knowledge. Universities have a special mission to engage in basic research. This type of research has been referred to as a savings account. It provides the wellsprings of knowledge to be drawn upon by those engaged in applied research. The Research Triangle program will emphasize applied research. The Universities in this area must supply basic research if the program in the Triangle is to reach its highest potential. Further, the Universities must provide personnel trained in research techniques to the Research Triangle as well as to other institutions of higher learning.

In conclusion this complicated matter can be reduced to a few simple choices. The essential new personnel requested must be provided or it will be necessary either to curtail the research functions of the University or enrollments, particularly at the graduate level, must be frozen. Piling on more work on an already overworked faculty is not an alternative. Sooner or later the distorted view that a professor enjoys a leisurely life must be exploded. The primary reason that the people in this State have a University in fact as well as in name is largely because of the determined and dedicated effort on the part of hundreds of faculty members. In what other way can you explain how a State which ranks almost at the bottom in per capita income, even among southern states, can say, in truth and with pride, that the University of North Carolina is among the top twenty or twenty-five institutions of higher learning in the United States?

The members of the General Assembly must make a choice. Will we continue to have a University or not? North Carolina cannot afford to make a wrong choice and I am confident the needed funds will be provided to enable the University to grow greater as it grows larger.

Letters On Many Different Topics

Editor:

There is an unknown soldier asleep in Arlington where thousands come to bare their heads. He is sacred, for he holds a promise, a promise made in blood drawn from the arteries of American boys who have paid the price that freedom costs.

But this is Chapel Hill and we have forgotten the unknown soldier; we have forgotten that promise. An article appears in the campus newspaper saying that we should do away with the draft law because it disrupts our lives and forces us to get married prematurely so that we are ineligible for the draft. We have become "sunshine soldiers and summer patriots." We are not willing to face up to our responsibilities.

The time has come for the need of a reawakening of the spirit that made America free. We must, if we are to remain free from the threat of a God of fear called Communism, restore our nation foremost in our hearts and in our minds and give it the confidence and cooperation which it is so much in need of. We must forget the idealism of the intellectuals and concern ourselves with a practical working system of democracy. Moreover, we must be ever mindful that freedom entails responsibility and that the preservation of freedom comes before personal convenience. Those who are not willing to sacrifice personal conveniences for freedom, deserve not to enjoy freedom for themselves.

Many of our fathers and brothers have died for our nation. We should at least be willing to give it two years of our alloted three score and ten.

BOB NOBLES

Editor:

After reading Mr. Young's first address to the student body, I cannot let it pass through neglect, leaving insults not washed away, honors crumpled and scruples in mourning.

The first of these insults, though perhaps unintended, was in referring to instructors as "serfs" (Orig. a slave; now usually a person bound to the soil and more or less subject to the will of the owner). As editor, you must express clearly and forcefully those convictions which you harbor in that concavity which rests on top of your shoulders. You use words to clarify, not to confuse; to instruct, not to obfuscate; to illucidate, not to obscure. Your choice of words in this case was most unfortunate and it merits a prompt, public apology.

Point No. 2 which disturbed me, dealt with your comments on sex and Mr. Edwards recent series on that topic. Had you been editor, that series would "have found its way into the waste basket." May I remind you that you are the editor - not the censor. The students may vote you editor, but they have not appointed you their moral overseer. I realize that an editor has certain responsibilities regarding libel suits and pornography when considering articles for publication, but these points are defined by law and not by opinion.

You are obligated to publish the news acurately and truthfully; this same obligation extends to the editorial page where two people in honest disagreement may see their conflicting arguments get the same public attention. You might not agree with an article, but this does not justify your act of prohibiting its publication. That sex is a delicate subject I grant you; that a thin line distinguishes decency from vulgarity I grant you; but never will I give you the privilege of telling me what is decent and what is vulgar. You cry out for student responsibility and then restrict their outlets for expressing this responsibility. Responsibility requires independent examination, evaluation, and expression - not the confining corset of conformity.

The great necessity is that we should act according to our thoughts and think according to our acts. I want men and women to be able to think sex, fully, completely, honestly and cleanly. Even if we can't act sexually to our complete satisfaction, let us at least think sexually, complete and clear.

Aycock Disagrees With Part Of Weaver's Ruling

(AP)—Chancellor William B. Aycock of the University of North Carolina Wednesday disagreed with parts of Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner Jim Weaver's findings growing out of a brawl among UNC and Wake Forest basketball players.

Aycock commended the conduct of UNC Coach Frank McGuire, who was taken to task by Weaver for what he called a lack of discipline on his bench. Weaver also censured Wake Forest coach Horace (Bones) McKinney for the same reason.

Weaver said his investigation showed the fight was started by Carolina's Lee Shaffer and Wake Forest's Charlie Forte. He ordered reprimands for Shaffer, Forte, UNC's Lou Brown and Wake Forest's Dave Budd, Winston Wiggins and Dickie Odom.

Aycock declared "We are not prepared to" reprimand Shaffer. He added, "on the basis of information before us, we do not feel that he is deserving of a reprimand."

ACC Swim Meet Starts Here Today

By JOHN JUSTICE

Can the Carolina swimmers make it three in a row? For the next three days, the Tar Heels will be trying to fend off the other seven Atlantic Coast Conference teams to keep the championship that has rested in Chapel Hill since 1957. The first event, the 1500 meters, will begin tonight at 7:30. On Friday and Saturday, the competition will start at 1 p.m. and 9 a.m., respectively.

The defending champion Tar Heels will be heavily favored to retain their crown and advance to national competition. Among the Tar Heels expected to reach the finals are Vinnie Simonton, Jeff Zwicker, Harvey Hamrick, Bob Hunter, Kit Mercer, Randy Dodson, Captain Brent Nash, Joe Kalkhurst, and Harry Bloom. Bloom, incidentally, has been defeated only once in his career. That loss was to Tony Schiffman, former Carolina captain who is now graduated. The loss itself was somewhat of a freak, as Bloom mistakenly stood up before the 440 swim was over.

South Carolina, being the only ACC team that the Tar Heels have not met and defeated, will bring eight men to the championships. The Gamecocks, with a 2-3 conference record, will be led by Rob Higgins who has broken the South Carolina breaststroke record for his school three times this season. In the 50 yard free style swim, Tom Butz, beaten only once in seven meets, will be expected to swim a strong race.

Maryland, Duke, and State, not necessarily in that order, are pre-meet favorites to throw the strongest team challenges to Carolina. State, weakened by the loss of All American Dick Fadgen, is still strong. A showdown is possible between Smith, Duke's undefeated sprinter and Bloom, if the two should happen to swim in the same event. Maryland offered the Tar Heels their closest ACC challenge in a 44-42 Tar Heel victory.

Only One Loss

Previous to the championships Carolina has had only one really tough meet, that being a 36-50 loss to a mighty team from the University of Florida. As a result of little pressure, Coach Pat Earey has been experimenting with his lineup in order to determine the full possibilities of his material. Coach Earey will release his lineups later today.

As an indication of the Tar Heel strength, in eleven matches this season, they piled up a total of 564 points as compared with their opponents' 374, an average margin of 17 points per meet. The most one-sided victory for the Heels was a 70-16 slaughter over the Demon Deacons from Wake Forest.

For an exhibition of top swimming and diving the Bowman-Gray Pool any time during the three day meet is the place. A small admision will be charged, in accordance with ACC regulations, to cover the cost of the 90 medals to be given away in 15 events.

Carolina And Wake Placed On Strict Probation; School Officials Study Rules, Recommendations

GREENSBORO — (AP) — The strict rules and broad recommendations set down for future basketball games for the University of North Carolina and Wake Forest College went under study Wednesday by officials of both institutions.

Separate study meetings were scheduled. William B. Aycock, North Carolina chancellor, and Wake Forest Athletic Director Bill Gibson disclaimed guilt of their schools.

Atlantic Coast Conference Commissioner James H. Weaver issued a five-page report Tuesday after investigating the brawl that broke out among players, students and spectators in the last 30 seconds of the game between the schools in Winston-Salem Jan. 12. North Carolina won the game, 75-66.

Weaver put both teams under "strict probation," the length of which was not specified. Any further fighting or "unsportsmanlike act in any future contest will endanger their eligibility," he ruled.

No More Games In Winston

He also ordered that the two teams shall not play each other at Winston-Salem in the 1959-60 season, and recommended that North Carolina consider playing its home game with Wake Forest next season at an off-campus site. The report included other recommendations to avert future disorders, as well as a ruling that student tickets will not be good at the Wake Forest home game with UNC next season.

Gibson said Wake Forest will abide by Weaver's ruling about next year's home game site and added: "In view of seating capacity and interest, it seems that Charlotte is the logical place to play the Tar Heels."

No Bench Discipline

Weaver cited both Wake Forest Coach Horace Bones McKinney and UNC Coach Frank McGuire for what he said was lack of bench discipline. He ordered reprimands for several players, particularly 6-6, 210-pound Dave Budd of Wake Forest, a junior from Woodbury, N. J. The commissionerd eclared that any future unsportsmanlike act or intervention in any way with an opponent" will cost Budd his eligibility.

Reprimanded were Charlie Forte, Winston Wiggins and Dickie Odom of Wake Forest, and Lee Shaffer and Lou Brown of North Carolina; and all other players who left the bench to join in the fighting. Weaver recommended that school officials study films of the action to determine what students had left the crowd to take part.

Easter Story Currently At Planetarium

The traditional story, "Easter, the Awakening," commemorating the Resurrection of the body of Christ, is currently showing at Morehead Planetarium each evening at 8:30 o'clock. It will be presented through April 6.

It is the Biblical story of Easter and the Ressurrection, complemented in the Planetarium by a pagent of lights and music. The entire program, given this year for the tenth season, as usual is of a spiritual nature, and is appropriate for all school grade and age levels.

Although the Biblical portion does not deviate from the Scriptures, the first part of the 1959 program will be akin to that given in 1956 because of the early date of Easter this year, March 29. The date can be as early as March 22 or as late as April 25.

The first part of the program this year will point up how and why the date wanders in the calendar and how tradition of many centuries has prevented the stabilization of Easter at some time when the full effec's of the material resurrection of things of nature can be seen.

It will also explain how the exact date of the Crucifixion and Resurrection can be determined, and suggest

Freshman Forum In Its Final Phase

By BEN TAYLOR
And BEA NEWMAN

The Freshman Forum, primed by originator, organizer, and advisor Jim Jordan, is entering the final phase of its program aimed at "introducing vital areas of creativity within the University via the ambitious freshman."

The forum, a program to put talents of freshmen to work upon their arrival on campus and to keep the impetus of Freshman Camp from losing its momentum, is currently under the direction of a freshman committee headed by Chuck Mixon of Summit, N. J.
